PREFACE TO THE FOURTH VOLUME.

THIS Volume has been considerably enlarged, and its size increased, perhaps to an inconvenient extent; but the object which the Editors have in view, is to furnish the Magistrates and the Bar with the decided Cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Editors, however, have endeavoured to render the Marginal Notes, and the Index, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the law may be ascertained without reading the Cases at length. The great utility of the work, in presenting the Cases in detail, is thereby preserved, and the necessity of reading the whole obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Note.

THE

PARISH OFFICER.

Poor.

I. Of the Origin and Progress of the Poor Laws, and the recent Alterations.

ACCORDING to the early writers upon the subject of the poor, and their relief, one of the first consequences of the establishment of the Christian religion in this kingdom, was a provision for the maintenance of the poor. It is stated that a fourth part of the tithes of every parish was devoted to this purpose under the direction of the minister, assisted by the churchwardens and other principal inhabitants; and as it was regarded as a matter of ecclesiastical concern, the whole was under the supervision and control of the bishop whenever his interference became necessary.

Relief of the poor anciently an ecclesiastical concern.

Blackstone upon this subject says, "The poor of England till the time of Henry VIII. subsisted entirely upon private benevolence and the charity of well disposed Christians. For though it appears by the Mirrour, that by the common law the poor were to be 'sustained by parsons, rectors of the church, and the parishioners, so that none of them die for default of sustenance;' and though by the statute 12 R. II. c. 7, and 19 Hen. VII. c. 12, the poor were directed to abide in the cities or towns wherein they were born, or such wherein they had dwelt for three years (which seem to be the first rudiments of parish settlements), yet till the statute 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25, I find no compulsory method chalked out for this purpose; but the poor seem to have been left to such relief as the humanity of their neighbours would afford them." (1 Bla. Com. 359.) Still, however, if the contributions were voluntary, the method was, in the course of time, so far reduced to a system, as to be sanctioned and upheld by acts of parliament, for by the statute last cited, the churchwardens or two others of every parish were to make collections for the poor on Sundays. By 5 & 6 Ed. VI. c. 2, the minister and churchwardens were annually to appoint two able persons or more to be gatherers and collectors of alms for the poor. By 5 Eliz. c. 3, the parishioners were to choose these collectors, and by 14 Eliz. c. 5, the appointment was to be made by the justices, who were also to appoint overseers. And the 18 Eliz. c. 3, is to the like effect. By 39 Eliz. c. 3, the churchwardens of every parish, and four substantial householders, were to be nominated yearly in Easter week by two justices, and called overseers of the poor. Next followed the important statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, out of which, Dr. Burn observes, more litigation, and a greater amount of revenue have arisen, with consequences more extensive and more serious in their aspect, than ever were identified with any other act of parliament or system of legislation whatever. By these and other acts, as observed by Sir John

Funds were collected from voluntary contributions;

But are now matter of temporal concern.

I. Of the Origin and Progress of the Poor Laws.

Nicholl, in Wilson v. M'Math, 3 Phillimore's Rep. 88, the maintenance of the poor has now become much more matter of temporal than of spiritual concern.

Poor Law Commission. Report of the commissioners.

The consequences of which Dr. Burn here speaks, became so serious, that after several ineffectual attempts to remedy them, a commission was issued in 1831 "to make diligent and full inquiry into the practical operation of the laws for the relief of the poor in England and Wales, and into the manner in which those laws were administered, and to report their opinion as to what beneficial alterations could be made." The result of this inquiry was laid before the Houses of Parliament in 1834, and the commissioners reported, "that the fund which the 43 of Eliz. directed to be employed in setting to work children and persons capable of labour, but using no daily trade, and in the necessary relief of the impotent, had been applied to purposes opposed to the letter, and still more to the spirit of the law, and destructive to the morals of the most numerous class, and to the welfare of all. That the great source of abuse was the out-door relief afforded to the able-bodied on their account, or on that of their families, given either in kind or in money." They also reported, that "great mal-administration existed in the workhouses." To remedy the evils, they proposed considerable alterations in the law; and the principal portion of their suggestions was embodied into the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, which received the royal assent on the 14th August, 1834 (a). The important alterations in the relief and management of the poor, which have been introduced by this statute, will be noticed in their proper place, and the whole statute given in the Appendix. This statute has been continued by 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, with few alterations. This last statute incorporates within it for certain purposes, the provisions of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 69, 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, and part of the Irish act. It is necessary to premise generally, that one great object of these statutes is to produce an uniform system of relief and management of the poor throughout England and Wales; and for this purpose a Central Board of Commissioners has been appointed.

II. Of the Persons concerned in Administration of Poor Laws.

1. Of Justices of the Peace, their Jurisdiction, Powers, and Duties relating to the Poor.

1. Justices.

Their authority before 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

Before the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, the justices of the peace had the general superintendence over all persons entrusted with the care and management of the poor, and they entirely directed the mode and amount of relief which should be given. This latter part of their duties has been almost, if not altogether, transferred to the Poor Law Commissioners (b). Still, however, by various legislative enactments, it will be found that the justices out of sessions have many important duties to perform. They are authorized to appoint overseers (c); to supply a vacancy caused by the death, removal, or insolvency of an overseer (d); to allow their accounts, and to cause books to be delivered to their successors (e); to compel the overseer to perform every order made under 17 Geo. II. c. 38 (f); and to pay the required rates to the guardians (g). Before the Poor Law Act, the overseers were required to take order for the relief and employment of the poor, "by and with the consent of two or more justices of the peace," 43 Eliz. c. 2; and by 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 11, the overseers were required to keep a register of all persons who were admitted to receive relief, and no other person was to be allowed "to receive collections at the charge of the parish but, by the authority of one justice of the peace." This authority was limited by 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 1, until oath had been made before such justice of the peace of some matter which he shall judge to be reasonable cause for having such relief; and that the person had applied for relief to the parishioners, or to two of the overseers, and was by them refused to be relieved; and until such justice hath summoned two of the overseers to show cause why such relief should not be given; and the person so summoned hath been heard or made default to appear before such justice.

9 G. 1, c. 7.

By the 36 Geo. III. c. 23, the enactments of which were extended and modified by the 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 3, and the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 2 and 5, magistrates were empowered to order relief to poor persons at their homes, notwithstanding a workhouse had been provided and contracts entered into for lodging, keeping, maintaining, and employing the poor. But this statute (36 Geo. III. c. 23), as well as the above-mentioned sections, by which it was so extended and modified, have been repealed by the Poor Law Amendment Act, and consequently the powers which the justices derived therefrom have terminated.

36 G. 3, c. 23. 55 G. 3, c. 137, s. 3. 59 G. 3, c. 12, s. 5, repealed by 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 53, s. 53.

Where there is a select vestry, justices may order relief after a refusal by the vestry; 59 Geo. III. c. 12.

The acts of 3 W. & M. c. 11, and 9 Geo. I. c. 7, are not expressly repealed by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. Those acts authorized justices to exercise a control over the overseers in the administration of relief to the poor. This control, however, can now be exercised only in parishes in which there is no board of guardians, no select vestry, or other similar body constituted under some local or general act.

Their authority under 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

By the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 52, it is enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any justice to order relief to any person from the poor-rates, except as therein-before provided; and though this clause refers to the poor in unions, and under select vestries, the limitation of this power of the justices is not confined to such cases only; and where they can exercise a control, no relief can be ordered for any person out of the workhouse, unless the rules of the commissioners direct it. Even when there is a board of guardians, one justice is authorized, in cases of sudden and urgent necessity, to order temporary relief in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money; and in cases of sudden and dangerous illness, to give a similar order for medical relief only; and in any union, two justices may order relief to be given to any adult person who, from old age or infirmity, shall be wholly unable to work, without requiring such persons to reside in the workhouse. (S. 27.) They are empowered also to enforce the repayment of loans made by the guardians or overseers, and for this purpose may order the master of the pauper to pay the wages to the guardians, &c. (S. 59.)

One justice may relieve in emergency.

The wages.

The proper relief to be given by the guardians under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, is to be determined by the justices, although the visitor alone must decide whether that relief shall be given in or out of the workhouse (a). In their petty sessions the justices may make an order upon the grandfather, father, &c., to maintain their grandchildren or children (b); but no such power is given to enforce the extended liability of those who marry women having children (c); other statutes authorize justices to seize the goods and rents of persons deserting their families (d), and on complaint of guardians, to punish such as neglect them (e). When Chelsea or Greenwich pensioners desert their families (f), the justices may attach their pensions, and may direct the owners of merchant ships to pay the wages of the seamen employed by them to the relief of their families (g). They may also order the wages of those who have been convicted of smuggling, and are serving in the king's ships, to be applied to the relief of their families (h). They Poor rate. Apprentices.

The poor-rate must be allowed by them (m), and its payment enforced by distress (n). Parish apprentices are still to be bound out under their order and direction; and they are further required (in addition to their consent and allowance) to ascertain if the rules of the commissioners for binding out apprentices have been complied with, and to certify the same at the foot of the contract or indenture (o). A select vestry receives its appointment from the justices (p), who also consents to and approves of the guardians (q), visitor (r), treasurer (s), and governor (t), and appoints the keeper of such workhouse to be such governor (u). Upon the neglect of any guardian to pay the money in his hands, the justices might enforce it (v), and they may punish them for enticing persons to remove without an order (w). Their assent to contracts for the maintenance of the poor is repealed (x).

Select vestry.

It is an essential part of the duty of justices to visit and examine the workhouse; and where the commissioners have issued any rules for the government thereof, to see that they have been obeyed (a); and if no rules have been directed, their original jurisdiction continues (b).

In the unions under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, the justices are guardians ex officio (c), and in all parishes they are exempt from serving the office of overseer. Their consent was required for the sale of old poor-houses (d), and they are empowered to deliver possession of parish houses to the overseer (e).

Their jurisdiction over the contractors for the maintenance of the poor is, by 50 Geo. III. c. 50, co-ordinate with that which they have over overseers (f).

They have power to punish persons injuring the parish books (g); persons buying or receiving into pawn, or absconding with goods provided for the maintenance and employment of the poor (h); orders of removal must still be made by them.

Their jurisdiction in boroughs.

By the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, jurisdiction is given to county justices in all boroughs which have not a separate court of quarter sessions under that act.

Where justices may act, though guardians.

Justice may act at any petty, special, or quarter sessions, in matters in which the board of which he is an ex officio member, is interested. 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 15.

who are to make rules and regulations for the management of the poor and administration of the laws for their relief, &c.

Commissioners may suspend or alter rules, &c.

These general rules must be submitted to one of the secretaries of state forty days before they come into operation, and the queen, by the advice of her privy council, may disallow them within that time, or afterwards, and upon such disallowance they are to cease to operate, s. 16. And all general rules in force at the sitting of parliament, shall, within one week after the commencement of each session, be laid before both houses, s. 17. Before the same can have any operation in any union or parish, a copy of them must be sent to the overseers, the guardians of the union or clerk, and the clerk of the justices of the petty sessions, who are required to give publicity to them, to allow inspection, and give copies of them, s. 18.

The commissioners are also empowered to make rules for present or future workhouses, and vary bye-laws already in force or to be made hereafter, and no addition to the schedule of 22 Geo. II. c. 38, is valid till confirmed by them.

General and particular rules.

A rule which affects more than one union is a general rule, (s. 42,) and is to be distinguished from the rules, &c. issued for the government of a particular union or parish; and when a general rule is in force, the commissioners cannot issue a particular rule unless approved by the secretary of state, 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 3. The validity of any rule may be determined by removing it into the Court of Queen's Bench by certiorari, s. 105 of 5 & 6 Will. 4.

Certiorari.

Rules not judicially noticed.

The courts of law will not take judicial notice of the rules made by the commissioners. Reg. v. Dolgelly, 8 A. & E. 561.

Particular order need not be laid before the secretary of state.

It is not essential to the validity of any but general orders of Poor Law Commissioners to the guardians of an union, that they should be submitted to the secretary of state. Reg. v. Braintree, 1 Q. B. 130.

What is not a general order.

If an order is directed to one union only, it is not a general order, though an order in the same terms is simultaneously directed to another union. Ib.

Commissioners may rescind an order.

Under the stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 15, the commissioners have power to rescind or alter any order made by them, and an order, inconsistent to some extent with a former one, will have the effect of altering that former order, and will be valid itself. Ib.

Union.

Before this statute, much benefit had been derived from the union of parishes for the relief of the poor and the use of a common workhouse; and the commissioners are empowered to effect this object, and even if necessary without the consent of the parishioners.

Workhouses.

The commissioners may, with the consent of the majority of guardians of any union, or a majority of the rate-payers and owners of property in any parish, order a workhouse to be built, purchased, or enlarged, s. 23. They may, without consent, direct any parish or union, having a workhouse or a building convertible into a workhouse, to be enlarged, but the principal sum to be raised in any parish must not exceed 50*l.*, nor one-tenth of the average annual amount of the rates for three years, s. 25.

Commissioners may attend boards and vestries, but not vote.

The commissioners are entitled to attend every parochial and other local board and vestry, and take part in the discussions, but not to vote. Besides the great power which is given to them by the second section, of requiring the attendance of persons, and the production of papers, they are expressly empowered to require, from any person holding a trust property belonging to the parish, or which may be applicable to the relief of the poor, an account of such property and its application; and by sect. 90, service of summons on the party's last place of abode is sufficient. Sect 98 imposes a penalty on the disobedience of their orders, or contempt of the board.

Account of property in trust for the parish.

They cannot appoint collectors of rates, nor any paid officers. (Reg. v. Hunt, post, 37; Reg. v. P. L. C. (Cambridge Union), post, 38.)

The chancellor will interfere if the commissioners exceed their authority.

With regard to the authority of the Court of Chancery over these commissioners, Lord Cottenham said, "I apprehend that the limits within which this court interferes with the acts of a body of public functionaries, constituted like the Poor Law Commissioners, are perfectly clear and unambiguous. So long as those functionaries strictly confine themselves within the exercise of those duties which are confided to them by law, the court will not interfere. The court will not interfere to see whether any alteration or regulation which they may direct is good or bad: but if they are departing from that power which the law has vested in them; if they are assuming to themselves a power over property which the law does not give them, this court considers them as no longer acting under the authority of their commission, it treats them, whether they be a corporation or individuals, merely as persons dealing with property without legal authority." (Frewer Lewis, 4 M. & C. 249.

III. Assistant Commissioners.

3. Assistant Commissioners.

The principal commissioners are empowered by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 7 (a), to appoint nine assistant commissioners, (and no more, 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 2), and to delegate their authority to them, and with the exception of making a general rule, the assistants may exercise all the power of the principal commissioners. The duties are specified in ss. 12, 13, 14, 20, and 21.

For special purposes.

The commissioners may appoint assistants for special inquiries under particular circumstances. 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 3.

IV. Guardians.

4. Guardians.

All the power and authority given by any statute to overseers (with the exception of making and collecting rates), was transferred by Gilbert's Act (b), the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, to guardians in every parish or united parishes, which adopted the provisions of that act; and the same powers are given to the guardians appointed under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76.

1. Appointment of Guardians under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76.

Guardians in a single parish.

The commissioners are empowered to direct that the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor of any single parish shall be governed by a board of guardians, sect. 39; and where a union of parishes has been formed, a board of guardians shall be chosen, the workhouse shall be governed, and the relief of the poor administered by them, sect. 38.

In unions.

Election, and number of.

The guardians are to be elected by the rate-payers and owners of property. The commissioners are to determine the whole number, as well as the number for each parish; each parish, however, to have a guardian.

Qualification.

The persons must be qualified by being rated at a sum to be fixed by the commissioners, in respect of property, the annual rental of which does not exceed 40*l*.

Duration of office.

They are to continue till 25th of March in each year, or appointment of successors, and may be re-elected. The election to be held within fourteen days of the 25th of March.

Justices ex officio members.

Justices of peace residing in the parish, and acting for the county, are ex officio members of the board. None of the guardians are paid officers.

Right of voting for guardians.

In the election of guardians, the owner, whose name has been duly entered in the book, is entitled to the same number of votes as persons are entitled to by the 58 Geo. III. c. 69 (a), and for the purpose of ascertaining that number, the assessment of the property in the rate shall be deemed the annual value. When the owner is also the occupier, he may vote in each character; and in case of property belonging to a corporation or joint stock company, no member can vote as owner but the registered officer. Rate-payers rated under 200*l.* shall have a single vote; at 200*l.* and under 400*l.* two votes; and at 400*l.* or more, three votes; such person must have been rated to the poor for the whole year preceding his voting, and paid the parochial rates assessed on him for one whole year, except such as were due within six months preceding his voting. The owner may vote by proxy, but whether he votes in person or by proxy, he must give a previous statement of his property, &c. Persons not complying with the directions of the commissioners considered to have no vote.

Scale of voting for owners and occupiers.

Rated for a year, and paid.

Voting by proxy.

The validity of the election of a guardian cannot be tried on an information in the nature of a quo warranto. (Re Aston Union, 6 A. & E. 784; and see Reg. v. Ramsden, 3 A. & E. 784). And where a majority of the guardians de facto did not concur in an appointment, the court will not enforce it by mandamus. (Reg. v. Dolgelly, 8 A. & E. 561. See Reg. v. Vestry of Holborn, 10 A. & E. 730.) But the right of an elective guardian may be determined by the commissioners, and their order may be removed into the court in the term next after the issuing of such order. 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 8.

Quo warranto will not lie for a guardian, but the commissioners may try the title of an elective guardian.

A person put in nomination as guardian may tender to the officer conducting the election his refusal, in writing, to serve the office; and his election then shall not be further proceeded with. s. 9.

A person may decline the office of guardian.

If no person be elected for a parish at the annual election, the guardian of that parish for the previous year may continue to act. s. 10.

If no guardian be elected, his predecessor may act.

Mandamus to the overseers of Todmorden to pay their contribution to the union. The return admitted a proper order of the commissioners to constitute a union, and that guardians had been elected by all the townships, except Langfield; and contended, that the omission and refusal of that township to elect any guardian prevented a competent board of guardians from being formed. The order of the commissioners required that there should be in all eighteen guardians for six townships, four from some and two from others, amongst which was Langfield; there had been two annual elections of guardians in 1837 and 1838, but on no occasion had Langfield elected any guardian. The Attorney-General contended that it was not a condition precedent that there should be one guardian elected by each parish, the only condition was that three should constitute a board. Lord Denman.—The 38th section of the statute is very obscurely expressed; but I think that the meaning of the legislature is that contended for by the Attorney-General. The direction in the proviso, that one or more guardians shall be elected, must mean that one or more shall be made eligible by the order of the commissioners. I say this rather as a matter of opinion, because by the subsequent enactment the defect, if it be one, is cured. Supposing the first election altogether bad, still the statute provides that, "in case the full number of guardians shall not be fully elected at such subsequent election of guardians for the time being, the other or remaining members of the said board shall continue to act until the completion of the said board" "as if the numbers of such board were complete." There have been elections for several years, and the defect is therefore cured, unless we are to say "subsequent elections" mean elections after a first complete election; but there is nothing to authorize such an interpretation. Littledale, J.—I also am of opinion that in this case there was a "subsequent election" within the meaning of the act, and a deficiency in the election is by it expressly provided for. Patteson, J.—I think the pro-

To constitute a board there should be an order directing each parish to elect a guardian, but it is not essential to the existence of the board that every parish should elect a guardian.

(a) By that statute (see post) an inhabitant assessed at an annual rent or profit not amounting to 50*l.* is entitled to one vote; amounting to 50*l.* and upwards, to one vote for every 25*l.*, but none entitled to more than six votes.

Guardians.

viso, as to the number of guardians to be elected for each parish, coming after the regulations of the powers of the commissioners, must be referred to them; but at all events this is a case of a subsequent election. Coleridge, J.—The commissioners are to "determine the number of guardians to be elected in each union:" that must mean the number that shall be directed to be elected. I cannot resist the inference that the proviso that one or more shall be elected for each parish must have the construction that the commissioners shall direct one or more to be elected for each parish. I agree too with the rest of the court, that, if that be not so, this is the case of a subsequent election, to which the objection does not apply. Reg. v. Todmorden, 1 Q. B. 185; 4 P. & D. 553.

Churchwarden may be a guardian.

According to the opinion of the Attorney-General, Sir J. Campbell, taken by the commissioners, a churchwarden or overseer may be elected guardian for his parish.

Borough justices are not ex officio guardians.

A corporation justice is not a guardian ex officio. (See Evans v. Stevens, 4 T. R. 224, 459). The words of the act, "justices acting for the division," apply to Lincolnshire, &c. and not to towns, &c. of exclusive jurisdiction.

The commissioners may accept a resignation and order a new election.

The commissioners may accept the resignation of a guardian for any reasonable cause, and on an omission to elect, or on the death, resignation, or disqualification of a guardian, they may order a new election. 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 11.

Board to act as if full.

As long as there are three guardians the board, though not full, may act. s. 12.

Defects in guardian's title not to vitiate proceedings.

No defect in the qualification or election of a guardian acting at a board, shall vitiate the proceedings, if a majority of the persons assembled shall be entitled to act. s. 13.

Paid officers ineligible.

No assistant-overseer or paid officer engaged in the relief of the poor, nor any person receiving a salary from the poor rates, is capable of serving as a guardian, nor any person who has been a paid officer and discharged within five years previous. s. 14.

Sheriff cannot be a guardian.

The sheriff of a county cannot act as a guardian ex officio in such county during his office, as, by 1 Mary, s. 2, c. 8, he is incompetent to act as a justice for the county.

2. The Powers and Duties of such Guardians.

The relief of the poor.

The workhouses.

Employment of the poor under their control.

Reservation of power of commissioners, justices, and overseers.

To the guardians belong exclusively the ordering and directing of all relief to the poor of the several parishes and places comprised in the union, and the building, hiring, and providing of any workhouse, poorhouse, or other premises, for the reception and maintenance of paupers therein, and the altering, improving, or enlarging the same, or any other existing workhouse or poorhouse within the said union, and the regulation and management thereof, and the hiring or purchasing of land for such workhouse or workhouses, or for the employment of paupers therein, subject to the directions of the poor law commissioners, and excepting such powers as in the act are given to justices of the peace and overseers of the poor.

They are the proper parties to apply for an order of bastardy. Reg. v. Willshere, 12 A. & E. 793.

To act at a board. Three to concur.

No guardian can act except at a meeting of the board, and no act there is valid unless three guardians are present and concur.

Meetings.

The meeting of the guardians is regulated by the rules of the commissioners, but in general they meet weekly, and extraordinary meetings may be held on giving certain notices prescribed by the rules, or without notice in cases of emergency.

Relief.

Work.

At the board they must direct the nature and amount of relief to be given, subject however to the rules relating to relief, and hear the application of paupers, who have previously applied to the relieving officer. They must determine the kind of work to be done by paupers in or out of the workhouse, and give directions to the overseers for raising the money payable by their parish.

The duty of giving relief and employment, and making inquiries relating to the poor, is entrusted to the "relieving officer," who is to be appointed and paid by the board. s. 46. 4. Guardians.

Expenses. Relieving officer.

The relief of lunatic paupers is also intrusted to the guardians. 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 6. See Appendix. Lunatics.

3. Appointment of Guardians under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, commonly called Gilbert's Act.

The principle of Gilbert's Act has been much followed in the recent enactments; but the option of appointing guardians and directing the union of parishes, is transferred from the rate-payers to the commissioners.

By the 3rd sect. of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, a single parish might avail itself of the provisions of the act, and appoint guardians, upon complying with certain regulations prescribed in that section and some later statutes (c), and also adopting the forms in the schedule. The same power was given to two or more parishes to unite, and the guardians were directed to execute an agreement for that purpose, according to a form prescribed.

Notice of meetings.

Sect. 6 requires "that the notice for every public meeting directed by this act shall be given in the church or chapel of every such parish, township, or place, on three successive Sundays before the time of such meeting, immediately after divine service, or on such of the said Sundays as service shall be performed there, and also fixed in writing on such church or chapel door, or if no church or chapel, at some public place within any such parish, township, or place, where notices of parish business have been usually given, fifteen days at least before the day to be appointed for such meeting, in the form or to the effect mentioned in the said schedule, No. VI." (d)

Qualification and election.

The qualification of voters was declared to be an assessment to the poor-rate, after the rate of 5*l.* at least, and payment of the rates; if there were not ten qualified persons in the parish, then every person assessed and paying rates might vote; but all elections under this act or any local act must now be governed by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, ss. 38, 41.

4. Powers and Duties of such Guardians.

Guardians are to be overseers.

By sect. 7 of Gilbert's Act, "every such guardian shall attend the monthly meetings thereby directed to be holden, and execute the several powers and authorities given to guardians by that act, and shall have and is hereby invested with all the powers and authorities given to overseers

(c) As the practical utility of these statutes is much diminished, the substance of them only is given here. Whenever two-third parts in number and value, according to the poor rate, of the owners or occupiers of land, &c., within any parish, qualified as therein mentioned, should, at a meeting holden pursuant to the act, signify their desire to adopt its provisions, and should recommend to the justices three persons qualified for guardians of the poor, and three persons qualified to be governors of the poorhouse, and fix the salaries to be paid to such guardian and governor, and should procure the consent of two justices, such parish was entitled to all the benefits and powers of the act. The two-third parts were by 33 Geo. III. c. 35, s. 1, to be two-third parts in number and value of such qualified persons only, actually attending such public meeting; and by sect. 2, if such meeting signified their opinion to the justices, that on account of the extent and population of such parish, more than one guardian of the poor was necessary, and shall desire that two may be appointed guardians, the justices might appoint two guardians. This power was further enlarged by 41 Geo. III. c. 9, s. 1, which enacted, if it shall be the opinion of two-thirds in number and value of the owners or occupiers of land, &c., that one guardian is insufficient for carrying into due execution the provisions of the said act, and the same shall be certified by two of the persons present at such meeting to two justices, together with the names of four persons qualified for the office of guardian, the justices might appoint so many of them to be guardians of the poor as they in their discretion thought necessary for duly carrying the act into execution. The first part of the 7th sect. of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, made similar provisions for the appointment of a guardian for each parish in a union.

(d) See 7 W. 4 & 1 V. c. 45.

4. Guardians. of the poor by any other act or acts of parliament, and shall to all intents and purposes (a) (except with regard to making and collecting rates) be an overseer of the poor for the parish or township for which he shall be so appointed guardian, and shall be liable to such forfeitures and penalties for neglect of duty as overseers of the poor are made liable to by this or any other act of parliament, and all notices or applications directed by this or any other act of parliament to be given or made to the overseers of the poor with respect to the care and management or removal of the poor, where any such guardian shall be appointed under the authority of this act; but in case any orders of removal or notices shall happen by mistake to be given or sent to the churchwarden or overseer, the same shall be as valid and effectual as if given to the guardian; and such churchwarden or overseer shall, and is hereby required forthwith to deliver the same to the guardian, or shall forfeit forty shillings for his neglect."

Orders and notices, &c. to be delivered to guardians.

Overseers not to interfere.

"Where such guardian of the poor shall be appointed as aforesaid, neither the churchwardens nor overseers of the poor shall interfere or intermeddle in the care and management of the poor, but shall continue to have and be invested with the same powers of making and collecting poor's rates as they have at present, and shall be subject to the like penalties for neglect or misbehaviour in making and collecting such rates as they were at the time of passing this act."

Penalty for absence from monthly meetings.

By sect. 26, "If the guardian for any parish, township, or place, which shall adopt the said provision as aforesaid, shall not attend each monthly meeting hereby directed to be holden, or send some substantial inhabitant of such parish, township, or place, to attend and answer the payments for him, in case he shall be prevented by sickness or other unavoidable accident from attending in person, the guardian for every such parish, township, and place, making such default, shall, for every such neglect, forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds, nor less than forty shillings."

Officers, how long to continue.

By sect. 14, "The offices of guardian, governor, visitor, or treasurer, to which any person shall be appointed under the authority of this act, shall determine in Easter week next after the respective persons shall be appointed thereto, on the day upon which the public meeting for such parish, township, or place, shall be held there, when the persons who, according to this act, are qualified and have a right to recommend another person to the justices, to be appointed to such office, shall either agree with the persons who held the same to continue in such office, or shall proceed to recommend others, in the manner hereinbefore directed, as if such person had died."

Vacancies, how to be filled up.

Sect. 13. "That when and as often as any vacancy shall happen in any of the offices aforesaid by death, resignation, or removal, meetings shall be called, and recommendations offered to the justices in manner aforesaid; and they shall proceed, so soon as conveniently may be, in the manner before directed, to appoint a fit and proper successor to the person so dying, declining to act, or so removed as aforesaid."

Corporate body.

The visitor and guardian are, for certain purposes, incorporated. s. 21.

5. Overseers of the Poor.

5. Overseers.

The more ancient acts.

One of the earliest enactments requiring any public officer to collect moneys for the use of the poor was the 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25. By 5 & 6 Ed. VI. c. 2, the minister and churchwardens were annually to appoint two able persons or more to be gatherers and collectors of alms for the poor. By 5 Eliz. c. 3, the parishioners were to choose these collectors, and by 14 Eliz. c. 5, the appointment was to be made by the justices, who were also to appoint overseers. And the 18 Eliz. c. 3, is to the like effect. By 39 Eliz. c. 3, the churchwardens of every parish, and four substantial householders, were to be nominated yearly in Easter week by two justices, and called overseers of the poor. Next followed the important statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2, which enacts, s. 1, "That the churchwardens of every parish and four, three, or two substantial householders there, as shall be thought meet, having respect to the proportion and greatness of the same parish and parishes, to be nominated yearly in Easter week, or (a) within one month after Easter, (now by 54 Geo. III. c. 91, on 25th March, or within fourteen days after) under the hand and seal of two or more justices of the peace in the same county, whereof one to be of the quorum, dwelling in or near the same parish or division where the same parish doth lie, shall be called overseers of the poor of the same parish; and they, or the greater part of them, shall take order, from time to time, by and with the consent of two or more such justices of peace as is aforesaid, for setting to work the children of all such whose parents shall not, by the said churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, be thought able to keep and maintain their children; and also for setting to work all such persons, married or unmarried, having no means to maintain them, and use no ordinary or daily trade of life to get their living by."

(a) The overseers and not the guardians are the proper persons to bind out apprentices. R. v. Lutterworth, post, 36.

5. Overseers.

43 Eliz. c. 2.

Who shall be overseers.

Duties.

In some parishes, however, there is no churchwarden, and by 17 Geo. II. c. 18, s. 15, the overseers are empowered to execute all the authorities given to the churchwardens and overseers.

Where no churchwarden.

1. The Place for which Overseers are to be appointed.

1st. As to place for which overseers are to be appointed.

The statute merely related in terms to parishes only, but the system was extended to townships and vills parochial and extra-parochial, by the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 21, which recites that "whereas the inhabitants of the counties of Lancashire, Cheshire, Derbyshire, Yorkshire, Northumberland, the Bishopric of Durham, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and many other counties in England and Wales, by reason of the largeness of the parishes within the same, have not nor cannot reap the benefit of the act of parliament made in the three-and-fortieth year of the reign of the late Queen Elizabeth for relief of the poor;" and enacts, "That all and every the poor, needy, impotent, and lame person or persons within every township or village within the several counties aforesaid, shall, from and after the passing of this act, be maintained, kept, provided for and set on work, within the several and respective townships and villages wherein he, she, or they shall inhabit, or wherein he, she, or they was or were last lawfully settled, according to the intent and meaning of this act; and that there shall be yearly chosen and appointed, according to the rules and directions in the said act of the three-and-fortieth year of Queen Elizabeth mentioned, two or more overseers of the poor within every of the said townships or villages, who shall from time to time do, perform, and execute all and every the acts, powers, and authorities for the necessary relief of the poor within said township or village, and shall lose, forfeit, and suffer all such pains and penalties for non-performance thereof, as is limited, mentioned, and appointed in and by the said in part recited act."

What is a Parish, Township, or Vill.

There may be parish by reputation.

"A parish is that circuit of ground which is committed to the charge of one parson or vicar, or other minister having cure of souls therein." (1 Bla. Com. 3.) This, though not a very popular definition, may suffice for the present purpose. However, if a district were a parish by reputation at the passing of the 43 Eliz., and has so continued ever since, it is sufficient under this act, although it may not be a parish in the precise sense of the above definition, but the assumption of that character at any period subsequent to that time, unless it be by express act of parliament, will not constitute it a parish within the meaning of the poor laws. (See the cases last cited, and Dean v. Linton, 2 Salk. 487.) A special verdict found that the parish of H. was an ancient rectory and parish, that the village of S. is an ancient village and parcel of the rectory of H., that from the time of Henry the Sixth, there had been a church in the village of S. which during all the said time had been used and reputed as a parish; that the inhabitants of S. had all parochial rates and churchwardens. The Court were of opinion that S. was a parish, for being found that it was a church in the time of Henry the Sixth, and that it then was, and ever since had been, reputed a parish, and not in the negative that it was not a parish before, it may be intended to be a parish before; and although not so intended, yet being found that it was a church then and churchwardens there, it is a parish within the statute, though only a reputative parish, and no churchwardens of H. are churchwardens of S. (Hinton v. Pawle, Cro. Car. 92. 2 Bl. Rep. 246.) In Nicholas v. Walker, Cro. Car. 394, 4 Mod. 185, the Court came to a similar conclusion as to the village of T. parcel of the parish of H. The verdict found that there was not any legal act to sever the vill from the parish, that the tithes were paid to the parson of H. who used to find a curate for T., and there is no parson at T., yet, as before and at the time of 43 Eliz., the vill was reputed to be a parish, and had its own constables, churchwardens, "et supravisores pauperum," and distinct rates, never contributing to the parish church, that was held to be a parish. But the immemorial exercise of some of the rights of a parish, as making rates and having a chapel of its own, will not make a distinct parish without all other parochial rites. (Rudd v. Foster, 4 Mod. 157; 1 Bott, 45.)

Overseers cannot be appointed for a Precinct.

In Rex v. Severn & Arnold, Say. 278; 1 Bott, 6, two persons were appointed overseers of the poor within the precincts of the Tower, otherwise called the parish of St. Peter ad vincula. Denison J., delivered the resolution of the Court. This is not a good appointment under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, which requires them to be appointed within a parish; neither is it good within the 13 and 14 Car. II. c. 12, which says, that there shall be yearly appointed two or more overseers within every township and village respectively. Precinct is a word of ambiguous signification; it is not a boundary of any parish or vill; it may be more than a parish, or may be less. If it were a parish or vill by reputation, it might have been good (Cro. Car. 92, 394); but the Court cannot intend this precinct to be a vill, and the words of the statute ought to be pursued. Neither will the words otherwise called the parish of St. Peter ad vincula aid the want of this in the appointment; for in all constructions of alias dict. the words that go before the alias dict. must be presumed to be true; as in an indictment, the addition of the party not coming till after the alias dict. will vitiate the indictment, for what precedes the alias dict. is the true and proper appellation. (3 Bulst. 296.) If in this case the alias dict. had come after the parish of St. Peter, it would have done. And the appointment was quashed.

Parish or vill by reputation may be good.

But the township or vill may be extra-parochial.

Rex v. Rufford, 1 Stra. 512; 1 Bott, 47. In the vill of Rufford there are divers substantial freeholders able to contribute to the maintenance of the poor, and there are no churchwardens or overseers to make a rate, and the poor are unprovided for. The vill is part of no parish, but time out of mind has been extra-parochial, without church, chapel, or parochial rights, and there never have been any overseers of the poor. By the Court: "The powers given by the 43 Eliz., to be executed in parishes, were, by the 13 and 14 Car. II. c. 12, extended to all townships and villages, whether parochial or extra-parochial, and consequently overseers might be appointed in this case."

Island of Fowlness.

The island of Fowlness in the county of Essex, which is no parish, but the lands are situate in divers parishes, is made a parish for this purpose by 18 sect. of 43 Eliz. c. 2.

Whatever may be the distinction generally between a town and a village, the words vill, village, and township, are considered as denoting the same topographical division for the purposes of the poor laws; and a place so called may be such either in strictness or by reputation; but it must have been a vill in one or other of these modes, at least as early as the 13 and 14 Car. II. which, as the 43 Eliz. c. 2, has been decided to embrace only parishes in esse when that statute was passed, must be taken to embrace only such vills as had an existence in the year 1662, the date of the 13 and 14 Car. II. (Vide Jacob's Law Dictionary, tit. "Parish;" 1 Bla. Com. 114.)

Rex v. Denham, Burr. 37; Bott, 48, S. C. Lord Hardwicke, C. J., observes, "It is certainly very hard to define exactly what is a township or a village; it must be left to the judgment of the Court upon the circumstances of the case stated." Lord Coke says, "Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata, et collata ex pluribus vicinis." (1 Inst. 115 b.) But in this case, as there were only two houses, that cannot amount to the notion of a town or village, and that if it had been formerly a town or village, if the houses were in fact decayed and gone, it would cease to be a town or village. Lee, J., observed, "that the notion of a village, according to the ancient law, is a tithing consisting of ten families; that, according to the modern notion, it is a place that has a constable; that it ought to have at least the reputation of a town or vill; and that a vill must at least mean more than two houses."

5. Overseers. What is a Parish, Township, or Vill.

What is or is not a township or vill.

Rex v. Standard Hill, 4 Maule & Sel. 378. Overseers were appointed for the township of Standard Hill, which was a piece of ground within the precincts of the castle of Nottingham. It was sold in 1807, and several dwelling-houses built upon it. The castle and precincts were extra-parochial, and "no part of it ever reputed to be a township or vill, or assessed to the poor, or had a constable," except some who were appointed in 1808, without the steward's knowledge, and who in 1814 gave orders that the practice should be discontinued, which was done. On a motion to quash the appointment, it was urged that as there were seventeen houses, and some in progress, and 140 inhabitants, the Court should draw the conclusion that this was a vill. Lord Ellenborough: "The immediate consequence of holding this to be a vill, for which overseers ought to be appointed, would be that overseers must be appointed for all the inns of court, and every collegiate or ecclesiastical establishment, which would work a great alteration in the laws relating to this subject. This consideration makes me unwilling to pass the ancient limits, unless warranted by positive affidavit, and therefore, until I find it stated that this is a vill, I shall defer coming to such a conclusion which may lead to so extensive a consequence." Order quashed.

Houses recently built within the precincts of a castle not a vill.

Wherever there is a constable, there is a township; there may be a constable for a larger district than a township, but not for a smaller. (Rex v. Horton, per Buller, J.; 1 Term Rep. 376.) "It is true one parish may contain three vills; the parish of A. may contain the vills of A. B. and C. that is, when there are district constables in every one of them; but if the constable of A. run through the whole, then is the whole but one vill in law; or where there is a tithingman, there may be a vill; but if the constable run through the tithing, then it is all one vill." Per Hale, C. J., in a case where it was held that a fine of lands in A. would pass lands in B., a tithingman being appointed for B., but the constable exercising authority in B. (Waldron v. Roscarrior, 1 Mod. 78.)

Where there is a constable, it is a vill.

Rex v. Grafton (Burr. S. C. 101; 2 Str. 1071; 1 Bott, 49) the manor of Grafton is an extra-parochial place, once consisting of a capital mansion-house and three keepers' lodges in the park, now disparked, and converted into five dwelling-houses and farms, occupied by five several tenants, but never having had any overseers of the poor or other officers, till the overseer now appointed for the purpose of the present removal, was adjudged by the justices to be a township or village within the statute into which a removal might be made. A rule to quash the order was granted, and afterwards made absolute without defence.

Five dwelling-houses and farm held not a township or vill.

Rex v. Showler, 3 Burr. 1391; 1 Bl. Rep. 419. Showler and Atter were appointed overseers of the township or village of Haugh. The sessions adjudge Haugh to be a village or township, and confirm the appointment, and state specially that Haugh consists of a capital messuage, in which Showler and his family dwells; and of two small ancient cottages; and of one other small cottage lately built (all the cottages are let, with the said messuage and the farm thereunto belonging, to Showler); and of another tenement, part of the said messuage; and all of them inhabited by families; and that one of the cottages is inhabited by Atter, who is a day-labourer, and his family; and another of the said cottages is inhabited by another day-labourer; and another of the said cottages is inhabited by a shepherd; and the tenement, part of the capital messuage, is inhabited by a poor widow and her children; all which occupiers of the said cottages, and of the said tenement, part of the capital messuage, are under-tenants to Showler. The Court were unanimously of opinion that the appointment ought to be discharged. Lord Mansfield, C. J., observed, "that by this method a place might be made into a village, which in fact was not so; and the inhabitants of it might, by this contrivance, withdraw themselves from contributing towards the support of the poor of their parish."

The site of a cathedral and its area, do not constitute a vill, though there be many houses, &c., upon it.

In Rex v. Justices of Peterborough, (Cald. 238; 1 Bott, 59;) a rule for a mandamus to appoint overseers for the minster in Peterborough, it appeared that it was an extra-parochial place, and always had a number of houses belonging to it; it contained upwards of sixty acres, upon which were twenty-five dwelling-houses at least, besides poor houses; that these houses were inhabited, except in the instance of the bishop and three of the prebendal houses, altogether by laymen or strangers to the cathedral, and mostly persons of fortune; many poor persons had acquired settlements therein; that they had a distinct place for burials, marriages, and divine worship; that the poor had been supported by the Chapter out of some fund belonging to them; "that it was not a township or vill, or ever reputed so to be;" that there never was any constable or other civil officer appointed for the said precinct, or any overseer of the poor, or churchwarden; nor had the inhabitants ever contributed to the relief of the poor within the precinct, or been called upon so to do. Lord Mansfield, "This space comprehends no more than the site of the cathedral and the area round it, and consequently was, in former times, within the sanctuary, and, as such, sacred and inviolable as the church itself. In modern times, to be sure, there is no such thing as sanctuary, but these places have throughout all ages, without interruption, enjoyed those immunities, as Westminster Abbey now does, and other places of the like nature. The ancient inns of court, though not exactly upon this principle, have also, at all times, been privileged; and a similar exemption was not questioned in Rex v. Gardner, Cowp. 79, with respect to that part of the court and garden ground of Catherine Hall in the university of Cambridge, which lay within the old and extra-parochial part of that foundation. Would you say that Christchurch, in Oxford, is a vill? (See 8 Mod. 40.) I am not satisfied that this place is a vill, and the party applying do not even call it so." Buller, J., "As the party applying for a mandamus does not state, as a fact, that this place ever had a civil officer, or was ever reputed a vill (which, where the facts of the case do not, upon some clear principle of law, show the place to be of that denomination, the court has holden to be indispensably necessary for the purpose of founding an application for a mandamus), this case falls within the case cited." Rule discharged.

But vill by reputation is sufficient.

A vill by reputation is sufficient; and if so returned by the sessions, it is decisive (Rex v. Eyford, 1 Bott, 60); but without such finding, an acknowledgment by the tenant of the lands of his liability to maintain the poor by granting a certificate, and his returns as constable are not sufficient. Ib.

Vill and hamlet are synonymous terms.

An order, appointing overseers of the "hamlet" of B., in the parish of C., is good; for it shall be intended that the place was a vill, unless it be stated to be otherwise; for "vill" and "hamlet" are, in common acceptation, used as synonymous terms. (Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550.)

If the sessions find as a fact that the place is a vill, it is conclusive.

Rex v. Ronton Abbey, 2 T. R. 207. This was a case sent up by the sessions; there were only three houses, and no constable or tithing-man, nor, it seems, any church or chapel, and this passed as a vill; but there had been orders of removal to it executed, and some evidence was given of overseers and other officers having formerly been appointed; upon which it was expressly found by the sessions to be a vill by reputation, which precluded all question before the Court above whether it were so or not; so that this case proves not that three houses alone will make a vill, but only that if a place be found by the sessions, upon the evidence there produced, to be a vill by reputation, it may be taken to be such, though there be but three houses remaining, and no other characterising circumstances.

5. Overseers. What is a Parish, Township, or Vill.

An extra-parochial district may become a township by act of parliament, but in that case it cannot be treated for the purposes of settlement, &c., as having been of that denomination before the date of its creation under the act, up to which period it must be regarded as if it had been wholly uninhabited. Rex v. Oakmere, 5 B. & A. 775; 1 D. & R. 427.

Extra-parochial places become a township.

Construction of Stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12.

Construction of 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12.

In Dolting v. Stokelane (Fol. 98; Fort. 219; 1 Bott, 46), it was held by the whole Court, that by reason of the words "and many other counties in England and Wales," the act is general, and extends to other counties than those named in the act, otherwise it would not extend to one county in Wales. And in Clifton v. Churcham, 1 Nol. P. L. 10, Lee, C. J., said, "that so it was determined, upon great debate and consideration, in Dolting v. Stokelane, which case hath been ever since adhered to." (Andr. 314).

This statute extends to all counties. (a)

The largeness of the parishes is expressly put forward as the ground on which, in particular parishes, the benefit of the statute of Elizabeth cannot be enjoyed. A parish cannot be legally divided for the relief of the poor, unless it cannot otherwise have the full benefit of that act. Bastock v. Ridgway, 6 B. & C. 496; 9 D. & R. 585, S. C.

Dividing parishes to secure the benefit of 43 Eliz.

The question may be properly tried in a feigned issue before a jury. Lane v. Cobham, 7 East, 1; Rex v. Newell, 4 T. R. 266. Where the question is raised before the sessions, they must find the fact of the inability, and not state the circumstances for the Court to form a judgment. R. v. Watson, 7 East, 214.

Question, how tried.

Speaking of the words in the statute of Charles, Buller, J., says, "The phrase, that a parish cannot reap the benefit of that statute, does not mean that it is absolutely impossible for them to maintain their own poor as a parish, for that would not be the case, even if the parish were 100 miles in circumference; but that it is inconvenient for them so to do." Rex v. Leigh, 3 T. R. 748. But the inconvenience must be real, and a mere trifling advantage which it is supposed may arise from a subdivision, will not warrant that proceeding. But where districts have maintained their poor respectively from distinct funds, even from a period subsequent to the 13 & 14 Car. II., either on account of the increase of population, or other changes having made it positively and really inconvenient to continue the union, the court of King's Bench, upon a knowledge of the facts, has directed a separation; there it is taken as decided that the parish is incapable of reaping the benefit of the 43 Eliz., and the townships or districts become entitled to separate overseers; thus Extent of the benefit.

In Rex v. Newell 4 T. R. 266, the hamlet was situated without the borough, had a separate constable and churchwarden, but no other church but the one common to the parish at large. The people of the hamlet attended the parish meetings, but not vice versâ. From 1648 the hamlet had separate overseers, with separate accounts. The parish had one churchwarden and three overseers. Since 1709 certificates have been granted by the hamlet, but not to the parish. Orders of removal have been made to the hamlet. Each made a separate rate, but the money when raised was blended together in one joint fund, though applied in certain proportions, and the sessions did not find it as a fact that the parish could not reap the benefit of the 43 Eliz.; it was held that the districts were not entitled to maintain their own poor separately and distinctly, though, since the year 1648, they have constantly had, in the whole, more than four overseers, and though the hamlet part has immemorially had a constable of its own. Lord Kenyon in the course of his judgment said,

More than four overseers not decisive of the inability.

(a) The contrary had been previously held. Skellington v. Norton, 2 Lev. 142.

5. Overseers.

"The only circumstance that can bear the semblance of an argument against this decision is, that these districts have had more than four overseers; but that appeared to be the case in several other parishes, on an inquiry directed to be made by Lord Mansfield, in Rex v. Loxdale, 1 Burr. 445. So that though it may be a very material ingredient in these cases, it is not a decisive one."

Proof of this inability is furnished generally by the fact of separate overseers, separate rates, and separate maintenance of the poor. R. v. Justices of Middlesex, Sayer 148; 1 Bott, 51.

Inability of a parish to have the benefit of 43 Eliz the foundation of the right to a division.

Peart v. Westgarth, 3 Burr. 1610. The parish of Stanhope from 43 Eliz. to 9 Geo. I., (1723), had one joint appointment of overseers, and during all that time the poor of the parish were jointly relieved and maintained by entire and general rates upon the whole parish. During that time, there were four churchwardens and four overseers, which four overseers were nominated one out of each of the four quarters in the parish, called F. quarter, N. quarter, P. quarter, and S. quarter; and in each quarter there was one churchwarden and one of the overseers who collected the poor's rates in the quarter wherein they respectively resided; but the money was levied under one entire assessment upon the whole parish, and carried to one general fund, and applied to the joint relief of all the poor of the parish. The parish is twenty miles in length, and eight miles in breadth. The P. quarter is one distinct constablery, the F. quarter one, and the S. quarter one, and the N. quarter consists of three constableries, but these three constableries compose one quarter only. In the 9 Geo. I., at the quarter sessions it was ordered "that the several townships and constableries of S., F., N., E., and W., should separately maintain their own poor." From that time there have been separate appointments of overseers for each of the four quarters, and each has maintained its own poor separately, excepting that, about twelve years ago, two townships, called B. and F., within N. quarter, separated themselves from the rest of that quarter, and have ever since had separate overseers and maintained their own poor separately. Orders of removal had from time to time been made since 1729 to 1761, for the removal of poor persons from one of the quarters to another, and appeals made by one quarter against another.—Lord Mansfield said he had no doubt upon the first argument. The policy of 13 & 14 Car. II. was mistaken; it went upon a wrong principle. The divisions ought rather to be enlarged than diminished (a). As to the question itself, consider, 1st, what was done; 2dly, upon what foundation. It ought to appear "that there was an inability in the parish to have the benefit of the act of 43 Eliz." Now here no such inability appears, but quite the contrary for a great number of years (b), so that there is no foundation for the division. The acquiescence under it was upon a false notion, "that the sessions had such a power," which they had not. And there is no inconvenience in setting right this wrong usage, which has obtained for forty years. In the case of Kentish Town, all the judges held "that the foundation of such a division of a parish must be an inability of having the benefit of 43 Eliz." Here the foundation is wanting. Wilmot, J., also thought the larger the circle the better: therefore it would be more proper to enlarge than to lessen the divisions (a). The sessions do not seem to have had any sort of power to make such an order, therefore their order is a mere nullity. It was not made upon an appeal; but upon a motion made on behalf of some of the quarters and opposed by another. The subsequent usage for forty years cannot vary the right. For we cannot presume "that omnia ritè acta sunt;" because we see that it was founded Long practice even with an order of sessions insufficient.

(a) "I know that different opinions have at different times prevailed as to the better policy of providing for the poor in larger or smaller districts; but I had rather guide myself by the words of the act of parliament, and by the fact, than by any fluctuating policy that sometimes leans one way and sometimes another." Lord Ellenborough. R. v. Watson, 7 East, 214.

(b) See also on same point, R. v. Watson, supra, n.

upon this order of sessions, and it does not appear that the parish is so large that it cannot have the benefit of 43 Eliz. Therefore they ought to appoint running overseers over the whole parish.

Construction of Stat.

The same principle was upheld in Rex v. Uttoxeter, Doug. 246, where there had been separate overseers from 1643 to 1703, but the townships had jointly relieved their poor. The separate appointments had been confirmed by the sessions.

Nor is a parish entitled to a separation, merely because its different districts lie each in different jurisdictions, or even counties. See Lane v. Cobham, infra.

Situate in two counties

Though it appears to be the policy of the law to discourage the division of parishes into separate districts, and even to promote their reunion, yet where the district is extra-parochial, or being part of a parish, it has maintained its own poor on a distinct account, "time out of mind," or from a more modern date, if change of circumstances required the separation, it has a clear right to a distinct set of overseers.

Agreement by districts at the passing 13 & 14 Car. II to separate, held proof that the parish could not reap full benefit of 43 Eliz.

Rex v. Walsall, 2 B. & A. 157. The two districts of which a parish consisted, had, from the 43 Eliz. down to the 13 & 14 Car. II., maintained their poor jointly, and, at the time of the passing of the latter act, agreed to separate in the maintenance of their poor, and that separate overseers should be appointed, upon condition that the rateable property in the parish, whether situated in the one or the other district, should be rated where the occupiers resided. In consequence of that agreement, they had ever since uniformly maintained their own poor separately, and had had separate overseers, constables, &c. The Court held, that this clearly showed that the parish, at the time of the agreement, could not reap the full benefit of the statute of Eliz., and that therefore the separation of the two districts was valid, and that an appointment of overseers for the whole parish was now bad. It was held also, that the agreement consisted of two distinct parts, and that the invalidity of the latter part, as to rating property not situated within the district rated, did not affect the question on the former part. Bayley, J., observed, that Rex v. Palmer, 8 East, 416, only decided that where a parish has, with the consent of all its districts, re-united itself, that re-union is valid in law; but that an agreement to alter a part would not affect the other. The Court ought not, unless on the plainest grounds, to disturb a practice which had prevailed so long.

Secus, an agreement having no reference to the benefit of the statute of Eliz.

In Bastock v. Ridgway, 6 B. & Cres. 494; 9 D. & R. 585, S. C., Lord Tenterden remarked, "that in R. v. Walsall the separation took place very soon after 13 & 14 Car. II. Now there could be no legal separation between 43 Eliz. and 13 & 14 Car. II. But when we find that (as soon as an act of parliament makes a separation legal, in a case where the parish cannot have the benefit of the statute of Eliz.) such a separation actually takes place, that is abundant evidence that at and even before that time the parish could not have the benefit of the statute. But this inference by no means arises where (as in this case) the agreement was made in 1753." His lordship also observed, "that he did not mean to say, because the largeness of the parish is expressly mentioned in the statute, that it is the only ground by which the benefit of the statute of Eliz. is not to be had, for that benefit might be lost by the superabundant population in a district not exceedingly large." Bayley, J. "It does not appear by that agreement that it was in consequence of the largeness of the parish that they could not receive the benefit of that statute. In 1690 the poor rate was an entire fund, and the agreement shows that the reason for separation was private disputes, and the principal one about some donations." The Court held that the townships were not legally divided.

Largeness of parish not the only criterion

Districts separated at the time of 13 & 14 Car. II. may re unite, though in two counties.

Lane v. Cobham, 7 East, 1; and R. v. Palmer, 8 East, 416. The parish of Wokingham is situated in two counties, part called the liberty of Wilts, and part the liberty of Berks. It appeared that at the time of the 13 & 14 Car. II. and down to the year 1773, separate overseers had been appointed for each liberty, and separate rates. That in 1773, the liberties agreed to unite, and had been united ever since. Upon this evidence, the jury found that the parish could have the benefit of the statute of Eliz. And on a mandamus to review this decision, it was held that the districts might legally re-unite, and that in the exercise of their discretion they would not interfere with the management of the poor which had certainly prevailed for thirty-two years.

Of re-union of districts.

The re-union by agreement of districts or townships to the collective system of 43 Eliz. is equally valid, whether the townships at the date of the statute of Car. II., maintained their poor jointly, continued so united until more than a century afterwards, and then divided; or whether from the date of the statute Car. II. until their agreement to re-unite, they have been constantly separate. The Court, therefore, will not disturb by appointment of separate overseers, a re-union thus effected, after a duration of thirty years. Nor probably, though much more recent. On the other hand, though there should be affidavits on behalf of one or more townships, that the parish might now, by re-union, reap the benefit of 43 Eliz., it does not seem likely that the Court would grant a mandamus against the wish of any other of the townships, to appoint overseers for the whole parish collectively. Rex v. Leigh, 3 T. R. 746; 1 Bott, 58.

Separate appointments of overseers, with separate funds, evidence of such inability.

Rex v. Sir Watts Horton, 1 T. R. 374. Where one or more, but not all, of eight several and distinct townships composing a parish, have obtained a separate appointment by mandamus, or have been accustomed to maintain their poor from separate funds, under circumstances authorising such separation, and the remaining townships have maintained their poor jointly, every one of them has a right to a separate appointment also, and the Court of King's Bench will grant a mandamus for the purpose; for the circumstances prove the inability of the parish to maintain its poor as a parish; that is, collectively out of one fund.

A parish is not within 8 of Charles, because parts of it are in different counties.

R. v. Salop, 3 B. & Ad. 910. The parish of Hales Owen consisted of three townships in the county of Worcester, and certain townships and districts in the county of Salop. The townships in Worcester had always had their own overseers and relieved their own poor, but four overseers had been appointed for the division of the parish lying in Salop, and rates collected and applied for the relief of the poor of that division indiscriminately. On application by a township in the latter division for a mandamus to the justices of Salop to appoint overseers for that township, pursuant to 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 21, on the ground that the parish had not enjoyed and could not enjoy the benefit of the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, facts being also stated to show the expediency of a separate appointment: held, that the division of the parish in Worcestershire and Salop could not be considered as distinct parishes. Lord Tenterden, C. J.—Looking at the parish of Hales Owen as a whole, it is clear there never, within memory, has been one set of overseers for the parish. There has been one set for the townships in Worcestershire, and one for the part in Shropshire. Then the parties applying for the rule relied upon Rex v. Sir Watts Horton, which has been followed up in principle by several other cases. On the other hand, a case in Sir T. Raymond, p. 476, was referred to in the course of the argument, where a parish was situate partly in London and partly in Middlesex, each part having distinct officers, making distinct rates, and passing distinct accounts before the justices of the respective counties, and the question being as to the liability to maintain children who were left chargeable to one of the divisions, it was held that each division must be looked upon as a several parish. We have looked into that case, and we think it is no authority to show that in every case in which a parish lies in two counties, each part may be considered as a separate parish. The case happened after the statute of Charles, and probably was no more than an application of the provisions of that statute to each part as a distinct township; at all events there is nothing in it calculated to raise any reasonable doubt on the application of Rex v. Horton to the case now before the Court. Rule absolute (a).

(a) Before this decision, some paupers had been removed to the parish of Hales Owen, and afterwards they were removed to the township of Oldham; but the Court

Reg. v. Justices of Worcestershire, 3 P. & D. 465 ; 12 A. & E. 28, S. P. On a rule for a mandamus to appoint overseers for the township of Bentley Pauncefoot, it appeared that the parish of Tardebigg contained four townships, one called Tutnall, in the county of Warwick, the other three, viz. Redditch, Webheath, and Bentley Pauncefoot, in the county of Worcester. Two churchwardens act for the whole parish, and the parish church stands partly in Warwickshire, partly in Worcestershire. Tutnall had from time immemorial been considered a separate township from the other parts of the parish, and had its own overseers, collector of taxes, surveyors of highways, and constables. It maintained its own poor, had its own workhouse, and orders of removal have been made to the Worcestershire part of the parish. Up to 1832 the other three hamlets had each an overseer, who collected the rates in his own district, but the accounts were afterwards entered in one book, and passed jointly, and the poor of the three hamlets were maintained jointly at a workhouse in Webheath. Since 1834, four overseers had been appointed, viz. two for Redditch, and one for each of the other hamlets. A constable has always been appointed for Bentley Pauncefoot. For all other purposes, except contributing jointly to the relief of the poor and the repairs of the church, the hamlet of Bentley Pauncefoot is perfectly distinct from and independent of the other parts of the parish. The affidavits in answer stated that Tutnall and the parish of Tardebigg, in the county of Worcester, joined part of the union of Bromsgrove, and were respectively assessed at a certain quota, ascertained to be the annual average expense of the poor in each place. They denied that any overseer had been appointed for Bentley Pauncefoot since 1830, and stated that the overseers for Redditch and Webheath had done the overseers' duty in Bentley since that year. Lord Denman, C. J.—The cases of Rex v. Horton (p. 18), and Rex v. Salop (p. 18), are so expressly in point with the present, that we are bound by their authority. The only ground on which we should feel ourselves at liberty to disregard their authority is, that the two decisions in Cro. Car. (b), in which a contrary conclusion is supposed to have been arrived at, were not then brought before the Court. But these two cases are not in fact contradictory to the later ones, for they turn upon the fact of the jury having found the districts in question to have been reputed parishes at the time of the passing the 43 Eliz. But here it is unquestioned that Tutnall is only a township of the parish of Tardebigg. It is then contended that the policy of the legislature has changed since the 13 & 14 Car. II., and that now it is inexpedient to establish small districts for the relief and maintenance of the poor. But the Court has long emancipated itself from the notion that it is to be guided in the construction of a statute by any view of supposed policy. We are bound to expound the law as we find it, and any change to be made in it must proceed from the legislature. No doubt, under the statute of Charles, it may be sometimes a matter of discretion for the Court to enforce its provision by mandamus or not. But as two cases have been decided putting a clear construction upon that statute, under circumstances similar to the present, we must act upon them. Littledale, J.—This case comes so near Rex v. Horton, and Rex v. Salop, that I am unable to distinguish it. It is true that the cases in Cro. Car. establish that the districts maintaining their own poor at the time of passing the 43 Eliz. were to be considered as reputed parishes ; but Rudd v. Martin, 2 Salk. 501, shows, that to be a reputed parish within that statute, it must have had a parochial chapel at the time that Act passed. Patteson, J.—I am unable to distinguish this case from Rex v. Salop. With regard to the New Poor Law Act, there is no doubt that it is utterly at variance with the 13 & 14 Car. II. as to the relief of the poor in small districts ; but it does not in any way alter the character of an overseer as to several of the functions he has to discharge. Williams, J.—No case has been oftener cited and acted on in parish law than Rex v. Horton, and it binds us now.

Pensham not distinct from S. Andrews, Pershore.

Price v. Quarrell, 12 A. & E. 784. Two neighbouring divisions of the parish of St. Andrew's, Pershore, used the same parish church, situate in one of the divisions; but each had its own overseers, collectors of poor and county rates, surveyors of highways, and constable. Poor rates were made for the whole district, consisting of the two divisions, but were raised by each division separately; and one division (the hamlet of Pensham) always contributed in the proportion of two-thirds, and the other (St. Andrew's) of one-third. The two divisions had, as far back as could be traced, relieved their poor jointly and indiscriminately; and they had for forty years had a joint workhouse. The residue of the parish consisted of five chapelries, each having its own chapel and parish officers, and maintaining its own poor. The Court held, that the five chapelries were independent districts for the maintenance of the poor; but that Pensham was not within s. 21 of stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, the use of a joint workhouse and the raising a joint fund (though in different proportions) for the relief of the poor being decisive on this point.

59 Geo 3, c 95, "for confirming ancient separation of towns corporate from parishes, in regard to the maintenance of the poor."

The principle of these determinations accords with the 59 Geo. III. c. 95, respecting towns corporate or franchises, which, after reciting that various towns corporate or franchises situate within one or more parish or parishes, and not co-extensive with the said parish or parishes, have heretofore and for a long time past been separately assessed from the parish or parishes in which they are situate, for the relief of the poor, and overseers of the poor for such town or franchise have been appointed distinct and apart from the overseers of the poor appointed for such parish or parishes, and whereas such separate and distinct assessments and appointments of overseers have, in many cases, been made without sufficient authority, and yet, by reason of the long continuance of the said separation, the towns corporate or franchise cannot now be re-united to the parish or parishes in which they are situate, without manifest inconvenience and hardship. enacts, "That from and after the passing of this Act, all such separation of towns corporate or franchise, from the parish or parishes in which they are situate, together with the separate and distinct appointment of overseers of the poor, shall be deemed and taken to be lawful to all intents and purposes whatsoever, in the same manner as if the said separation or division had taken place under the authority of an Act made in the forty-third year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, intituled 'An Act for the relief of the Poor:' provided always nevertheless, that nothing in this Act contained shall render legal or confirm any separation of a town corporate or franchise from the parish or parishes in which such town corporate or franchise is situate, in respect to the maintenance of the poor, or the appointment of overseers of the poor, in any case where it shall appear that such separation has commenced within sixty years before the passing of this Act."

Separation of towns from parishes, and distinct appointment of overseers lawful.

43 Eliz c. 2. But with respect to the poor, such separation must not have commenced within sixty years.

2. The number of Overseers.

2. What Number of Overseers may be Appointed.

Must be two and not exceed four, unless by special enactment.

By the express words of the statute there must be four, three, or two overseers, exclusive of the churchwardens. There must not be more than four, nor fewer than two, except where the parish is subdivided into townships, in which case each township may have four, three, or two overseers appointed. In some cases, particularly in larger towns, a greater latitude is given by some special statute; but no usage for a greater or smaller number than the 43 Eliz. prescribes will avail against the express terms of its enactment: and if more than four be appointed, the instrument is void as to every one of the persons appointed. Rex v. Loxdale, 1 Bur. 446; Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550; Rex v. Clifton, 2 East, 168; Rex v. All Saints, Derby, 13 East, 143; Rex v. Forrest, 3 T. R. 38; Rex v. Wymondham, 6 T. R. 552.

Rex v. Pinney, 2 B. & C. 322; 3 D. & R. 578. By 47 Geo. III. s. 2, c. 111,

s. 92, it was enacted that the then overseers of Woolwich should continue to be overseers for the year 1807, and until two other overseers should be appointed, in the manner and at the time by law directed, to succeed them; and within one month of Easter, in every year, two persons, being substantial householders, should be appointed, in the manner by law directed, to be overseers. By an order, on the 25th March, 1823, four persons therein named were appointed overseers of Woolwich; and the sessions confirmed that order. A rule was obtained for quashing the order. Abbot, C. J.—"It is a general rule of construction, that affirmative words in a later statute do not repeal a former, unless there be something wholly inconsistent in the provisions of the two statutes. Lord C. B. Comyns, in his Digest, tit. 'Parliament,' R. 25, lays it down that such affirmative words do not take away a former statute, unless they in sense contain a negative. Now the statute of Elizabeth directs that the overseers for parishes shall be four, three, or two substantial householders. The local act merely directs that the then overseers should continue in office to the end of the year, and until two others should be appointed, and that two others should be annually appointed. These words do not, in sense, contain a negative, nor is there any inconsistency between a provision authorising the appointment of four, three, or two overseers, and another directing the appointment of two. The latter statute requires absolutely that two shall be appointed, but it does not say that more than two shall not be appointed. That being so, I am of opinion that the provision of the statute of Elizabeth, as to the appointment of overseers, is not repealed by the local act, and that the order of justices was right." Rule discharged (a).

rected that the then overseers of the parish of W. should continue to be overseers for the remainder of the current year, and until two others should be appointed, and that two overseers should be appointed annually: Held, that this act did not repeal the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, and that an appointment of four overseers for the parish of W. was valid.

3. Who may be Appointed, and herein of Exemptions.

3. Who to be Appointed, &c.

By the statute "substantial householders there" are to be the overseers of the said parish, together with the churchwardens.

Churchwardens, it has been seen, were in effect overseers of the poor long before the 43 Eliz. c. 2. s. 1. And as the statute declares them to be such, and requires others to be added to them by the justices, they need no formal appointment, but are overseers ipso facto, by becoming churchwardens. And the ordinary is bound to swear in churchwardens elect, immediately upon their applying to be sworn in, notwithstanding an usage not to swear in until the first visitation after Easter. Rex v. Middlesex, 5 Nev. & Man, 494.

A churchwarden is ipso facto overseer.

To be sworn in immediately.

Rex v. Marsh, 6 N. & M. 668; 5 A. & E. 468. Where a parish is divided into four tithings, separately maintaining their own poor, and having separate overseers, and by custom the inhabitants of each tithing, at a general parish meeting, separately choose a churchwarden, and each of the churchwardens, though sworn in the usual form to the faithful execution of the office within his parish, acts only for the particular tithing for which he is chosen, except that all the four churchwardens unite in signing the annual presentment to the archdeacon, of the state of the repairs of the church, and other presentable matters;—each of such persons is a churchwarden for the whole parish. Therefore, service of a notice upon the churchwarden acting for one of such tithings, is sufficient compliance under 41 Geo. III. c. 109, s. 3, requiring service upon the churchwardens of the parish.

Churchwarden chosen for a tithing is the churchwarden of the parish.

Service on him is sufficient.

Semble, that a churchwarden continues in office until his successor is sworn in.

In office until successor sworn.

Rex v. The Justices of Yorkshire, N. R., 2 N. & P. 103; 6 A. & E. 863. On a rule to quash an order of bastardy, it appeared that the application for the order was made in behalf of the inhabitants of the township of Egton. The notice was signed by the two overseers for the township. Egton is a perpetual curacy within the parish of Lyth, but it has its own church officers, called churchwardens, and who perform for the township all the duties usually executed by a churchwarden of a parish not divided into townships. Rates for the repair of the church are levied within the township, and marriages, baptisms, and funerals have always been performed in the church of Egton, but a small annual sum is contributed towards the repair of the parish church. Besides the two overseers of the township who had signed the notice, there was also an assistant-overseer; when the application was made to the sessions, it was objected that the notice was insufficient, as it was not signed by a majority of the churchwardens and overseers. Lord Denman.—Not only has a majority of the overseers signed this notice, but all of them have signed it. The statute of Elizabeth applied to parishes only. Then came the statute of Charles, which authorised the division of a parish where it was too large for the convenient management of the poor; but in that statute no reference is made either to churchwardens or chapelwardens. There are some subsequent statutes, from which it might be inferred that the legislature thought that churchwardens had been appointed for all places where there are overseers. But even supposing, from the language of subsequent acts, the legislature may have thought that a power had been given to the churchwardens of townships, that is quite insufficient to invest chapelwardens with the powers and authority of overseers. It would be a difficult matter in many cases to determine what the chapelry is of which the chapelwardens are to be overseers. It is infinitely more convenient to determine that the statute of Car. II. does not contemplate churchwardens of any township. This decision is not inconsistent with the judgment of Bayley, J. in The King v. Nantwich, 16 East, 228. In that case it was argued that it was necessary for the churchwardens of the parish at large to join. Bayley, J. there says, "the act probably meant, that if there were persons within a township exercising a similar function to that of churchwarden, they should join. But it seems incongruous to hold that it meant that the churchwardens of a parish were to concur in granting a township certificate, for then the churchwardens who are resident in township A., might have to certify that the pauper was settled in township B." That is not a decision that persons within a township, exercising a similar function to that of churchwardens, ought to join; but that it is not necessary for the churchwardens of the parish at large. However, it is quite clear that the observation, that the churchwardens of the township might be required to join, was unnecessary for the determination of the case. Another objection is, that the assistant-overseer has not signed the notice; but that is answered by saying we ought to see that there is an assistant-overseer, and to know what his powers are, before we can determine that his signature is necessary. Littledale, J.—Egton is not a parish, and the statute of Elizabeth speaks only of the churchwardens and overseers of a parish. The statute of Charles directs how overseers of any township are to be appointed, but it does not mention either church or chapel wardens. It is true that some acts of parliament speak of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, township, or place, but those words may be construed to mean, the churchwardens and overseers of that parish, where there is a parish, and where there is a place maintaining its own poor, not a parish, the overseers of the poor of that place. We cannot say that it was necessary for the assistant-overseer to have signed the notice, as we do not know there was one, or what his powers are. Patteson, J.—This question arises on the construction of the 73d sect. of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76; and in deciding it I wish to be distinctly understood as not expressing any opinion whether it is necessary that all the overseers should sign the notice. It is not requisite for the determination of this case to decide that point, because I am of opinion, that in the present case all the overseers have signed the notice. A similar point has been lately before the Court upon the construction of the 81st section. Rex v. Derbyshire, 1 N. & P. 703. The question in this case is, who are the overseers of the township? It is said that the chapelwardens are. They cannot be if the chapelry is not co-extensive with the township. The King v. Nantwich, determined that the churchwardens of the parish at large cannot be the overseers of the township, nor do I think that the chapelwardens can be so considered, because the chapelry may not be co-extensive with the township. It is admitted that there is no decision to that effect, but it is said that there are statutes which treat the churchwardens of townships as overseers. The 9 Geo. I. c. 8, speaks of the churchwardens and overseers of parishes, townships, and places, which may mean churchwardens and overseers of parishes, but overseers only of townships. Whatever may be the construction of the 9 Geo. I. c. 8, s. 8, or of the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, as to the mode in which the notices required by those acts should be signed, they do not make the churchwardens of a township overseers of that township; there are therefore no overseers of this particular township except those who have signed the notice and the assistant-overseer, and it was incumbent on the appellants to show that he had authority to sign it. Rule discharged.

A chapelwarden of a township is not an overseer, so as to require his signature to a notice.

3. Who to be appointed, &c.

Partners in trade frequenting their premises daily for the purpose of business, but not residing there, are householders liable to serve as overseers of the parish in which the premises lie.

Rex v. Poynder, 2 D. & R. 258; 1 B. & C. 178; 1 D. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 247. This was an indictment for refusing to take the office of overseer of St. Ann, Blackfriars, and the question was, whether the defendant was a householder within the 43 Eliz. c. 2. The defendants, W. Hopson and Poynder the younger, were lime-merchants and partners, and owners of a dwelling-house and premises in St. Ann, but neither of them slept there, Poynder dwelling at Clapham, and Hopson in Tottenham. One Medlicott, who managed the business for them, resided in the house. The rent, rates, and taxes were paid by the firm. Each of the partners frequented the premises daily, for the purpose of business, and the defendant had once voted at an election of a lecturer, which was a privilege belonging to resident householders. A verdict was found for the crown, and on a motion for a new trial Rex v. Hall was cited, 1 B. & C. 123; 2 D. & R. 241; in which the Court decided that one of several partners resorting daily for the purpose of business to a house rented by all, but which was inhabited by their servant, was a householder in the place where the house was situate, so as to qualify him to be a commissioner of a court of requests. The object of the statute in that case was to confer a privilege. It was also urged, that as the defendant was a householder in Clapham, he might be called upon to serve, in two places at the same time, an office requiring personal attendance. Abbot, C. J.—When a similar question was under our consideration last term, we were not insensible that a distinction might be attempted to be made between those cases where the legislature intended to confer a benefit, and others where it intended to impose a burden. We were of opinion that there was no foundation for such a distinction, and that the same rule of construction ought to prevail in all cases. We have no doubt in this case that the defendant is a householder within the meaning of the statute of Eliz. It was in evidence that he had enjoyed one of the privileges of a resident householder, for he had voted for a lecturer, which was a privilege belonging to resident householders only. Bayley, J., observed, that a large number of houses in the metropolis are merely occupied by clerks or servants, but that is no reason why their owners should not be called upon to discharge those duties which fall upon other householders.—Holroyd, J., and Best, J., concurred (a).

Meaning of term "inhabitant."

Donne v. Martyn, 8 B. & C. 62; 2 Man. & R. 98, S. C. On the interpretation of a local act, whereby the aldermen were authorised to appoint "some substantial inhabitant" collector of rates, Bayley, J., observed: "The word inhabitant may mean either occupier or resiant. The latter is the proper sense when it is used to denote persons, or when a personal

(a) In R. v. Adlard, 4 B. & C. 772; 7 D. & R. 340, S. C., it was held that a person is not liable to perform the office of constable unless he is resiant. And see the able judgment of the chief justice as to distinctions between inhabitants for purposes of pecuniary charge and for offices requiring personal service. Alluding to the poor law, the learned judge observed, "I have not noticed the poor laws, because the occupiers are mentioned in the statute as well as inhabitants."

3. Who to be appointed, &c.

(not a pecuniary) charge is to be imposed. R. v. Adlard (a). Here a personal service is imposed. The duties are to be performed by personal attendance within the ward. It is more convenient that the duties should be executed by 'a resiant.'" The facts were similar to those in R. v. Poynder, but the Court held that he was not bound to perform this office. See also R. v. Masheter, 6 A. & E. 153.

The Court will quash the appointment as to those who are not substantial householders.

Rex v. Weobly, 2 Str. 1261; 1 Bott, 5. The defendants were appointed overseers of Weobly by the style of principal inhabitants. It was moved to quash this appointment, because they were not described to be substantial householders. Et per Curiam.—The justices must certainly pursue the power given them, which is to appoint substantial householders, which is a much more limited description than inhabitants; for a man may be an inhabitant, and a principal inhabitant, and not be a householder; so this appointment is void.

Who may be appointed.

The word "substantial" must be taken generally in its proper sense, but it is so far relative, that where there were no other persons to serve, two day-labourers with some land annexed to their cottages, of whom one only was a proprietor, and the other a farmer's servant, were held to be competent overseers, although the appointment of such men might be improper "in a place where there are a great many opulent farmers." (Rex v. Stubbs, 2 T. R. 406). And the phrase "substantial householders" has no reference to sex; although men are more proper to be appointed than women, where there are a sufficient number of men qualified; yet a woman may be appointed where the necessity of the case requires it. (Id. ibid).

Women.

Occasional residents.

The appointment of persons resident only for a part of the year, is discouraged by the courts; but such persons seem eligible in cases of necessity. (Rex v. Moor, Carth. 161; 1 Bott, 13). And the justices are to determine where this necessity exists, being "invested with a discretionary power of approbation." (Rex v. Stubbs, 2 T. R. 395; Rex v. Gayer, 1 Burr. 245).

Distinction between exemption and incapacity.

Exemptions.—The following classes are exempt from serving this office, and the justices therefore are not at liberty to make their nomination from among any of these persons. There is a distinction between the claim of a privilege to be exempted and an absolute incapacity. By the statute the registrar of births, &c. is exempted from serving this office. His appointment, however, is not void but good until he has appealed against it. Rex v. Justices of Cheshire, 30th Jan. 1840. Q. B.

Peers.

Members of Parliament.

Justices of peace.

Justices of the peace, as having the control of overseers' accounts.

In Rex v. Gayer, 1 Burr. 245, the sessions, upon appeal, quashed the appointment of Gayer, because he was a justice, &c.; and King's Bench supported the judgment, upon the ground that the sessions had the same latitude of discretion as the two justices had. And in Rex v. Pateman, 2 T. R. 779, Lord Kenyon said, "in Rex v. Gayer, it seems to have been agreed that the office of justice of the peace and overseer are incompatible, because the accounts of the latter were subject to the control of the former. The court, in Rex v. Gayer, gave no judicial opinion upon the point." (a).

Aldermen of London, being justices.

Aldermen of London, who are justices of the peace, for the same reason. Rex v. Abdy, Cro. Car. 585; 1 Bott, 8.

Practising barristers and attorneys, officers of courts.

Practising barristers and attorneys, Gerard's case, 2 Sir W. Bl. 1123, and officers of the superior courts, are privileged, though there be a special custom for every parishioner to serve, according to the situation of his

(a) "It seems to have been considered both by the bar and the bench, that if the two offices were incompatible, the consequence would be that the party would be discharged from that of overseer, as having been disqualified or exempted, and not from that of justice of peace as being vacated by the appointment of overseer." Parke, J., in giving the judgment of court in Rex v. Patteson, 4 B. & Ad. 23, 1 Nev. & M. 612, S. house. Rex v. Prouse, Cro. Car. 389; et vide 8 T. R. 379, note (a). An officer of the Court of Exchequer, (Cawthorne v. Campbell, 1 Anst. 205, 216; 8 T. R. 376). 3. Who to be appointed, &c.

The clerk of the treasury of the Court of Common Pleas is bound to a personal attendance on his duties, and, therefore, is not compellable to serve the office. (Ex parte Jeffries, 6 Bing. 195; 3 M. & P. 450, S. C.) And these officers may be relieved by writ of privilege, (id. ibid.; 8 T. R. 377; 1 Chan. Rep. 196).

Physicians.

The president, commons, and fellows of the college of physicians, (whose exemption, however, extends no further than the city of London,) but apparently no other physicians. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 40. (See 1 Bott, 13.)

Clergymen.

Clergymen, though without cure of souls, by reason of their order. (Anon., Gibs. Codex, 215; 6 Mod. 140). (b).

Officers of the Court of Bankruptcy.

The accountant in Bankruptcy, the registrar and deputy-registrars, the official assignee, the messenger and usher of the Court of Bankruptcy, are exempt, and disqualified from serving any parochial office. 5 & 6 V. c. 122, s. 63.

Registrars.

Registrars of births, &c. 5 & 6 Will. IV.

Dissenting ministers.

Dissenting ministers, taking the oaths and subscribing the declaration and articles pointed out by 1 W. & M. c. 18, although they be also engaged in a trade. 1 W. & M. c. 18, s. 11; 52 Geo. III. c. 155, s. 9. (Kenward v. Knowles, Willes, 463; 1 Gibs. Codex, 215.)

Churchwardens.

Churchwardens during their continuance in office. Rex v. All Saints, Derby, 13 East, 143.

Freemen of the surgeons in London.

Freemen of the company and corporation of surgeons, established by 18 Geo. II. c. 15, who have been examined and approved pursuant to the rules of the company, so long as they exercise surgery and no longer. 18 Geo. II. c. 15, s. 10.

Apothecaries.

Apothecaries using their art in, or within seven miles of London, being free of the apothecaries' company, and having been examined and approved, and all persons using the said art in any other part of England, Wales, or Berwick-upon-Tweed, having served an apprenticeship of seven years according to the stat. 5 Eliz., so long as they exercise the art and no longer. 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 4, s. 2, 3.

Officers in the army.

The sessions on appeal quashed the appointment of Gayer, because he was an acting justice, and a lieutenant of marines on half-pay, and there were other substantial householders. Lord Mansfield said, "it was not necessary to consider the general question of the incompatibility of the offices. The justices have a discretionary power, and although they have stated two reasons for their judgment, yet it did not follow that they considered either of these offices as an exemption or a disability." No opinion was given on the general question. (Rex v. Gayer, 1 Bott, 9; 1 Burr. 245.)

Officers of the customs, tide-waiters, revenue officers.

Officers of the customs, tide-waiters, exchequer, and all other revenue officers, both by reason, it should seem, of the incompatibility of the functions, and by reason of the exemption granted them by the king, who has power to exempt by patent, charter, or otherwise, not only from offices under the crown, but even from parochial offices. Rex v. Warner, 8 T. R. 375; Raymond v. St. Botolph's, Aldgate, 2 Chan. Rep. 196; Cawthorne v. Campbell, 1 Anstr. 216. See also Rex v. Routledge, Doug. 531. But these exemptions granted by the prerogative were available only where there were a sufficient number of persons to serve the office, without recourse to the individuals so exempted; 8 T. R. 379, note (a); Rex v. T. Clarke, 1 T. R. 686; but by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 53, officers of customs and excise are absolutely exempt.

Yeomen in ordinary of the king's body guard. Ibid.; Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 245.

(a) The Poor Law Commissioners say that a woman would not be competent to be a guardian.

(b) This point was not decided, for three judges being against C. J. Holt, who thought the clergymen not exempt, it was "to be stirred again." The quotation from Gibson relates to the office of churchwarden.

3. Who to be appointed, &c.

Non commissioned officers, &c. of militia.

Sergeants, corporals, drummers, and privates of militia, from the time of their enrolment until they be regularly discharged; but there is no exemption enacted for the officers of that force. 42 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 174.

Captain in the guards.

Captain in the guards cannot claim his privilege of attending on the king when appointed constable. Hawk. 100.

Dissenters.

Dissenters scrupling to take the office, on account of the oaths or other matters required by law, repugnant to their peculiar religious opinions, are permitted to execute it by deputy, approved by such persons and in such manner as the principal should have been approved. 1 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 18, s. 7.

Customary exemptions.

An immemorial custom to be exempted from all office, will exempt a person from this office, though it is an office created within legal memory. (See Littledale, J., in Farr v. Hollis, 9 B. & C. 338.)

Other exemptions.

The exemption from parish and ward offices, given by the 10 & 11 W. III. c. 23, and 58 Geo. III. c. 70, to prosecutors of felons to conviction, no longer exists, those statutes having been repealed by 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, and 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27.

Quære, if younger brothers of the Trinity-House are exempted? (See Charter King v. Clarke, 1 Term Rep. 679; Steer's Par. L. 331.)

Persons residing out of parish.

Subject to these exemptions, the justices of the peace may appoint such householders as they in their discretion think meet. (Rex v. Gayer, ante.) But they ought not to appoint persons resident only for a time. (Rex v. Moor, Carth. 161.) They are no longer limited of necessity to householders residing in the parish or township; for the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 6, has provided, "that it shall be lawful for his Majesty's justices of the peace, in their respective special sessions for the appointment of overseers of the poor, upon the nomination and at the request of the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, to appoint any person who shall be assessed to the relief of the poor thereof, and shall be a householder resident within two miles from the church or chapel of such parish, or where there shall be no church or chapel, shall be resident within one mile from the boundary of such parish, to be an overseer of the poor thereof, although the person so to be appointed shall not be a householder within the parish of which he shall be so appointed an overseer of the poor; and it shall be sufficient, in every such appointment, to describe the person appointed by his name and residence, provided that no person shall be appointed to, or be compellable to serve, the office of overseer of the poor of any parish or place in which he shall not be a householder, unless he shall have consented to such appointment."

Power to appoint non-resident overseers.

4 & 5. When and by whom to be appointed (a).

Overseers to be elected at a vestry. Persons may vote at the poll, though not present at the nomination.

4 & 5.—At what time and by whom to be Appointed (a).

Reg. v. Hedger, 4 P. & D. 61. In general, the parishioners assembled in vestry select two proper persons to be appointed as overseers; and where by a local statute the inhabitants of each district in the parish, in vestry assembled, were to nominate a certain number of persons to be returned to justices at petty session, who were to select therefrom a certain number to be overseers, and at a vestry meeting for the above purpose, there was a contest as to the persons to be nominated, and after a show of hands a poll was demanded, it was held, that the nomination was not necessarily to be confined to the persons present at the meeting, but that a poll might be lawfully had on a future day, so that other persons entitled to vote might take part in the nomination.

(a) The 43 Eliz. c. 2, terms the investing a person with authority as overseer, a "nomination;" the 54 Geo. III. c. 91, calls it an "appointment." The magistrates alone can by law make the nomination or appointment, and no usage can entitle the parishioners to elect them (post, 29.) However, it is usual for the magistrates to appoint the overseers out of a list selected by the parishioners assembled in vestry, and to take those placed at the head. Acting as overseer is primâ facie evidence of a legal appointment. Governor of Bristol v. Wait, 6 Car. & P. 595.

The 43 Eliz. provided that the overseers should be nominated early in Easter week, or within one month after Easter; but the 54 Geo. III. c. 91, provides, that the appointment of overseers of the poor shall in every year be made on the 25th day of March, or within fourteen days next after the said 25th day of March, in all and every the same manner as directed by the statute of Eliz. to be made in Easter week.

4 & 5. When and by whom to be appointed.

Overseers to be nominated on 25th March, or 14 days after.

Reg. v. Sneyd, 5 Jurist, 962. The words of this statute are directory only, and not mandatory; therefore, an appointment made after the fourteen days is good. Two justices met after the regular notice, and entered on the business of the appointment of overseers to a township, when, not agreeing, they adjourned the final appointment to a day more than fourteen days after the 25th March. One of the justices, discovering the mistake the day after the meeting, made an appointment of overseers at an ordinary meeting of magistrates, and without holding any communication with the justice who had first acted with him:—Held, that this was a bad appointment; and, that an appointment subsequently made on the adjournment-day was good. As to the continuance in office till successor appointed, post, 32.

The statute is only directory.

Any other day is more proper than Sunday to appoint overseers; though the circumstances of the officers being required by the 43 Eliz. to meet once a month on a Sunday, raises a doubt whether an appointment made on a Sunday may not be valid. It was held to be good in R. v. Clerkenwell, Fol. 4, but on the case being cited, Lord Mansfield said, "I should think that an appointment on a Sunday is primâ facie clandestine and bad." Rex v. Butler, 1 Bla. Rep. 649; Rex v. Overseers of Bridgewater, Cowp. 139.

An appointment on a Sunday is improper.

Ministerial acts may be performed on a Sunday, but judicial acts done on that day are void: and the appointing overseers is clearly a judicial act. Waite v. Stokes, God. 280; Swan v. Broome, affirmed on error, 3 Burr. 1595; Rex v. Forrest, 3 T. R. 78. See 1 Chitty's Col. Stat. tit. Sunday.

It is a judicial act.

Rex v. Serle, 1 Bott, 32. There were in this case two sets of overseers certified on the same day. It was objected that both of the appointments were for this reason void; as where two informations on a penal statute are made on the same day, both are void. Hob. 209. Sed non allocatur; for although in some judicial proceedings the law considers the day as entire, and knows no fraction, yet in a bond and release, and many other things, that fiction does not hold, and these niceties should not be allowed to overthrow such orders; and in R. v. Great Marlow it was held that the appointment which is prior in time is good, and the second void. The magistrates having made their appointment, their jurisdiction in that respect is at an end. Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244.

Where two or more appointments are made on the same day, the first is valid.

And the second appointment is invalid, though made only in consequence of a reasonable claim of exemption by the first appointees; unless where the first appointees are regularly discharged by the sessions in appeal, in which event it seems that the magistrates may constitute others in the place of those so discharged; for it then stands as if the full number had not been appointed at first, in which case the justices have jurisdiction to make a supplementary appointment, and the lapse of the fourteen days after the 25th of March does not take away that jurisdiction. Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244. See Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550.

And cannot be changed or superseded, except on appeal to the quarter sessions.

Rex v. Sparrow, 2 Sess. Ca. 140; 2 Str. 1123; 1 Bott, 34. The mandamus, in obedience to which the justices had appointed overseers, was issued after the month after Easter was expired, and it therefore appeared that the appointment was not within the month after Easter. Lee, C. J., (who delivered the opinion of the Court), "As the justices are punishable by the act for not doing their duty, it would be a very hard construction to make the appointment itself void, for it would subject the parish to very great inconveniences for a thing which it is not in their power to prevent. To interpret an act of parliament, we must consider the mischief to be remedied, the remedy provided, and the true reason of that remedy. In this case, the defect is, the want of a proper officer to take care of the poor.

If the appointment be made after the time limited it is not therefore void, the act being merely directory.

4 & 5. When and by whom to be appointed.

The remedy is, that the justices shall appoint overseers, and that within such a time. Now the justices have neglected their duty, in not appointing overseers within the proper time, and by the act have forfeited 5*l.*, but that doth not make such appointment void. Were it the express direction of the act, that they should appoint in that and no other time, it would be otherwise; but here the statute (a) is only directory, and a penalty inflicted on the justices for not following such directions."

Sessions cannot appoint overseers because appeal is given.

The appointment is to be made under the hand and seal of two or more justices, that is, out of quarter sessions; for the quarter sessions have no original power to make it, as they have the determination of appeals against the appointment. Rex v. Flag and Chilmerton, 1 Sess. Ca. 260; Fol. 7; 1 Bott, 21. See R. v. Gayer, ante, 24.

Where the parish is part within and part without a corporation.

If a parish is partly within a corporate jurisdiction and partly without, though all the overseers, when appointed, may act indiscriminately for the whole parish, yet the original appointment should be made by four justices, two for the part within the county at large, and two for the part within the corporate jurisdiction. (1 Nol. P. L. 45).

Officers of corporate towns have the authority of justice of peace.

43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, also enacts, "That the mayor, bailiffs, or other head officers of every town and place corporate and city within this realm, being justice or justices of the peace, shall have the same authority by virtue of this act, within the limits and precincts of their jurisdiction, as well out of sessions as at their sessions, if they hold any, as is herein limited, prescribed and appointed to justices of the peace of the county, or any two or more of them, or to the justices of peace in their quarter sessions, to do and execute for all the uses and purposes in this act prescribed, and no other justice or justices of peace to enter or meddle there; (a) and that every alderman of the city of London within his ward shall and may do and execute in every respect so much as is appointed and allowed by this act to be done and executed by one or two justices of peace of any county within this realm."

Aldermen of London.

A parish extending into two counties, or into two liberties.

And by sect. 9, If any parish extend itself into more counties than one, or part to lie within the liberties of any city, town or place corporate, and part without, that then, as well the justices of peace of every county, as also the head officers of such city, town or place corporate, shall deal and intermeddle only in so much of the said parish as lieth within their liberties, and not any further: and every of them respectively, within their several limits, wards and jurisdictions, to execute the ordinances beforementioned concerning the nomination of overseers, to consent to binding apprentices, the giving warrant to levy taxations unpaid, the taking account of churchwardens and overseers, and the committing to prison such as refuse to account, or deny to pay the arrearages due upon their accounts; and yet nevertheless, the said churchwardens and overseers, or most part of them, of the said parishes that do extend into such several limits and jurisdictions, shall, without dividing themselves, duly execute their office in all places within the said parish, in all things to them belonging, and shall duly exhibit and make one account before the said head officer of the town or place corporate, and one other before the said justices of peace, or any such two of them, as is aforesaid.

By the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, jurisdiction is given to county justices in all boroughs which have not a separate court of quarter sessions under that act.

Origin of term "Division."

In some of the ancient statutes, not now in force, as particularly the 22 Hen. VIII. c. 12, the justices were required to divide themselves, for the better execution of the regulations concerning the poor. And thence came the clause in the subsequent statute, that the justices of the division were to do such and such things. But as there is no law at present which requires them to divide for the aforesaid purposes, there is properly no division in the sense which the statutes intended; and consequently it cannot be necessary to set forth now that the justices are in or near the division.

(a) Same principle adopted in the interpretation of a local act relating to the appointment of guardians. (Rex v. Mayor of Norwich, 1 B. & Adol. 310.) In R. v. Sparrow, many instances are cited of strong words being only directory.

4 & 5. When and by whom to be appointed.

6. PENALTY ON JUSTICES FOR NOT APPOINTING OVERSEERS, &c.

6. Penalty on Justices, &c.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 10, if in any place there shall be no such nomination of overseers as is before appointed, every justice of the division shall forfeit 5*l.* to the poor of such place, to be levied by the churchwardens and overseers, or one of them, by distress by warrant from the sessions. See R. v. Sparrow, supra, 27.

As the penalty is required to be levied by the churchwardens and overseers, or one of them, there should be a mandamus to make the appointment, and the penalty attaches for the omission to appoint at the time required.

The forfeiture being imposed upon every justice of the division, proceeds (it is said) upon the supposition of the justices being obliged to divide; (see supra); for in that case the appointment was to be by the justices in or near the division, and not otherwise; but now the justices at large are all equally concerned: and therefore it seemeth, that this penalty cannot now be levied on the justice of any particular district; but the more reasonable construction is, that all are liable. The language of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, is plainly to this effect; see Rex v. Price, Cald. 305; Rex v. Skinn, and Rex v. Baker, 1 Bott, 527, 528; Rex v. Grose, Comb. 289; Rex v. Woodsterton, 1 Bott, 464; St. John v. St. John, Hob. 78.

7. MODE AND FORMS OF APPOINTMENT.

7. Mode and Forms of Appointment.

In considering the mode of appointing, and the form and execution of the instrument by which such appointment is authenticated, it may be observed that the churchwardens require no specific appointment by the justices in order to give them the authority of overseers; for they become so by 43 Eliz. in virtue of their office of churchwarden.

With a view to the selection of proper persons for the office, two justices ought to issue a precept to the high constable, directing him to require the petty constables to enjoin all the overseers within their respective constablewicks to deliver in a list of qualified inhabitants within a certain time. The form of precept of warrant and proceedings thereon will be found in the Appendix.

Precept to return a list.

The appointment must be in writing under the seals of the justices. (Rex v. Arnold, 1 Str. 101.) Its proper custody is that of the overseer himself, and parol evidence of it cannot be given, until he has been called on. Stoke v. Golding, 1 B. & A. 173. See the form in Appendix.

Custody of appointment

The name of the county or other smaller jurisdiction for which the justices act should be set forth in some part of the order, that the parish or township for which the appointment is made may appear to be within their jurisdiction; for those who act under a jurisdiction given by act of parliament must show that jurisdiction, since, in a matter of jurisdiction, the Court will intend nothing. Rex v. Holbeck in Leeds, Burr. Sett. C. 198: Rex v. Stepney, Burr. Sett. C. 23; Rex v. Chilvers Coton, 8 T. R. 178; Rex v. Houlditch, ante, 25; R. v. Houlditch, 1 Bott, 4.

Parts of appointment considered

County.

The act requires that the appointment shall be by two justices at least: the number, therefore, must be shown, that the appointment may appear to have been made by a competent authority: however, if there be more than one signature, the omission of the number in the body of the order would not vitiate an appointment thus primâ facie made by more than one justice.

Number of justices.

But it would be insufficient for them to say, We do hereby nominate, without describing themselves as justices; for then there would be no jurisdiction apparent. And this defect will not be cured even after confirmation of the original instrument on appeal, by calling them justices in the order of sessions: as they might have been justices at the time of making the order of sessions, and yet not at the time of making the original instrument. Walton v. Chesterfield, 5 Mod. 322; Rex v. Woodford, 1 Bott, 434.

Must show they are justices.

7. Mode and forms of appointment.

Of the peace.

It seems also insufficient to say merely justices of the county, without stating them to be of the peace, though the words "of our lord the king" may be omitted without prejudice. (Haw. P. C. B. 2, c. 8, s. 32; title "Justices of the Peace," Vol. III.) And where the appointment is by magistrates acting for a limited jurisdiction, the justices should show precisely on the face of the order to what liberty they belong. (Rex v. Dobbyn, 2 Salk. 474.) But they need not describe themselves as dwelling in or near the parish or division. (Rex v. Sparrow, 2 Sess. Ca. 140.) Nor is it now strictly necessary that it should be stated that one of them is of the quorum; but it is still requisite that one of them in fact be of the quorum, except where there is but one justice of the quorum in the whole jurisdiction, in which case the acts of two justices are valid, though neither be of the quorum. (See 26 Geo. III. c. 27; 7 Geo. III. c. 21; and 4 Geo. IV. c. 27.)

Appointments may be by separate instruments.

Though not indispensable, the most eligible way is to appoint all the overseers by the same instrument; and this is the customary mode of proceeding. However, although there must be more than one overseer appointed for a district, there is no law that says there shall be an appointment of two or more overseers by one instrument. (Rex v. Besland, 1 Bott, 26; Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550; Rex v. Clifton, 2 East, 168.) If more than four be appointed, the instrument is invalid as to all. Rex v. Wymondham, 6 T. R. 553.

Substantial householders of the district.

The old form describes the appointees as being substantial householders of and in the parish (or township), and it is proper to pursue this form where they are in fact resident within the parish or township, and their description as being substantial must be inserted in the body of the instrument, for so to describe them at the foot merely will not suffice. Rex v. Weobly, 2 Str. 1261. But if any one of the overseers appointed is not such a householder, but is a householder resident out of the parish or township, (see 59 Geo. III. c. 12, p. 26), it is sufficient to describe the person appointed by his name and residence. In the appointment, "principal inhabitants," instead of substantial householders, is an insufficient description. Rex v. Weobly, Str. 1261. It is proper too to say, householders in the parish of E., or if the name of the parish, and of that parish only, have occurred before in the same instrument, then at least to say householders there. Rex v. Weobly. A parish must be called a parish, and a township must be called a township, or a village, those being the terms used by the statute; or, which is in common acceptation synonymous, a hamlet or vill. Rex v. Morris. These descriptions cannot be supplied by intendment, and are so strictly required, that the order will be void if the parish or township be designated as such only under an alias, as the precinct of the Tower, otherwise called the parish of St. Peter ad vincula. (Rex v. Severn and Arnold, Say, 278.) Where the appointment is for a township, it is not sufficient that the overseer appointed be a householder in the parish of which that township is a district; he must also (a) be a householder in that particular township: but if he be described in the appointment merely as a householder in the parish, he shall be intended a householder in the vill for which he is appointed. Rex v. Morris.

If an out-dweller.

As the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, ss. 6 & 35, provides that no out-dweller shall be appointed, unless he shall have consented to such appointment, it seems proper to add, after naming and describing him, "who has consented to this appointment," by way of showing the jurisdiction.

Must be styled "overseers."

The persons are to be described as "overseers," and where persons were appointed to set the poor to work, &c., mentioning the several duties in the Act, but were not in express terms appointed overseers, the appointment was quashed. Rex v. St. George, Fort, 320; 1 Bott, 2.

It is usual to state that they are appointed together with the church- wardens thereof. These words, however, are not essential; for "when overseers are once legally appointed, they are by operation of law joined with the churchwardens of the parish for which they are appointed." Rex v. Searle, 1 Bott, 1.

8. Mode and forms of appointment.

If the whole number has not been appointed by the first instrument, the justices may, it seems, add the rest by one or more supplementary appointments. Rex v. Besland, 1 Bott, 21; Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550.

Together with churchwardens.

Supplementary appointment.

The words "For the present year," are proper at whatever period the appointment is made, the form in this respect being construed to signify, from the present time till the next season allowed by law for the appointment of overseers; and this is so, though "at this present time" the proper period has gone by: for the year here means the overseers' year. Rex v. Sparrow, 1 Bott, 34; Rex v. Helling, 3 Burr. 1905. The following forms have, on the same construction, been sustained by the Court: "for this present year, 1766." Rex v. Helling, ibid. "For a whole year." Rex v. Great Marlow, Fol. 5; Rex v. Jones, 1 Bott, 35. "For one year next ensuing." Rex v. Burder, 4 T. R. 778. "For one year next ensuing the date hereof," it shall be intended to be the overseers' year. Rex v. Stubbs, 2 T. R. 395.

For what time.

The signing and sealing of the justices should be in each other's presence; for the function is not merely ministerial, like the allowance of a rate, but judicial; and the magistrates ought therefore to confer, and the result of their conference should be the ground of their determination, according to the general rule, that where a statute requires the concurrence of two magistrates, they should both act together. Rex v. Arnold, 1 Str. 101; Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244. But from the analogy of a more recent case, upon a warrant signed by commissioners of bankrupts, it may be inferred that the rule is satisfied if the magistrates have in fact duly conferred together and agreed what shall be done, leaving the acts of signing and sealing to be performed by them asunder at a subsequent time. Battye v. Gresley, 8 East, 327.

Justices must meet and concur

8. Appointment of fresh Overseer in case of Death, Removal, or Insolvency, and of the Duration of Overseers' Office.

8. Appointment of fresh Overseer in case of Death, &c.

The 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 3, enacts, "That if any such overseer shall die, or remove from the place for which he is appointed, or become insolvent, before the expiration of his office, on oath thereof made, it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace to appoint another overseer in his stead, who shall continue in office until new overseers are appointed: and if any overseer shall remove as aforesaid, he shall before such removal deliver over to some churchwarden or other overseer of the same place, his accounts verified as aforesaid, with all rates, assessments, books, papers, sums of money, and other things concerning his office, under the like penalties as are inflicted by this Act on an overseer refusing to do the same after the expiration of his office; and if any overseer shall die as aforesaid, his executors or administrators shall, within forty days after his decease, deliver over all things concerning his office to some churchwarden or other overseer of the same place; and shall pay out of the assets left by such overseer, all sums of money remaining due, which he received by virtue of his said office, before any of his other debts are paid and satisfied."

17 Geo. 2, c. 38.

On an overseer's dying or becoming insolvent, two justices to choose another.

Overseers removing shall deliver his accounts to the churchwardens, &c.

Executors of overseers to account in 40 days.

Overseers, who continue solvent and resident, remain in office until the arrival of the period limited for the appointment of their successors. (Rex v. Sparrow, 1 Bott, 34). But not longer, even though no successors be appointed; nor, as it seems, does the authority even of the churchwardens, as overseers, continue beyond the expiration of the overseers' term, though "liable to be revived by the appointment of new overseers, if the churchwardens continue in office beyond the overseers' regular year." (Vide 1 Nol. P. L. p. 59).

9. Enforcing or Avoiding Appointment.

9. Means to obtain and to enforce or avoid an Appointment, and of Appeals.

Mandamus to appoint.

If the magistrates will not make an appointment within the proper time, a mandamus may be obtained from the Court of Queen's Bench to compel them; and the rule will be absolute in the first instance. (Reg. v. Churchwardens of Manchester, 7 Dowl. 707.)

Indictment for not acting.

If, however, the justices have made a valid appointment, and the parties refuse to take the office upon them, it may be enforced against them by indictment (a).

The district of Borough Fen is extra-parochial. It contains a considerable population; and it had been for some time the practice for the inhabitants to support the poor requiring relief, who were resident among them, by rates, &c. Overseers had been in several instances appointed, who discharged the ordinary duties of that office. But the liability of the inhabitants within the district to pay rates for this purpose being at length disputed, the magistrates appointed overseers, and a motion was now made in full Court for a certiorari to bring up such appointment, for the purpose of moving that it be confirmed, and thus obtaining the decision of the Court, whether, under all the circumstances, overseers could be legally appointed for the district. Both parties were anxious for, and ready to abide by, the judgment of the Court; and a note in 4 Burn's Justice, 26, was relied upon, which says, "The law has likewise permitted a confirmation of the appointment by the Court of King's Bench, on a motion to that effect, when it is brought up by certiorari;" and Rex v. Standard Hill, 4 M. & S. 382, was also referred to. The Court, however, said that they were not aware of any instance in which such an application had been granted with a view to confirm the appointment, though there were many cases in which an appointment of overseers had been moved into this Court for the purpose of quashing it, as was done in Rex v. Standard Hill, to which reference had been made; the rule was therefore refused. (Rex v. Justices of the Liberty of Peterborough, Trin. K. B. 1830; Steer's Par. L. 623).

Q. B. will not confirm an appointment.

Resisting appointment. The dissent of a majority of justices present, is no answer to a distress for a rate, if no fraud.

When the appointment is void, the objection to it may be taken on an indictment for refusal to take the office, or in an action for distraining under a rate made by such officers. In a distress for poor rate, the party rated cannot question the validity of the appointment of the overseers, on the ground that the majority of the justices present at the appointment did not concur in it. The jury negatived fraud. (Pinney v. Slade, 5 New Cases, 319. See also Hinton v. Pawle, Cro. Car. 92.) But it may be shown that the place for which the appointment is made was not a parish or vill. Lane v. Cobham, 7 East, 1.

The appointment may be directly impeached by appeal, either by the overseers themselves, or by any of the parishioners.

Appeal against appointment

An appeal was given against the appointment itself, by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 6, which provides, that if any person shall find himself aggrieved by any act done by the said justices, he may appeal to the general quarter sessions, whose order therein shall bind all parties. (Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244.)

The 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, gives an appeal to the party grieved by any rate, or by overseers' accounts, or by an act done by the overseers, or by any justices, and in two cases relating to a poor rate, and one to the accounts of overseers, it has been decided that in those cases this provision of Elizabeth was repealed; and the appeal must in all cases be to the next quarter sessions after the party is aggrieved. (Rex v. Coode, 1 Bott, 290; Rex v. Micklefield, 1 Bott, 291; Rex v. Worcester, 5 M. & S. 457.) It may be doubtful if this applies to the appointment of overseers.

9. Enforcing or Avoiding Appointment, &c.

The appeal may be by any parishioner. (Rex v. Forrest, 3 T. R. 38.)

At the next sessions.

By the words, the "next sessions," (a) the next "practicable sessions" are intended. (See Rex v. Justices of Sussex, 15 East, 207; Rex v. Justices of Essex, 1 B. & Ald. 210.) It is advisable for the appellant to serve each of the justices who have made the appointment, and each of the other parish officers with whom he is nominated to act, with a copy of the notice of appeal, containing the grounds of his appealing, which must be done on or before the last day allowed for notices of appeal, by the practice of the sessions for the county where the case is to be heard. If the appointment were made by persons who were not justices, no appeal is necessary, for that is a nullity; but if the party do appeal in such case, and call the persons in question in his notice by the title of justices, he concludes himself, and cannot be heard to urge that they are not so; though an appointment by persons not justices is void ipso facto, without appeal, yet, where the effect of jurisdiction is merely that neither of the justices is of the quorum, the proper way to obtain the avoidance of the appointment is by appealing. (Rex v. Fisher, and Rex v. Towill, Cald. 135; 1 Bott, 72; Albrighton v. Skipton, 1 Str. 300.)

Appointments by persons acting as justices, but not being such, a nullity.

On appeal against order of removal the appointment for an extra-parochial place may be questioned.

If the appointment is void, it may be questioned collaterally in an appeal against an order of removal, made to an extra-parochial place having no officers, or to a township or other minor district, when it ought to have been made to the parish at large; or, probably, to a parish at large when it ought to have been to one of the townships in that parish. (Rex v. Denham, Burr. S. C. 35; Dolting v. Stokelane, Fort. 219; Rex v. Tamworth, Cald. 28; 1 Bott, 156; Rex v. Swalcliffe, Cald. 248; 2 Bott, 896.) Another mode, the converse of the last, is an appeal against an order of removal made from a wrong district. (Forest of Dean v. Parish of Linton, 2 Salk. 487.)

Or on a certiorari.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 8, the distress is not unlawful for any defect of form in the warrant of appointment. The appointment may be removed into Q. B. by certiorari, at any time before the expiration of the year for which it was made; but it seems not afterwards. Rex v. Bulter, 1 Bla. R. 649. Upon which the Court will go into the consideration, not only of defects apparent on the appointment itself, but of extrinsic objections appearing by affidavit, such as that the justices had no jurisdiction, Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244; Rex v. Butler; or that the place for which the appointment is made, was not a township or vill, or reputed to be such. Rex v. Standard Hill, ante, 14, 4 M. & S. 244. It will also happen in some cases, that a motion for a mandamus, to be directed to two justices of the neighbourhood, commanding them to appoint overseers for the proper district, will be the proper method of disputing the propriety of an appointment. But according to Mr. Nolan, (1 Nol. P. L. 37, note (4),) it is not applicable to improper appointments for extra-parochial places. The custody of the instrument of appointment belongs to the overseers. (Rex v. Stoke Golding, 1 B. & Ald. 173.)

For certain defects by affidavit, as the place be a township or vill.

Mandamus to appoint.

10. The Powers of Overseers.

10. Powers, Duties, and Liabilities of Overseers.

The nature of the powers and duties of an overseer depends altogether upon the circumstance whether his parish is,

First, Without a select vestry, or guardians; or,

Secondly, Whether it is under a select vestry; or,

(a) See Vol. I. title "Appeal," as to what are "next" sessions, and post.

10. Their Powers, Duties, and Liabilities.

Thirdly, Whether it is under guardians; and each of these deserves a separate consideration.

First, Where there there is not any select vestry or guardians, the overseers were directed by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, ss. 1 & 2, to take order from time to time, by and with the consent of two or more such justices of peace as is aforesaid, for setting to work the children of all such whose parents shall not, by the said churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, be thought able to keep and maintain their children: and also for setting to work all such persons, married or unmarried, having no means to maintain them, and use no ordinary and daily trade of life to get their living by: and also to raise, weekly or otherwise, (by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal-mines, or saleable underwoods in the said parish, in such competent sum and sums of money as they shall think fit) a convenient stock of flax, hemp, wool, thread, iron, and other necessary ware and stuff, to set the poor on work: and also competent sums of money for and towards the necessary relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them, being poor, and not able to work, and also for the putting out of such children to be apprentices, to be gathered out of the same parish, according to the ability of the same parish, and to do and execute all other things, as well for the disposing of the said stock, as otherwise concerning the premises as to them shall seem convenient."

Who shall be taxed towards the relief of the poor.

A convenient stock shall be provided to set the poor on work.

43 Eliz. c. 2. The overseers shall meet once every month.

"II. Which said churchwardens and overseers so to be nominated, or such of them as shall not be let by sickness or other just excuse, to be allowed by two such justices of the peace or more as is aforesaid, shall meet together at the least once every month in the church of the said parish, upon the Sunday, in the afternoon after divine service, there to consider of some good course to be taken, and of some meet order to be set down in the premises; upon pain that every one of them absenting themselves without lawful cause as aforesaid, from such monthly meeting for the purpose aforesaid, or being negligent in their office, or in the execution of the orders aforesaid, being made by and with the assent of the said justices of peace, or any two of them before mentioned, to forfeit for every such default of absence or negligence twenty shillings."

The act for the whole parish

The power of the overseers extends over the whole parish, but there may be a subdivision of the parish by the overseers themselves as a matter of arrangement. In such cases, the accounts form only an entire parochial account. (Malkin v. Vickerstaff, 3 B. & A. 189; and see 1 Bar. & Adol. 1; 3 Bar. & Adol. 941; 3 Maule & Selw. 471; Eden v. Tilchmarsh, 1 Adol. & Ell. 691.) And the overseers are responsible for the malversation of each other. (Rex v. Justices of Essex, 3 B. & Adol. 941.)

Employment of poor.

Under the statute of Eliz. it was the duty of the overseers to obtain employment, at reasonable wages, for able-bodied persons who were unable to obtain employment for themselves (Rex v. Collett, post); and to give pecuniary relief only to the sick and impotent. The general care and management of the poor was vested in them, subject only to some control from the justices of the peace.

Overseer not bound to expend money in vaccinating paupers.

An overseer is not bound to take precautionary measures against the small-pox, by causing the poor to be vaccinated. And even if the overseer has, by the direction of the vestry, agreed that the poor shall be vaccinated at the expense of the parish, and refuses to fulfil that agreement, the Court will not grant a criminal information against him: although in consequence of his conduct the infection of the small-pox has spread, and many of the poor have died. (Anon. 5 Nev. & Man. 12; 3 Ad & E. 552.)

The overseers are not bound to bury a pauper, though settled and dying in the parish, but not in a parochial house.

Reg. v. Stewart, 12 A. & E. 773. The governor of St. George's Hospital, in the parish of St. George's, Hanover-square, applied for a mandamus to compel the overseers to cause the body of M. K. to be interred. M. K., a married woman, and residing with her husband in the parish of St. George's, was admitted an in-patient in the hospital, and died there. She remained unburied, as the husband was, from poverty, unable to bury her.

He was receiving a weekly allowance from the parish, and he deposed, to his belief, that he was settled there. The affidavits declared the history of the hospital, and the overseers contended that the hospital was bound to inter the body. Cur. adv. vult.—Lord Denman.—Upon the argument we felt extreme difficulty in placing on any legal foundation either the right of the hospital to the writ, or the obligation on the parish to do the act required; yet we were unwilling at once to discharge the rule, considering how long the practice had prevailed and been sanctioned of burying such persons at the expense of the parish, and the general consequences of holding that such practice has no warrant in law. In the argument for the rule, the necessity of the case, a very large construction of the words of the St. of 43 Eliz. c. 2, and an inference from St. 48 Geo. III. c. 75, for the burial of shipwrecked bodies cast on shore, were alone relied on. These all appear to us insufficient; and in the last-named statute there are undoubtedly words from which it may be inferred that the framers of it recognised burials at the expense of the parish, and, in a doubtful case, such recognition might weigh something in affirmance of the legal obligation on the parish to provide such burials. But in the present case, we are thrown necessarily on the statute of Eliz.; the overseer is a statutable officer, dealing with a statutable fund, and accountable for its application to statutable purposes. The language of that statute leaves no doubt. The relief and employment of the poor are its objects; the fund is created for them, and cannot be diverted from them, unless to objects specifically engrafted on them by subsequent statutes, of which this is not one. No usage, however proper in itself, and however uncontroverted, can prevail against that which the plain construction of the statute forbids; and we cannot accede to the argument that the burial of a pauper receiving relief, but not dying in any parish house, can be brought within the objects of the statute, express or implied. We limit the rule thus purposely: for, on passing to the ground of necessity, we wish to be understood as distinctly recognising its existence, while we deny its application in the way now contended for. Every person dying in this country, and not within certain exclusions laid down by the ecclesiastical law, has a right to Christian burial, and that implies the right to be carried from the place where his body lies to the parish cemetery. Further, to use the words of Lord Stowell, in Gilbert v. Bernard, 2 Hag. 333, "that bodies should be carried in a state of naked exposure to the grave, would be a real offence to the living, as well as an apparent indignity to the dead." We have no doubt, therefore, that the common law casts on some one the duty of carrying to the grave, decently covered, the dead body of any person dying in such a state of indigence as to leave no funds for that purpose. The feelings and the interests of the living require this, and create the duty; but the question is on whom it falls. It is enough for the disposal of this rule to say that it is not cast upon the overseers, where the death does not take place under the roof of any parish house, or that which, under the circumstances, can be considered as such. But the principles above laid down seem to point to an important distinction, and we think it right in the present case, with a view to the extensive consequences of our decision, to state it. It should seem that the individual under whose roof a poor person dies is bound to carry the body, decently covered, to the place of burial: he cannot keep him unburied, nor do anything which prevents Christian burial; he cannot, therefore, cast him out, so as to expose the body to violation, or to offend the feelings, or to endanger the health of the living; and, for the same reason, he cannot carry him uncovered to the grave. It will probably be found, therefore, that where a pauper dies in any parish house, poor house, or union house, that circumstance casts on the parish or union, as the case may be, to bury the body, not by virtue of the statute of Eliz., but upon the principles of the common law. In the present case, however, the same principles would rather cast the burthen on the hospital than the parish, and form an additional, though not a necessary reason, for refusing the writ. Rule discharged.

10. Their Powers, Duties, and Liabilities.

Where a select vestry has been constituted under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, the overseers can give no relief, but such as is ordered by the vestry.

Their duty where a select vestry.

Wherever a parish, or united parishes, adopted the provisions of the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and appointed guardians, that statute expressly enacts, that "neither the churchwardens or overseers shall interfere or intermeddle in the care and management of the poor, but shall continue to have the same powers of making and collecting rates, as they had at that time."

Where guardians appointed under Gilbert's Act.

Overseers, not guardians, to bind apprentices.

These words do not, however, transfer the power of binding out apprentices from the overseers to the guardians, for where a parish had adopted the provisions of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and the overseer had executed the indenture, and not the guardian, C. J. Abbott said, "I am of opinion that this binding was valid. The 7th section of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, is calculated to raise a doubt upon the point, for it excludes the interference of the churchwardens and overseers in the care and management of the poor, where guardians are appointed. If there was nothing else in the act to guide us, it might be difficult to say that they could interfere in binding parish apprentices. But in subsequent parts of the statute various powers are expressly given to guardians of the poor; and by the 30th section they are authorised to provide for poor children until they arrive at a proper age to be placed out, when they are to be bound out according to the laws then existing; one of these laws was the 43 Eliz. c. 2, directing that parish apprentices should be bound out by the churchwardens and overseers. And it is better that a binding should take place by several churchwardens and overseers than by one guardian." R. v. Lutterworth, 3 B. & C. 487; 5 D. & R. 343.

Where guardians under new Poor Law Act. Make rates (a).

To pay to guardians. Rate-book.

And now, where guardians are appointed under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, that statute has transferred to them the general care of the poor. Still the overseers in every union shall make, assess, and collect all rates for the necessary relief of the poor, and for defraying all other charges and expenses chargeable on the same; and they are to pay to the common fund such sums as the guardians shall direct. They are to provide a rate-book in the form prescribed by the statute.

Relief in emergency. (See title "Relief," post.)

Refusal.

By the 54 of the Poor Law Act they are empowered, in cases of sudden and urgent necessity, to give temporary relief in articles of necessity, but not in money; and the rules require that they should endeavour to procure the relieving officer to give it; and in all cases the same must be reported to the relieving officer. Should the overseer refuse relief in cases of necessity, a justice of the peace may order it; and the overseer is liable to a penalty.

Overseers are not now required to make any return of lunatic paupers, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, s. 6.

By a general order of the 22nd of April, 1843, overseers are required to give a report in writing of relief afforded by them, or under an order by justices, to the relieving officer, and also to transmit to him any order by justices directing out-door relief.

6. Appointment of Officers with Salaries.

Appointment of assistant overseers (a).

The overseers and guardians having a duty imposed on them by law, are not entitled to any remuneration for their services, but it has been found expedient to provide for the payment of a salary to assistant overseers. And by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, to nominate and elect any discreet person or persons to be assistant overseer or overseers of the poor of such parish, and to determine and specify the duties to be by* or them executed and performed, and to fix such yearly salary for the execution of the said office as shall by such inhabitants in vestry be thought fit; and it

By the act for regulating the parish of St. Pancras, the officers are appointed by the vestry-men to hold their office at pleasure. The bond for their good behaviour does not determine by the directors going out of office. (M'Gahey v. Alston, 1 M. & W. 387.)

Paid Officers, under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 46.

The appointment of paid officers will for the future be almost, if not altogether, regulated by the 46th section of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, which enacts, that the commissioners may direct the overseers or guardians to appoint paid officers with such qualifications as the commissioners shall think necessary for superintending or assisting in the administration of the relief and employment of the poor, and for auditing the accounts, and otherwise carrying the act into execution; and the commissioners are empowered to define the duties of such officers, their continuance in office, and the security to be given, and to regulate the salaries of such officers, and such salaries shall be payable out of the poor rates.

Commissioners may direct overseers and guardians to appoint paid officers for parishes or unions; and fix their duties, and the mode of appointment and dismissal, and the security; and regulate their salaries (a).

election of guardians for St. Mary, Lambeth, and directed the overseers, before the day appointed for any annual election, to nominate a barrister of five years' standing as returning officer at the election of guardians. On the 26th February, 1839, they rescinded the provisions contained in the order of the 2d March, 1836, which prescribed the manner in which the guardians should be chosen, and directed that the election of guardians, for the year ending the 25th March, 1840, should be conducted according to certain articles; and, among others, Article 13 appointed Dr. Kay, an assistant poor law commissioner, returning officer for the year ending March, 1840; Article 14 gave the returning officer power to employ a competent number of persons to assist in conducting the election; and Article 15 was as follows: "Any assistants who may be employed by the returning officer shall receive such compensation for their services as shall be sanctioned by the poor law commissioners; and the compensation shall be paid by the overseers out of the poor rates. But no paid officer who shall have been appointed by the guardians, and who shall be bound to devote his whole time to the performance of the duties of his office, shall receive any such compensation, except for actual travelling expenses." The defendant, one of the churchwardens of the parish, disputed the validity of the above order, and refused to pay over the rates to the treasurer appointed by the commissioners. A mandamus issued commanding him to do so, to which he had made a return. The validity of the order was contested on the grounds, that as the commissioners had by their order of March 2d, 1836, directed the mode of electing guardians at any future annual election, they had exercised the power committed to them by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 40, and had no authority to make any subsequent order rescinding the previous one, and substituting a different mode of election. 2nd. That they had no power to authorise their assistant commissioner to appoint paid officers, the appointment of paid officers being expressly given to the guardians only. Lord Denman, C. J.—We think that the 15th Article cannot be supported, and therefore the order must be quashed. The assistants appointed by the returning officer were clearly paid officers within s. 46, and therefore should have been nominated by the guardians. With regard to the returning officer, if he is an officer who ought to be paid, I doubt whether the poor law commissioners can take the appointment upon themselves, by nominating some one without a salary. Littledale, J., concurred. Patteson, J.—I do not see how the difficulty which arises on s. 46 can be got rid of. The order directs that the assistants to the returning officers shall be paid; if so, they are paid officers within s. 46, and it does not signify in the least whether they are permanent officers or not. When a payment for services is to be made out of the rates, the parish officers have the appointment. With regard to the manner of conducting the election, I do not wish, as far as my opinion is concerned, to have it supposed that the poor law commissioners may not alter their orders from time to time, as they think fit. Williams, J., concurred. Rule absolute.

Commissioners cannot appoint paid officers.

They may rescind an order.—Semble. Ante, p. 5.

Reg. v. Poor Law Commissioners (Strand Union), 9 A. & E. 901. This was an application for a certiorari to remove an order of the commissioners for appointing a collector of rates in ten several parishes within the Strand union, and among others for the parish of St. Paul's, Covent Garden. The ground of the application was, that by 10 Geo. IV. c. 68, local and personal, the right to elect all officers was vested in the vestrymen of the parish. Cur. adv. vult.—Lord Denman.—This order was resisted on the part of the vestrymen of St. Paul's, on account of a local act, which gave them power to appoint a collector with certain local privileges. We have entertained considerable doubts on the subject; and have at length come to the conclusion, upon a collation of the sections of the act of parliament, that the order of the poor law commissioners cannot be sustained. We think that, at least till the union is made perfect for the purposes of rating (4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 34), there is no power to require that the guardians shall appoint a collector to act in the separate parishes, under the circumstances stated. We have thought it right to deliver this opinion, as soon as we had completely formed

Poor law commissioners have no power to require the appointment of a collector of rates in St. Paul's, Covent Garden.

Nor for any parish of a union not being a union for the purpose of rating.

it, on account of the inconvenience alleged to arise from the question remaining undecided. Rule absolute.

Reg. v. Poor Law Commissioners (Cambridge Union), 2 P. & D. 323; 9 A. & E. 911. The commissioners made an order that the guardians of the Cambridge union, consisting of several parishes, should appoint a collector of the poor-rates of such parishes comprised therein as the guardians should deem to require a collector, and should report the same to the commissioners to approve or disallow the same. If the guardians should deem that any one parish should require an assistant overseer, they might appoint the person so appointed as collector; provided that those parishes in which either of the churchwardens or overseers should be willing to collect the rates, should not be deemed to require a collector. Persons appointed were to give security. The collector was to pay the rates to the treasurer of the union, to be placed to the account of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish on account of which they had been collected: the moneys so paid to be applied to the same purposes as they would have been applicable to if collected by the churchwardens and overseers. The guardians appointed one W. H. Smith collector for the parish of St. Andrew the Less, and the appointment had been confirmed by the commissioners. The inhabitants of this parish notwithstanding nominated one G. W. Brown assistant overseer, under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, and specified, amongst his other duties, that he should collect the poor rates of the parish; and he was afterwards, under the provisions of the same act, duly appointed by two justices to the same office. Smith continued in office until the 5th of December, 1838, when he resigned. On a certiorari to remove the order of the commissioners for the purpose of quashing it, it appeared that the parish of St. Andrew was not regulated by any local act. Denman, C. J.—This appears to me a very clear case. We had occasion lately to look minutely at a former order of the commissioners in the case of the Strand Union, which came within the same principle as the present. The claim of the commissioners rests principally on s. 46, which authorises the commissioners to direct the appointment of such officers as they shall think necessary for a limited purpose, namely, the "administration of the relief, and the employment of the poor." This limitation coming after the general words must be taken to confine them to the provisions of this particular act (the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76), which abounds in provisions for the due administration of the relief to the poor (properly so called), but is silent on the subject of collecting the poor rates. One indirect mode of justifying the appointment in question was resorted to. It was said that the commissioners may order the appointment of an assistant overseer for a union consisting of several parishes, and may subdivide his office, and prescribe to him the collection of rates. But, if the commissioners were to do that, it appears to me that they would exercise a power which the act does not give them. Littledale, J.—I am of the same opinion. The word "collector" does not occur in the act except in the interpretation clause. The words "paid officers" may certainly in themselves include a collector; but that construction cannot very well be given to them if a collector is not necessary for any of the purposes in the act. The phrase "administration of relief to the poor" seems to contemplate the application of rates after collection. The guardians might perhaps appoint a collector if their union had been formed for the purpose of a common rating, and this may account for the use of the word "officer," in the interpretation clause, to signify, among other things, a "collector." Patteson, J.—The union in the present case was evidently formed under s. 26 of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, and under that section only. It is not a union for purposes of settlement under s. 33, nor for purposes of rating under s. 34, nor for the purpose only of appointing and paying officers, and declared to be so by the order in question, under s. 46, which latter sort of union, however, I am unable to comprehend. Taking it then to be a union under s. 26, the latter words of that section will be found to be very material,—"but, notwithstanding such union and classification, each of the said parishes shall be separately chargeable with and liable to defray the expense of its own poor,"—for they show that the funds of one parish are in no way to be mixed with those of another by reason of their forming part of the same union. In support of this order s. 15 is relied on, which makes the administration of relief subject to the control of the commissioners. It is remarkable that, although this section enumerates many matters, rating is not one of them; and throughout the act no power is given either to them or the guardians of any union to interfere with the making or collecting the rates in any parish. There is, it is true, so far as I can discover, no express reservation in that respect, as in Gilbert's Act (22 Geo. III. c. 83), of the existing power of churchwardens and overseers to make and collect the rates, but there is a total omission of any enactments respecting the poor-rates, which cannot have been accidental. The argument in support of the present order certainly goes too far; for, if the commissioners may direct the appointment of a person to collect the rates, they may also, on the reasoning now employed, direct the appointment of a person to assess them also. The guardians certainly are authorised, by ss. 23 and 25, to assess rates, but that is for one particular purpose only, viz. the building and enlargement of union workhouses. Sect. 48 gives the commissioners power to remove officers, but not to appoint; the commissioners are only to require "the persons competent in that behalf to appoint," (that is, the persons appointing originally,) successors to the officers so removed. If it were otherwise, the guardians might complain, and get officers removed for the very purpose of transferring to themselves the right of appointment. The question then arises, if at all, on s. 46, by which paid officers may be appointed for certain purposes; and when the legislature has described, however generally, what those purposes are, we cannot stretch their language, and allow such officers to be appointed for other purposes. That section empowers the commissioners to direct overseers or guardians of any parish or union to appoint paid officers for certain purposes. The first purpose is for superintending or assisting the administration of the relief and employment of the poor, and it appears to me to be a perversion of these terms to say that they can apply to the collection of rates. Administration of relief is altogether another process from the collection of rates; the one begins where the other ends. The second purpose is for the examining and auditing, and allowing or disallowing, of accounts in such parish or union, or united parishes. Collecting the rates does not come under that head. Can the guardians then appoint a collector for the other general purposes afterwards referred to, viz. for "otherwise carrying the provisions of this act into execution?" Now these words following particular words must be applied to matters ejusdem generis; and, besides, the act contains nothing applicable to collection of rates; collection therefore is not, and cannot be made under the provisions of this act, which studiously, as I have before said, omits all provisions on the subject. The appointment of a paid officer, then, for the purpose of such collection, is not within the powers conferred by s. 46. In one case, where a union has been formed under s. 34, for the purpose of rating, s. 46 might authorise the appointment of collector by the guardians of the union, for such an appointment might then be taken as made for carrying that provision of the act into execution. At present I think such an appointment might be good, and, if so, it would satisfy the use of the word "collector" in the interpretation clause, as being one of the persons comprehended by the word "officer" in the body of the act, and so far the act would be consistent. For these reasons I am of opinion that the order in question is illegal. Coleridge, J.—I am of the same opinion. We all considered the Strand Union case with reference to the general scope of the act; and I for one made up my mind independently of the particular grounds there applicable. It is said that, although there are no particular words in the act, yet that there are general words large enough to justify this appointment of collector. But it appears to me that there is no safer mode of construing all these words than by considering them with reference to s. 15, which gives the commissioners their power. They are there given the control "over the administration of relief to the poor throughout England and Wales;" but that power is subject "to the existing laws:" and we are met by these words, when it is said that the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, is repealed by implication because, (as it was ingeniously contended,) the commissioners may certainly direct the guardians to appoint an assistant overseer for the whole union, and may also impose on him, if they think proper, the duty of collector for the same district; all which, he says, being inconsistent with the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, which gives the parish in vestry assembled the power of appointing him and of specifying his duties, must have the effect of virtually repealing it.

But the duties of an assistant-overseer are not limited by that act in like manner as the duties of an overseer are limited by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, so that the assistant overseer may have multifarious duties imposed on him. He may, or may not, have to do with the relief of the poor; his powers may be given him pro re nata; so that it does not follow, because the commissioners may direct the appointment of such an officer, that they may, by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 46, assign him the particular duty of collecting the rate, unless that duty is in furtherance of the provisions of this particular act. The argument is also open to this objection, which has been already noticed by my brother Patteson, that, if carried out, it would operate as a virtual repeal, to a certain extent, of the 43 Eliz. c. 5, for it would justify the commissionors in giving the same officer power with respect to the assessment as well as the collection of rates. Rule absolute.

Such order, made and passed before 6th May, 1839, confirmed by statute.

This decision was made on the 6th of May, 1839; and by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 84, all orders heretofore made and issued by the poor law commissioners, "and not rescinded by them or quashed before the 6th of May in the present year" (1839), by which the commissioners may have directed the overseers or guardians of any parish or union to appoint any person to collect the rates for the relief of the poor, or shall have defined or directed the execution of the duties of such person, or the place or limits in the which the same shall be performed, or shall have directed the mode of apportionment, or determined the continuance in office or dismissal of any such person from his office, or the amount or nature of the security to be given by such person, or shall have regulated the amount of salary payable to such person, or the time or mode or the proportions of payment thereof, shall be deemed, and the same are hereby declared to have the same force and validity as if the same had been warranted by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76; and the commissioners shall have the same power and authorities in respect to all such orders, and to the persons appointed in pursuance thereof, as they have had in respect to all orders made and issued to the said officers appointed under the provisions of the said act; and that every person appointed by guardians under any such order shall have the like powers, authorities, privileges, immunities, protections, and remedies, as and for the performance of his duties under such order as are by law given to overseers of the poor in the performance of the like duties.

The commissioners have power to order the guardians to appoint a chaplain. He is an officer "for carrying the provisions of the act into execution."

Reg. v. Braintree, 1 Q. B. 130; 4 P. & D. 593. The commissioners ordered the guardians of the Braintree union to appoint a chaplain of the union, and to report to the commissioners his appointment and amount of salary. It was objected that the order had not been sent to one of the secretaries of state, although at the several times, simultaneously with the order, an order in the same terms and to the same effect had been addressed to the Royston union. And further, that there was a prior order of the commissioners still unrevoked, providing for the performance of the offices of religion within the workhouse, independently of any appointment of a chaplain, prescribing only that in case the guardians should deem it necessary to appoint one, he should be licensed and approved by the diocesan, and that, if the appointment should be deemed necessary, he should perform certain specified duties, such as reading prayers and preaching, administering the sacrament, examining the children and visiting the sick paupers. The return to the mandamus then stated that the guardians, in the exercise of their judgment and discretion, did not deem it necessary to appoint a chaplain, as provision had been made for the performance of religious offices by the schoolmaster of the union, for the attendance of the paupers at the parish church and dissenting places of worship; and that clergymen within the union had been invited to perform spiritual functions in the workhouse, for the benefit of the poor, which invitation had been declined by the clergy, and accepted by the dissenting ministers, and that the majority of the paupers were dissenters. It was conceded that the first objection could not be supported, as the order was addressed separately to one union, and therefore was not a "general rule," which was defined by ss. 42 & 109 of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76. Lord Denman.—This was an argument on the return to a writ of mandamus, but it brought into question the validity of the writ, which directed the guardians to appoint a chaplain to a union workhouse, according to an order of the commissioners, on the ground that that order is not warranted by the act. The defendants denied that such a power is given by the act, and properly called on the prosecutors to shew what provision of the act could be carried into execution by the chaplain of a workhouse, as the paid officers to be appointed under the 46th clause must be appointed either with reference to the administration of the relief and employment of the poor, or to auditing of accounts, or to the general terms, "otherwise carrying the provisions of this act into execution," and it was admitted that this appointment could not be referred to either of the two former objects. The effect of these general terms was much considered in Reg. v. P. L. C., Cambridge Union, (ante, 38,) and the language used by the judges on that occasion was pressed upon us in argument. We there held that the appointment of a collector of poor rates was not within those general terms, because there is no provision of the act which has any reference to the collection of the poor rates, they being made and collected under other acts, and the act in question applying only to the expenditure of those rates, after they are collected. The only provision to be found in the act, which could authorise the appointment of a collector, was that respecting a union of parishes for the purpose of rating, in which case the rate would be made and collected under the act in question, and the cases of such unions afforded occasions on which the interpretation clause, containing the word "collector," under the head of "officer," might operate. The same interpretation clause, under the same head of "officer," has the word "clergyman;" and applying the same tests as were applied in the case in 9 A. & E., the result will appear to be very different. It is true that no provision is to be found in the act in question directly authorising the appointment of a chaplain, or even using the word "chaplain," or any word of a similar import, but s. 19 plainly shews the intention of the legislature, that the inmates of the union workhouse, of whatever religious persuasion, should have religious assistance from ministers of their own persuasion; it shews, moreover, that some general regulations for affording such assistance to the inmates were intended, as well as some exceptions and particular regulations in favour of those who dissented, and could not conscientiously reap the benefit of those general regulations. Then s. 42, giving power to the commissioners to make rules and regulations for the government of workhouses, makes it further incumbent upon them to carry into effect the intentions of the legislature, as shewn in s. 19. In these sections therefore are to be found the provisions of the act as to the religious assistance and instruction to the inmates of the workhouse; and s. 46 gives the commissioners the means of carrying into effect those provisions in the only way in which it could be done beneficially, namely, by enabling them to call on the guardians to appoint a chaplain, with an adequate salary, who by the interpretation clause comes clearly under the head of a paid "officer." This is not the only instance of such indirect provision in this act. Medical attendance is evidently contemplated, yet there is no specific enactment as to the appointment of medical men, but they are included in the interpretation clause under the head of "officer," in the same manner as "clergymen."

Neither were chaplains of workhouses unknown to the law, for many local acts of parliament contain express provisions respecting their appointment. Indeed that circumstance was used in argument by the counsel in favour of the return, as furnishing something on which the word "clergyman" in the interpretation clause might operate, and so make it unnecessary to find any part of the act in question to which to apply it. But, whatever force may belong to that argument, it would be very strange if the act meant to give the commissioners, by express provision, a control over chaplains under local acts, and not allow them to create similar duties and officers in the establishments which they were themselves to form. Remarks of this nature are by no means conclusive; we have no inclination to affirm judicially that the law has called a power into existence merely because there is a probability of its having intended to do so, or because it may have manifested the wish to have something done, for which that power would furnish the means; but we have no doubt that the religious instruction of the inmates was intended to be involved in the management of the workhouse, and that the legislature actually intended to give a general power to appoint chaplains, as it found that power existing in numerous parishes already. Thinking that the commissioners have acted strictly within the 46th clause, this decision is by no means opposed by the Cambridge case in which we thought their order was not within it. We say nothing on the return, which merely offers reasons of expediency and policy against this particular exercise of discretion. Of such matters, those to whom the discretion is confided are the sole judges. Nor do we remark on the argument respecting the possibility of appointing ministers of particular sects or persuasions, the right question being that of appointing any clergyman.

6. Officers with Salaries.

The commissioners have power to dismiss any paid officer of a parish or union.

But the commissioners have power to dismiss any paid officer of a parish or union, 4 & 5 Will. IV., c. 76, s. 48; and when the urgency of the case requires, the notice required by s. 20 may be dispensed with, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, s. 4.

Appointment of clerk, treasurer, relieving officer.

In pursuance of the authority given to the commissioners, they have directed that in each union, at the first meeting of the guardians, or within one month after the same, the guardians shall appoint a fit and proper person to be clerk to the board of guardians, and a fit and proper person to be treasurer to the said union, and shall take such security for the proper discharge of the said office of treasurer as shall seem to them necessary and fitting; and shall also appoint such and so many competent person or persons as the said board of guardians shall think fit, to be relieving officer or relieving officers of the said union, and shall likewise determine the parishes or places for which each such relieving officer shall act.

Clerk.

The duties of the clerk are prescribed by an order of the 21st April, 1842, and by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, s. 69, he is required to make a return of lunatic paupers.

Auditor.

The guardians are required to appoint an auditor, and his duties and salary are also regulated by the commissioners.

These officers may be elected by the guardians de facto. See Reg. v. Dolghelly, p. 7.

Duties of the Relieving Officers.

To attend meetings.

To attend all ordinary meetings of the guardians, and all other meetings, when summoned by the clerk, and to reside in the district.

To receive applications for relief, &c.

To receive all applications for relief, and to examine into the merits and circumstances of each case, and report the same to the board at their next ordinary meeting.

To give temporary relief.

In cases of sudden and urgent necessity, to give such relief to the destitute person as shall be requisite, either by placing the pauper in the workhouse, or affording relief out of the house, but not in money; whether the destitute person be settled in the parish or not.

To notify sickness of paupers.

In case of sickness or accident requiring medical or surgical relief, to procure medical or surgical assistance by giving an order on the medical officer.

To keep account

To keep a separate account of moneys received and disbursed by him on account of the relief of the poor, and also of all articles received and given out by him for the relief of the out-door poor, and to balance such account weekly, and present the same for inspection and approval to the clerk before, and to the board at the meeting.

To report to the board, at their ordinary meeting, all cases reported to him in which relief shall have been given by the overseer of any parish.

This is part of the duty of the relieving officer prescribed by the commissioners, by an order bearing date the 21st April, 1842. The order is applicable to the unions mentioned in the schedule, but it embraces almost all the unions then existing.

Meetings and duties of select vestries (b).

The care and management of the poor, in parishes not within any union, may be placed under the direction of a SELECT VESTRY; for the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 1, enacts, "that it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any parish, in vestry assembled, and they are hereby empowered, to establish a select vestry for the concerns of the poor of such parish; and to that end to nominate and elect, in the same or any subsequent vestry, or any adjournment thereof respectively, such and so many substantial householders or occupiers within such parish, not exceeding the number of twenty nor less than five, as shall in any such vestry be thought fit to be members of the select vestry; and the rector, vicar, or other minister of the parish, and in his absence the curate thereof, (such curate being resident in and charged to the poor's rates of such parish,) and the churchwardens and overseers of the poor for the time being, together with the inhabitants who shall be nominated and elected as aforesaid, (such inhabitants being first thereto appointed by writing under the hand and seal of one of his Majesty's justices of the peace, which appointment he is hereby authorised and required to make,) shall be and constitute a select vestry for the care and management of the concerns of the poor of such parish; and any three of them (two of whom shall neither be churchwardens nor overseers of the poor) shall be a quorum; and when any inhabitant elected and appointed to serve in any such select vestry shall, before the expiration of his office, die or remove from the parish, or shall become incapable of serving, or shall refuse or neglect to serve therein, the vacancy which shall be thereby occasioned shall, as soon as conveniently may be, be filled up by the election and appointment, in manner aforesaid, of some other substantial householder or occupier of such parish, and so from time to time as often as any such vacancy shall occur; and every such select vestry shall continue and be empowered to act from the time of the appointment thereof until fourteen days after the next annual appointment of overseers of the poor of the parish shall take place, and may be from year to year, and in any future year, renewed in the manner hereinbefore directed; and every such select vestry shall meet once in every fourteen days, and oftener if it shall be found necessary, in the parish church, or in some other convenient place within the parish; and at every such meeting a chairman shall be appointed by the majority of the members present, who shall preside therein; and in all cases of equality of votes upon any question there arising, the

(a) Commonly called Sturges Bourne's Act.

(b) There must, it seems, be a majority of select vestrymen present to constitute a valid meeting, as it is a general rule, that where a public trust is to be executed by a definite number of persons, it must be executed at a meeting where a majority of that number is present, unless there be a usage or custom to the contrary; and where by certain statutes the commissioners for enlarging churches appointed twenty-six persons to be a select vestry, for the care and management of the church, it was held, that to constitute a good assembly of such vestry, a majority (viz. fourteen) must be present. Blacket v. Blizzard, 9 B & C. 851. The words of these statutes resemble those of the above statute. A common-law vestry consists of an indefinite number; and therefore this rule does not apply to them.

chairman shall have the casting vote; and every such select vestry is hereby empowered and required to examine into the state and condition of the poor of the parish, and to inquire into and determine upon the proper objects of relief, and the nature and amount of the relief to be given; and in each case shall take into consideration the character and conduct of the poor person to be relieved, and shall be at liberty to distinguish, in the relief to be granted, between the deserving and the idle, extravagant, or profligate poor; and such select vestry shall make orders in writing for such relief as they shall think requisite, and shall inquire into and superintend the collection and administration of all money to be raised by the poor's rates, and of all other funds and money raised or applied by the parish to the relief of the poor; and where any such select vestry shall be established, the overseers of the poor are required, in the execution of their office, to conform to the directions of the select vestry, and shall not (except in cases of sudden emergency or urgent necessity, and to the extent only of such temporary relief as each case shall require, and except by order of justices, in the cases hereinafter provided for,) give any further or other relief or allowance to the poor, than such as shall be ordered by the select vestry."

Overseers (except in cases of emergency) to give no other relief than such as shall be ordered by the select vestry.

Rex v. Woodman, 4 B. & A. 507. The parish of Morpeth, beyond the period of living memory, has been managed by a select vestry, consisting of twenty-four persons. The inhabitants constituting the select vestry have generally continued in office for life, unless they happened to leave the parish or declined to serve. None of the inhabitants, besides the twenty-four, and the rector or curate, ever attended these vestry meetings. A notice was duly given that a meeting of the twenty-four gentlemen would be held for the establishing of a select vestry, and a meeting was accordingly held; at which meeting the defendant and nineteen other substantial householders or occupiers within the township were nominated and elected to be members of such select vestry, and an order of a magistrate was subsequently made, by which such twenty persons were appointed to act as a select vestry for the care and management of the poor. Abbott, C. J. "I am clearly of opinion, that the sixteen persons who constituted the ancient select vestry for the township of Morpeth, cannot be considered the inhabitants of the parish in vestry assembled, within the meaning of the 59 Geo. III. c. 12. The power to appoint a select vestry is expressly given to the inhabitants in vestry assembled; and here it was exercised, not by the inhabitants in vestry assembled, but by certain persons possessing some of the powers of the inhabitants in vestry assembled. It is not necessary in this case to decide what the inhabitants may do, but I have no difficulty in saying that in my opinion the inhabitants at large may assemble and appoint a select vestry for the care and management of the poor, not interfering with any of the rights of the ancient select vestry. The rule for quashing the order must therefore be made absolute."

A select vestry for the management of the parish affairs existing by ancient custom, cannot elect another select vestry for the management of the poor within the 59 G. 3, c. 12.

Clarke v. King, 2 Younge & J. 525. Wherever a select vestry is appointed, the right of the common-law vestry has always, in practice, been considered as de facto superseded; and the language of this act of parliament appears to confer upon that body the authority relative to the care and management of the poor, which the parishioners at large were before in the habit of exercising. It is optional with the parishioners, whether they will or will not proceed upon the old law, or upon the provisions of the statute, by the appointment of a select vestry; but if they pursue the latter course, they delegate their authority to that body. It follows that the consent of a select vestry, constituted under this act, is sufficient to render valid a contract under 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 4, for the lodging, keeping, and maintaining the poor of a parish.

Appointment of a select vestry supersedes power of a common vestry.

Sect. 2. "That when any complaint shall be made to any justice of the peace, of the want of adequate relief, by or on the behalf of any poor inhabitant of any parish for which a select vestry shall be established by virtue of this act, or in which the relief of the poor is or shall be under the management of guardians, governors, or directors, appointed by virtue of special or local acts, such justice shall not proceed therein, or take cognizance thereof, unless it shall be proved on oath before him that application for such relief hath been first made to, and refused by, the select vestry, or by such guardians, governors, or directors; and in such case, the justice, to whom the complaint shall be made, may summon the overseers of the poor, or any of them, to appear before any two of his Majesty's justices of the peace, to answer the complaint; and if, upon the hearing thereof, it shall be proved on oath, to the satisfaction of the justices who shall hear the same, that the party complaining, or on whose behalf the complaint shall be made, is in need of relief, and that adequate relief hath been refused by the select vestry, or by such guardians, governors, or directors, or that such select vestry shall not have assembled as by this act directed, it shall be lawful for such justices to make an order, under their hands and seals, for such relief as they, in their just and proper discretion, shall think necessary, (reference being also had by such justices to the character and conduct of the applicant;) provided, that in every such order the special cause of granting the relief thereby directed shall be expressly stated, and that no such order shall be given for, or extend to, any longer time than one month from the date thereof: provided that it shall be lawful for any justice to make an order for relief in any case of urgent necessity, to be specified in such order, so as such order shall remain in force only until the assembling of the select vestry of the parish, or of such guardians, governors, or directors as aforesaid, to which such case shall relate."

One justice may order temporary relief, in cases of urgent necessity.

Minutes to be kept of the proceedings of select vestries.

Sect. 3. "Every select vestry, to be established by the authority of this act, shall cause minutes to be fairly entered in books, to be for that purpose provided, of all their meetings, proceedings, resolutions, orders, and transactions, and of all sums received, applied, and expended by their direction, and such minutes shall from time to time be signed by the chairman; and shall, together with a summary or report of the accounts and transactions of the select vestry, be laid before the inhabitants of the parish in general vestry assembled, twice in every year, that is to say, in the month of March and the month of October, and at such other times as the select vestry shall think fit; and the minutes, proceedings, accounts, and reports of every select vestry shall belong to the parish, and be preserved with the other books, documents, accounts, and public papers thereof."

Minutes of select vestries, and reports of their proceedings, to be laid before the inhabitants in general vestry.

Notice to be given of vestries for the establishment and election of members, and for receiving reports of select vestries.

Sect. 4 provides, "that the churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall cause ten days' notice, at the least, to be publicly given in the usual manner, of every vestry to be holden for the purpose of establishing any select vestry, or of nominating and electing the members, or any member thereof, and of every vestry to be holden for the purpose of receiving the report of the select vestry; and every notice of any such vestry shall state the special purpose thereof."

Justices to act within their respective jurisdictions.

Sect. 35. "All powers and authorities by this act given to and vested in justices of the peace shall be exercised and executed by such justices within the limits of their respective commissions and jurisdictions, and not elsewhere; and that all provisions, clauses, authorities, and directions in this act contained in relation to parishes, shall extend and be construed to extend to all townships, vills, and places, having separate overseers of the poor, and maintaining their poor separately; and that all acts and duties required and authorised by this act to be done and executed by churchwardens and overseers of the poor, may in every parish be performed, exercised, and executed by the major part of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor thereof; and that in townships, vills, and places which have no churchwarden, the same may be performed, exercised, and executed by the overseers of the poor thereof, or the major part of them; and that all the powers, provisions, and clauses in this act contained, which relate to vestries, or to the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, shall be construed to extend to all meetings of the inhabitants of any township, vill, or place, having separate overseers of the poor, and maintaining its poor separately, to be held after due and legal notice, for carrying into execution the laws for the relief of the poor, as fully as if in every such

Sect. 36 provides, "That nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to take away, abridge, alter, prejudice, or affect, further than is hereby expressly enacted, any of the powers, directions, provisions, or regulations contained in the said act passed in the twenty-second year of his present Majesty's reign, for the better relief and employment of the poor, in or with respect to such parishes, townships, and places as have adopted, or as shall adopt and become subject to the provisions of that act; nor to take away, abridge, alter, prejudice, or affect any of the powers or provisions of any special or local act or acts, for the maintenance, relief, or regulation of the poor in any city, town, hundred, district, parish, or place, so nevertheless, that in every city, town, hundred, district, parish, or place, such of the clauses, directions, and powers in this act contained, as are not repugnant to, nor incompatible with, the provisions of the said act, of the twenty-second year of his Majesty's reign, or of such respective special or local acts, shall have the like force and effect, and may be adopted and applied in like manner, as in other parishes and places: provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to alter, affect, or disturb any select vestry which in any parish has been established and acted upon by virtue of any ancient usage or custom."

Rex v. The Overseers of St. Martin in the Fields, 3 Bar. & Adol. 907. Where an ancient select vestry existed in a parish having certain powers in the management of the poor, but not all the powers required by 59 Geo. III. c. 12, to be exercised by select vestries, the Court granted a mandamus calling on the parish officers to convene a meeting, pursuant to the act, for the purpose of establishing a new select vestry to perform those functions under the act which the former vestry could not discharge, but not otherwise to interfere with.

There may be two select vestries in a parish, the one elected under 59 G. III. having all the powers not belonging to an ancient one.

Golding v. Fenn, 7 Barn. & Cres. 765. A custom that there shall be a select vestry of an indefinite number of persons continued by election of new members made by itself and not by the parishioners, is valid in law. Semble, that it must be part of such custom that there should always be a reasonable number, and that the reasonableness of the number must be decided with reference to long established usage, and to the population of the parish, such custom having existed from time immemorial in a parish. In the year 1662, by a faculty granted by the Bishop of London, forty-nine persons, together with the vicar and churchwardens, were named as the select vestry, and that number was to be kept up by elections to be made by ten at least of those forty-nine, together with the vicar and churchwardens. In the year 1673 this number of ten was by another faculty reduced to seven, and these faculties were acted upon ever afterwards. Ten out of the fourteen vestrymen, exclusive of the vicar and churchwardens, who were present at the vestry holden next before the promulgation of the first faculty, were part of the forty-nine named in that faculty. Held, that as the vestry appointed by the faculty, and since continued, was not inconsistent with the vestry previously existing by the custom, the custom was not destroyed by the parish having accepted the faculty and acted upon it ever since, the faculty not being binding in law, and the vestry having power at any time to depart from its directions.

Election by select vestry may be valid, if the number be reasonable

Rex v. St. Bartholomew the Great, 2 Bar. & Adol. 506. To a mandamus calling on the overseers to summon a meeting for the purpose of establishing a select vestry, pursuant to 59 Geo. III. c. 12, a return was made stating that there was by custom an ancient vestry in the parish which had from time immemorial consulted and deliberated on parochial matters, and acted as a select vestry for the concerns of the poor, and that they had immemorially been accustomed to perform the duties imposed on select vestries by the statute: held, that the return was bad, since the statute imposes some duties, as the management of money raised by poor rates, and making orders for the government of overseers, which could not have existed before the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. Parke, J., observed, "The ancient vestry may have had from time immemorial the power of managing and applying the funds raised for the relief of the poor, otherwise than by compulsory rates. There is no reason they should not continue to enjoy that authority, if existing. But it is also clear that the inhabitants are not precluded from exercising the power of appointing a select vestry to discharge those functions, and very important ones they are, which arise out of the poor law first established by the statute of Elizabeth." And this decision will agree with the opinion expressed by Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Woodman, (ante, 35.)

Notice of unusual meeting must be served on every vestryman.

Where a select vestry has been established, notice of an unusual meeting must be served on every select vestryman, otherwise the meeting is not duly convened, and cannot justify the expulsion of a person who was not one of the select vestry. (Dobson v. Fussy, 7 Bing. 305.)

The appointment by the justice is a ministerial act.

Rex v. Adams, 2 Adol. & Ell. 409; 4 Nev. & M. 299. In the parish of Tenterden, the inhabitants elected twenty select vestrymen, and the justice omitted two in his appointment, because they were ex officio members, one as a justice and the other as an overseer. The Court granted a mandamus to compel him to insert the names, although it was sworn that injury had resulted from the union of the offices of select vestryman and justice. Lord Denman, "The magistrates have nothing to do, except to appoint the persons already chosen by the inhabitants. The word 'elect' is a very strong one. The word 'appoint' is certainly an unlucky expression, if the meaning of the legislature be that they are only to register the acts of others: but it is clear to me that this was the only meaning. That being so, whatever consequences may follow, we have merely to give effect to the act." The rest of the Court concurred.

8. Incorporation of Parishes.

Under the previous title of "Guardians prior to the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76," will be found the several enactments for the incorporation of parishes under Gilbert's Act. The principal object of such incorporation, as well as of the modern unions, is to provide a common workhouse for the whole district; and we propose therefore to defer the other legislative provisions relating to the old incorporation until we treat of workhouses.

9. Unions.

Parishes may be united by the commissioners

The incorporation of parishes mentioned in the last chapter, for the care and management of the poor, was voluntary; but now, by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 26, the commissioners "may declare any parishes, (a) which they think fit, to be united for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, and such parish shall thereupon be deemed a union."

This statute did not give them power to order a new board of guardians in a single parish governed by a local act.

The commissioners have no power to constitute a new board of guardians in a parish already having guardians under a local act.

Rex v. P. L. C. Pancras Union, 1 N. & P. 371; 6 A. & E. 1. On an application for a certiorari to remove an order of the poor law commissioners, cause was shown in the first instance, under s. 106. The order was, that the laws for the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Pancras should be administered by a board of guardians, consisting of twenty members, and that such board should be elected and constituted according to the poor law amendment act. The laws for the relief of the poor in St. Pancras were at that time administered by a board of directors, (a) By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, & 56 Geo. III. c. 129, every united parish must have been within ten miles of the workhouse; but these provisions are repealed by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 31.

consisting of forty members, under a local act affecting that parish only. The order was issued under the 39th section of the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. Lord Denman, Patteson, J. and Coleridge, J. (dissentiente, Williams, J.) were of opinion that the order was bad. Each judge delivered his opinion, and the opinion of the majority was in substance as follows:—The language of this section does not in direct terms give the commissioners power to order that the poor laws shall be administered by a board of guardians in a single parish, but enacts, that if they shall so order, the board shall be elected in the same manner as a union board. The power, however, seems to be necessarily implied. The order is resisted upon the ground that this section was not intended to apply to a single parish governed by a local act, and having already a board of guardians or directors, which for this purpose is the same thing, but only to such single parishes as were under the ordinary government of overseers, and as the commissioners might think not proper to be joined with other parishes in a union. The Court is now called upon to construe this section, and is urged to decide, from the generality of the expressions used in it, that it applies to all parishes without any limitation, and that it necessarily gives an implied power to the Poor Law Commissioners to repeal, at their will and pleasure, all local acts, so far as they regard the administration of the poor laws; for that such would be the effect of the construction prayed for, is undeniable. If the legislature intended to give so extensive a power to the commissioners, it might reasonably have been expected that it would have done so in express terms; and accordingly, in s. 41, a power of altering the mode of election under local acts is given in express terms. Even without express terms, if s. 39 would be inoperative unless such construction were put upon it, the Court might be compelled to infer that such a power was implied. If, however, the section can be made fully effectual by a more limited construction, there can be no conclusive proof that the more extensive power was contemplated by the legislature; and if such limited construction should appear to be in accordance with the other sections of the act, the Court might possibly, if it were to decide in favour of the power claimed by the commissioners, give that which the legislature intentionally withheld. One of the main objects of the act appears to be to provide for a uniform administration of the poor laws. With this view, s. 15 enacts, that the administration of the poor laws, according to the existing laws, shall be subject to the direction and control of the commissioners, and a general power is given to them to make rules for the guidance and control of all guardians, vestries, and parish officers, in the management of the poor, the audit of accounts, entering into contracts, and carrying the act into execution, the commissioners prescribing the method, but the guardians or other bodies performing the actual duty. And s. 21 expressly enacts, that, except where otherwise provided by this act, all powers given by any general or local act relating to the relief of the poor, shall be exercised by the persons authorised by law to exercise the same, under the control and subject to the rules of the commissioners. Now these sections point at the continuance of existing guardians, and other officers, subject to the control of the commissioners, while no express authority is given to them to dismiss any guardians, or to repeal the provisions of any local act, either by these or any other sections of the act. Sect. 26 empowers them to unite parishes. The words are as general as can well be conceived; they give the power in distinct terms, and would appear to apply to all parishes throughout the kingdom, containing no exception of parishes already united, and yet it must be read with such exception and limitation; for by s. 32, the commissioners are prohibited from dissolving or altering existing unions, without the consent of two-thirds of the guardians. The generality of the words of any section in this act is not, therefore, conclusive as to the real meaning of that section. By s. 38, a board of guardians must be constituted for every union of parishes established under this act; but no mention is made of any new board in the cases of existing unions. Next comes the 39th section, on which the case depends. The immediate object

9. Of Unions.

Act not to be construed so as to give commissioners power to repeal local acts.

Powers of local acts reserved

Construction of the 39th Sec

9. Of Unions. of this section is to enable the commissioners to cause the poor laws to be administered by a board of guardians in a single parish, without driving them to the necessity of uniting that parish with one or more others, for the purpose of having such a board. The legislature might well consider that some parishes are so large and populous that the commissioners might judge it expedient that they should not be united with any other, and yet that the poor laws ought to be therein administered by a board of guardians. It is however contended, that under this section the commissioners have powers, where a board of guardians, under a local act, already exists in a single parish, to supersede the board so far as regards the administration of the poor laws, and to order a new board to be elected under this act. It is conceded that the old board must in most instances remain, having other duties besides the administration of the poor laws, though no words are pointed out leading directly to any such conclusion. Section 40 regulates the mode and scale of voting, giving owners as well as occupiers the right of voting, thereby introducing a new class of voters, unheard of before, and also regulating the number of votes which each person shall have by the value of his property, which scale of voting appears to be a favourite object throughout this act. Sec. 41 is not very intelligible; but this much is clear, that an existing board of guardians of a parish, under a local act, may be continued; that the mode of their election may be altered by the commissioners of their own authority; but their number, mode of appointment, removal, and period of service, cannot be altered except by consent of a majority of owners and rate-payers, and the board will be under the control and subject to the rules of the commissioners. It is not denied that the commissioners may so continue an existing board; but it is said that they are not obliged to do so by reason of the generality of the words of the s. 39; and that they have the option either to continue and modify the existing board, under s. 41, or to abolish it altogether under s. 39. No such option is given to them as to existing unions, notwithstanding the general words of s. 26. Nor is there anything to lead to the conclusion that it was intended by the legislature to give such option as to single parishes, except the general words of s. 39. Sect. 54 again speaks of guardians under local acts exercising powers, but saves the power of the commissioners. Upon the whole it appears that the legislature intended to make use of all existing boards of guardians or directors (for their appellation makes no difference), to subject them to the control of the commissioners, and to alter the mode of their election at the discretion of the commissioners; but not to abolish any of them, or alter their number, without the consent of the majority of the owners and rate-payers. It further intended to enable the commissioners to unite parishes and constitute boards of guardians in single parishes, not already having boards. But there are not any words authorising the abolition of a board of guardians (except in the case of a dissolution of an existing union by consent), nor the taking away from an existing board of guardians any power they possess by law, or any part of their authority. On the contrary, there is a manifest intention throughout to preserve existing boards, and no allusion to there being in any instance more than one board in a parish or union. The control given to the commissioners is abundantly sufficient to secure uniformity of administration by existing bodies, regulated in their election by the provisions of this act. Equally general words in s. 26 must of necessity have a limited construction. Sect. 39 therefore, though general in its terms, does not apply to parishes having already a board of guardians or directors under a local act, and their order therefore is illegal.

Construction of 41st Sec.

Several parishes may be formed into union, although one of them is governed by a local act.

R. v. P. L. C. Whitechapel Union, 2 N. & P. 9; 6 A. & E. 34. In the Pancras case the order was made on 25th April, 1836. On the 21st January, 1837, an order was made for the formation of the Whitechapel union, which included several parishes and places, of which the place called the Old Artillery-ground was one; in which the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor was conducted under the directions of a local act, the trustees and managers whereof objected to the order.

C. a. v.—Lord Denman.—The first fourteen sections relate to the establishment of the machinery under which the act is to be conducted, and some of the usual consequences. Sect. 15 enacts, that the administration of relief to the poor according to the existing laws, or such laws as shall be in force at the time being, shall be subject to the direction and control of the commissioners; and then the section goes on to state the general power of the commissioners. This section does not at all contemplate any exception or abridgment, as to locality, of the full powers given to the commissioners over the whole of England and Wales. The five sections next following give general directions not applicable to the question in discussion. Sect. 21 enacts, that, unless in cases otherwise provided for by the act, all the powers and authorities given by the act of the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, which is generally called Gilbert's Act, and the 59 Geo. III. c. 12 (Sturges Bourne's Act), and every other act of parliament, general as well as local, relating to the poor, shall be exercised by the persons authorised by law to execute the same, under the control, and subject to the rules, orders, and regulations of the commissioners. And the commissioners, and their deputies, are authorised to attend at the parochial and local boards and vestries, and take part in the discussion, but not to vote. This clause, therefore, in express terms, gives the poor law commissioners, in some cases at least, a jurisdiction over parishes governed by local acts. Sect. 22 also gives some authority to the commissioners in parishes under local acts. After three sections containing regulations not material to this question, comes s. 26, upon which the question turns as to the power of the commissioners on the subject of this dispute. The language of this section is as general as possible, making no exception of any kind as to parishes or places already under unions, or under the regulation of local acts or otherwise. And it must therefore be so interpreted; unless it shall appear from other parts of the act that its operation was meant to be qualified; or that, by giving the full meaning and effect to the words, it should be found to have the effect of repealing, or be inconsistent, or interfere with some prior act of parliament connected with the same subject, when, taking the whole of this act and other acts together, it was not so meant. And in considering how far the provisions of a later act of parliament may interfere with those of a previous one, we entirely concur in the opinion of Lord Kenyon, in Williams v. Pritchard (a), quoted by my brother Coleridge in the case of the poor law commissioners (b), that "It cannot be contended that a subsequent act of parliament will not control the provisions of a prior statute, if it were intended to have that operation; but there are several cases in the books to show, that where the intention of the legislature was apparent that the subsequent act should not have such an operation, there, even though the words of such statute, taken strictly and grammatically, would repeal a former act, the courts of law, judging for the benefit of the subject, have held that they ought not to receive such a construction." In considering the question, how far the general and extensive provisions of an act of parliament are to be qualified or controlled, either by other provisions in the same act, or by enactments in other acts, the principal object and general intent of the later act, which is to be interpreted, must always be borne in mind. The great object of this act is to obtain an improvement in the management of the poor, and the legislature seems to have thought it was likely to be obtained by a uniformity in the system in the management of them. A perfect uniformity it seemed difficult to obtain. But it seems to have been the object of the legislature to come as near to it as could be, either by enactments to be carried into effect immediately, or at other convenient times, and the commissioners have accordingly been vested with powers to be exercised at such times as they may see occasion. And there is no doubt but that one of the most material variations in the system of the poor laws is authorised by this section: for whereas, in former times, as, for instance, in the time of queen Elizabeth, the poor laws were administered by parishes, it was considered in the time of Charles II. that in large parishes it might be better done in smaller districts, and which seemed to be the prevailing opinion for a long time; but afterwards a contrary course seemed to be thought the more advisable, and the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, commonly called Gilbert's Act, was passed, which, instead of dividing the administration of the poor laws into townships or villages, (as by the act of Charles II.) authorised the union of entire parishes; this, however, could only be done by a certain consent; but it is to be presumed that this union of parishes was found beneficial, because, by the act in question the commissioners are empowered of their own authority to make unions on a very extensive scale. Sect. 26 having, therefore, in the most general terms, authorised unions, it is now to be considered whether, considering the qualifications and exceptions to which I have before adverted, they are prevented from including in a union a parish or place which is already governed by a local act of parliament, and in which many, if not all, the powers and directions under which the general union is to be governed, and amongst other things a board of guardians, are already to be found; and which might, therefore, seem to render unnecessary any order of the poor law commissioners as to its government. Sect. 28 directs the commissioners to make inquiries as to single parishes, with a view to forming unions. Sect. 29 directs a similar inquiry as to former unions, either under Gilbert's Act or local acts, with a view to the future apportionment of expenses. Sect. 32 is a very material one. Sect. 26 having given the power to form unions, s. 32 authorises the commissioners to declare any union, whether formed before or after the passing of the act, to be dissolved in any parish, to be added to or separated from such union, and to adapt the constitution, management, and board of guardians, to the altered state of things: and then the parishes separated from the union may be united to other parishes or unions; and the commissioners are authorised to ascertain the proportionate value of the workhouses, and other things belonging to the parish, and give directions on the subject. But this alteration is not to take place unless a majority of two-thirds of the guardians of the union shall concur on the alteration. And on this it is to be observed, that the consent is only required when unions are altered, and not when originally formed under s. 26. Now this mode of ascertaining the proportion of expenses had been directed by s. 28, as to single parishes, and by s. 29, as to unions, under Gilbert's Act and local acts; all the parishes, therefore, under the contemplation of both those sections, must be considered as being capable of forming part of the union thus authorised by s. 32 to be altered. And if unions of parishes under local acts might be made parts of a union under the act in question, so may a single parish possessing a local act. Sect. 37 prohibits unions being formed under Gilbert's Act without the consent of the commissioners. Sect. 38 directs, that when parishes are formed into a union, there shall be a board of guardians, with particular directions relating to them. It is not, however, necessary to go through these particulars. One or two of the circumstances connected with the unions of parishes with local boards are worthy of observation. Sect. 26 itself provides, that notwithstanding the union there authorised, each of the parishes shall be separately chargeable with and liable to pay the expenses of its own poor, whether relieved in or out of the workhouse. Sect. 27 permits, that in any union, justices may direct, in certain cases, relief to persons not in the workhouse to be given, by whom the particular parish is chargeable. The relief cannot be given by the union guardians out of the union fund Therefore the parish guardians, wherever there are such, will be the persons to give this relief. Again, s. 38 enacts, that the workhouses of such union shall be governed, and the relief of the poor in such union shall be administered by the board of guardians—not the out-door relief—evidently giving to the board the government only of matters wherein the parishes have a common interest. The same section makes the justices ex officio guardians of the united or common workhouses (not of such union, nor of such parish); and further provides, that no ex officio or other guardian of any such board shall act, except as a member, and at a meeting of such board. Now s. 54 is entirely confined to the relief of the poor of any parish which has a local board under this or any other act, or select vestry, and whether forming part of a union or incorporation, or not, and directs that such relief shall belong exclusively to such guardians of the poor or select vestry. Some of the provisions relating to bastardy and removal lead to similar observations, and strongly support the inference that parishes having local boards may be united with others, under s. 26. We do not feel it necessary to discuss the judgment pronounced by us on s. 39, though we were pressed at the bar with the consequences of it. We were told that the effect of it would be easily evaded, inasmuch as the commissioners would be at liberty to unite every parish having a local board, though not to give a board to a single parish possessing already a board under a local act. But we are not to assume that the commissioners will evade the law, or colourably unite a parish possessing a local board, merely because they have not the power to give them that constitution as single parishes. The power given by s. 26 is given in different terms from that given by s. 39, and the Court has decided under different conditions. We have no right to doubt that both the one power and the other will be faithfully carried into execution. The vast and populous parishes for which local constitutions have been enacted, stand plainly in a very different condition from the small parishes which have been affected by Gilbert's act, or have obtained local acts for themselves. Whether it is or is not desirable that the former should remain single, and act on their existing regulations, there are obvious reasons for supposing that parliament would have been unwilling to disturb what it found there established. But to withhold the power of uniting every small parish, otherwise fit to be united, might have had the effect of preventing the operation of the new law over a large portion of the country. We find, accordingly (as was, indeed, admitted in argument at the bar), that the power of uniting is conferred without any restriction whatever, and have pointed out several sections in which the union of such parishes is clearly contemplated. Upon the whole, therefore, we are of opinion that the commissioners have in this case exercised a lawful power, and that their order must be confirmed.

Uniformity in the management of the poor, the object of the Poor Law Act.

9. Of Unions.

Large districts preferable to small.

A parish created for ecclesiastical purposes only, and united with others, does not form a "Union."

Reg. v. P. L. C. (Holborn Union), 7 A. & E. 281. A rule was obtained for quashing an order of the commissioners for uniting the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, united with the parish of St. George the Martyr, and the liberty of Saffron Hill, Hatton Garden, Ely Rents, and Ely Place, by the name of the Holborn Union, &c., on the following grounds, that the parishes of St. Andrew, Holborn, and St. George the Martyr, were a union at the time of making the order, and the administration of the poor laws was vested in a board of governors and directors, elected under 6 Geo. 4, c. 175 (local), and that the consent of two-thirds of the governors, &c., had not been obtained; that there being such a board, the commissioners had no authority to interfere; that the commissioners had ordered a board of guardians, to consist of twenty, to be elected, by which order the number of guardians was decreased, without having obtained the consent of the owners of property and rate-payers to such alteration. The parishes of St. Andrew, Holborn-above-Bars, and St. George the Martyr, had been, since 1825, governed by a board of guardians and directors, appointed under 6 Geo. 4, c. 175, consisting of fifty guardians; the district now forming the parish of St. George the Martyr, was formerly parcel of the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, and that it was separated from that parish for ecclesiastical purposes only, in 1713, under the 10 Anne, c. 11, but that for all other purposes it never had been separated; and that, for the relief of the poor and all other parochial purposes, the two parishes continued united, having one workhouse and one set of overseers, and that the parishioners of the two parishes were rated under one rate for the relief of the poor. Formerly the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, formed one entire parish, but under the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, for the more convenient relief of the poor, was divided into three townships or liberties, called the upper and lower liberties in Middlesex, and the city liberty, all three of which supported their own poor separately. The commissioners, under 10 Anne, carved out of the upper liberty of the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, a parish called St. George the Martyr, but only for ecclesiastical purposes. This district was sometimes called the Upper Liberty of St. Andrew, and sometimes the United Parishes of St. Andrew and St. George. Lord Denman.—It is alleged, that the district affected by this order comes within the exception contained in s. 32 of 4 & 5 W. IV. c. 76, and that therefore no dissolution, or alteration of it, or addition thereto, shall take place, unless a majority of not less than two-thirds of the guardians concur; for that, by several local acts, the two portions of the district are treated by the legislature as a union; that the term union is constantly applied to them, and therefore that it comes within the clause in question. We have already come to two decisions upon this act, which it is alleged apply to the present case. But, in my opinion, they do not. In the first case (Pancras Union, ante, p. 48), we held, that the act did not apply to a single parish with a local board of guardians. If this entire district, therefore, comprehended in the commissioners' order, has not a local board of guardians, the decision referred to does not touch the present question. It is then said, that it appears by our judgment in the second case (Whitechapel Union, p. 50), that we recognised a difference of intention in the legislature, between the proceedings to be applied to populous or small districts, and that, as these districts are large and populous, we should now act upon this distinction. It is true we did there observe upon the reasons which might have induced the legislature to exempt a parish having a board of guardians from the clause giving the commissioners power to make unions; but we entirely disclaim any right to give to the words of the legislature a meaning different from their natural import, in order to make them accord with some latent intention that may be supposed to have existed. In acts of general bearing like these, it is absolutely necessary to construe words according to their obvious meaning, and not to take the unwarrantable liberty of attributing a sense to plain words different from their natural import. Another argument has been argued, that parliament wished to interfere as little as possible with existing institutions. This we do not deny, and we acted upon it in the first case already noticed; but this consideration renders it imperative upon us to see what was the existing state of things in the parish at the time the order was made. Now to see whether there was a union existing here within the meaning of this act, we must look at s. 109 (the interpretation clause), to ascertain the import of the word union. We there find, that it is to include any number of parishes united either under that act, or under Gilbert's Act, neither of which is the case here; or thirdly, any parishes incorporated for the relief or maintenance of the poor under any local act. Does this district come within the third category? Are these parishes incorporated under any local act? To ascertain that, we must see what the legislature means by the word parish. By the same clause, parish is construed to be parish, city, district, and other place, or division or district of a place maintaining its own poor. It is clear that neither of these places is a parish in any other sense, and so far from either of them being a parish maintaining its own poor, each is a mere division of a larger parish. They have been divided, it is true, for ecclesiastical purposes, but neither of them has ever been called upon to maintain its own poor. I therefore think that the exception in s. 32 does not apply, and accordingly that a certiorari ought not to be granted. Littledale and Williams, and Coleridge, J., concurred.

Meaning of the word "Union."

Workhouse in common.

The workhouses of unions formed under 4 & 5 W. IV. c. 76, shall be for common use, and the poor of each parish shall be maintained and employed therein; but each parish shall be separately chargeable with the expense of its own poor, whether relieved in or out of the workhouse.

Each parish chargeable for its own poor. Estimate of pro-

In estimating the proportion which each parish is to contribute to the common fund, both for providing a workhouse and employing the poor, the commissioners are required to ascertain the annual average expense incurred for the relief of the poor in each parish for the three years preceding the inquiry; and upon the application of the guardians, or overseers of any parish, or without such application, the inquiry may be from time to time repeated, and a new proportion determined, s. 28. A parish cannot refuse to pay its quota because no guardian has been elected, Reg. v. Todmorden, ante. The returns made to parliament of the sums expended for the relief of the poor, shall be taken as the ground on which the averages shall be calculated, s. 30. No union can now take place without the consent of the commissioners, s. 37. The commissioners may dissolve any union (except unions for the purpose of settlement or rating), or separate any parish, or add any to it, provided two-thirds of the guardians of such union concur therein. In such cases rules are to be adapted to its altered state, and the proportionate value to every parish of the common property, and the liabilities of each parish, are to be ascertained, and the sums due to be secured, s. 32.

Proportion to be paid by each parish.

Interest in common fund and liability to be ascertained.

If all the guardians agree, and the commissioners approve, all the parishes of a union may become one parish for the purpose of settlement. The agreement must be signed by all the guardians, and deposited with the clerk of the peace; from which time a settlement of any person in any one parish of the union, shall be considered (as between such parishes) a settlement in the union; and the expense of his maintenance, as well as that of ascertaining and litigating his settlement, shall be paid out of the common fund, s. 33.

United parishes may be one for the purpose of settlement;

The guardians may in the same way agree that, for the purpose of rating, the parishes of any such union shall be considered one parish; but in such cases all the parishes of the union must be situate within the same county, and under the jurisdiction of the same justices of the peace; and this agreement, when deposited with the clerk of the peace, cannot be revoked or annulled, s. 34. In such cases the guardians shall assess the value of the property in each parish; and all rates grounded on such assessment may be recovered, allowed, and appealed against, in the same manner as ordinary rates, s. 35. After the making of the common rate, the proportions fixed by s. 32 shall cease, and there shall be a common expenditure; if any parish at the time of such assessment is not represented by a guardian, it will not bind such parish unless a majority of the owners of property and rate-payers assent in a prescribed form, s. 36.

Parish without guardians.

One of the principal objects in the formation of unions is to provide "a well-managed workhouse, which should be the common workhouse of the incorporated district, to assign to those workhouses separate classes of poor, though composed of the poor of distinct parishes, each distinct parish paying to the support of the payments of the permanent workhouse establishment." (See post.) By s. 23 of 4 & 5 W. IV. c. 76, the commissioners are empowered, with the consent of a majority of the guardians of any union, or the majority of rate-payers and owners of property in any parish, to order the overseers or guardians of any parish or union not having a workhouse to build a workhouse, and to purchase or hire land or any building for that purpose; and, with the like consent, to order the overseers or guardians of any parish or union having a workhouse, or any buildings capable of being converted into a workhouse, to enlarge or alter the same, or to provide an additional workhouse of such size, description and plan as the commissioners shall deem proper; and the overseers and guardians are authorised to raise such sums of money as may be necessary for the purpose, by such means as are now by law given to overseers or guardians for purchasing or hiring land, or for building, hiring, and maintaining workhouses, or to borrow money for such purposes under this or any other act.

Workhouse.

Commissioners empowered to order workhouses to be built, hired altered, or enlarged, with consent, &c.

Sums to be raised for the purposes of building workhouses to be charged on poor rates; not to exceed one year's amount of poor rates.

And by s. 24, it is enacted, that the sum to be raised for such purposes shall not exceed the average annual amount of the poor rates; and any loan shall be repaid by annual instalments of not less than one-tenth, with interest: the money is to be charged on the poor rates.

By s. 25, it is enacted, that the commissioners may, without requiring

9. Of Unions. any consent, order the overseers or guardians of any parish or union having a workhouse, or any building capable of being converted into a workhouse, to enlarge or alter the same: provided, that the sums to be raised for such purposes, and charged upon any parish, shall not exceed fifty pounds, nor one-tenth of the average annual amount of the poor rates.

Power to order workhouses to be enlarged, without consent, but the sums not to exceed one tenth of one year's rates, or 50*l*. Commissioners have jurisdiction over a workhouse in one of two districts.

In Trewin v. Lewis, 4 M. & C. 249, it was determined that the commissioners had jurisdiction over a workhouse existing within the limits of one of two districts formed into the union.

10. Of Workhouses (a).

Workhouses before 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76.

9 G. I. c. 7, s. 4, two or more places may join, when one too small to procure a workhouse

When guardians or overseers are required to provide a workhouse, under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 4, they are by the same section authorised to exercise all the powers which by law had then been given for similar purposes. By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 4, a parish was enabled to purchase or hire a house for the maintenance and employment of the poor therein; and if any parish was too small to purchase or hire such house, then two or more parishes, with the consent of the inhabitants, and with the approbation of a justice, might unite in purchasing, hiring, or taking such house, for the purpose of keeping, maintaining, and employing the poor of the respective parishes.

Houses might be provided under Gilbert's Act.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 17, the guardians of the poor of such places as should adopt the provisions of the act, are directed to provide a house, with proper buildings and accommodations, and might purchase or rent land for that purpose; and fit up and dispose the same, with the approbation of the visitor, if any, at the expense of such places respectively, in the proportions therein mentioned; and provide materials necessary for the employment of the poor: and by s. 18, the houses to be built or provided must be situate within the parish for which it is used, if a single parish; and if several parishes are united, the house shall be built or provided within one of them, and not in any other parish, without the consent of three fourth parts, in number and value, of the owners or occupiers of lands, qualified

And to be situated in the parish (if one), or in one of them if united, except by consent.

(a) In Rex v. St. Peter and St. Paul, Bath, (see post, Certificate), Lord Mansfield observed, in allusion to workhouses; that "the want of workhouses was, however, soon felt as an inconvenience; they were, not long after, introduced by the legislature; and, if well regulated, a most desirable mode of relief they are; they supply comfort and accommodation for those who cannot work, and employment for those who can. In many instances which have chanced to fall within my knowledge, particularly on the Midland circuit, they have reduced the annual amount of the poor rates one-half. But this benefit could not within itself be received by every separate district: for where parishes were small, the expense of the necessary buildings was too heavy for them. This obstacle was foreseen by the legislature, and provided against accordingly. Though single parishes could only contract for these buildings within their own limits, yet where two unite, no restrictions were imposed, the power is general. It is obvious that the workhouse of a single parish must be most conveniently situated in that parish. Upon a similar principle, where many parishes were jointly concerned, the legislature did not require that the building should be raised in either of the confederate parishes; because in such case, a spot might be found in some other parish more central and better accommodated to their general convenience, than any part of their united district. The act, therefore, authorises the purchase anywhere: and when once the joint purchase is made, wherever it be, it becomes a part of the local system of each contracting parish; and if the poor will not go there, they are not entitled to relief. The same narrow spirit that has impeded the progress of this beneficial plan, now starts up again to limit this power, and almost to overthrow the act itself; which was calculated ultimately to reduce expense, as well as promote industry and encourage manufactures, by employing all the poor under the eye of one master." He then refers the objection as not warranted by the certificate act. (See post, and 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 3.)

as herein mentioned: and by s. 19, that all the houses, buildings, and lands, to be hired or rented under the authority of this act, shall be hired or rented in such manner, for such term or terms, and on such conditions, as are specified in the form of agreement contained in the schedule, No. IV.; and all such houses, buildings, and lands, shall be free from all parochial and parliamentary taxes, except such taxes, and to such amount, as they were assessed at the time they were first taken and applied for the purposes of this act: and by s. 27, the guardians, where any such poorhouse shall be provided, &c., may inclose from any waste or common land near thereto, with the consent of the Lord of the Manor, and the major part in value of the freeholders or persons having right of common thereupon, land not exceeding ten acres, for the purpose of building upon, or cultivating, the same, for the use of such poorhouse, and the poor persons.

On what condition to be rented, and how taxed and rated.

Enclosing commons for use of workhouses, &c. (a).

By the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 8, (the Select Vestry Act,) any parish not having a workhouse, or a workhouse insufficient or inconvenient, the overseers, by the direction of the inhabitants, may erect and build in such parish a suitable workhouse, or alter any messuage belonging to such parish for that purpose, and to purchase or take on lease any ground within the parish for the purpose: and by s. 10, in any parish in which no sufficient poorhouse or workhouse can be procured for the accommodation of the poor, the overseers, by the direction of the inhabitants, may purchase or hire any house for that purpose, in any adjoining parish, with the consent of two or more justices, such consent to be written upon or annexed to the agreement for purchasing or hiring such house, such house not to be situated more than three miles from the parish.

Power to build or enlarge workhouses under the Select Vestry Act.

Where no poorhouse, &c. can be procured in the parish, adjoining parish may be resorted to.

The guardians may sue and be sued in their corporate name, and hold lands or goods as a corporation. 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 16. See also the previous statute on the same subject, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 69.

The guardians are a body corporate.

Wherever a board is empowered to make an order, or prefer a complaint before justices, a copy of the minute of the resolution, sealed, and countersigned by the clerk, shall be sufficient proof thereof; and they may empower any officer of the board to take proceedings before justices, as if they did it in person. 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 17.

A minute of their proceedings evidence in certain cases.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 20, "when any such buildings shall be agreed to be erected, repaired, or fitted up, the expenses thereof, and of the purchase of the land necessary to be used for that purpose, shall be paid by the guardians of the poor, in the proportions to be settled and adjusted by the persons, and in the manner, directed by the agreement to be made as aforesaid; and the visitor and guardian, when such expenses, or the proportion thereof, shall amount to one hundred pounds or upwards, to borrow the same at interest, and secure such money by a charge upon the poor's rates, in sums not exceeding fifty pounds each, for the greater ease in discharging the same, in the form contained in the schedule, No. XI., or to the like effect; which charge shall continue upon the rates until the money so borrowed, and all interest, shall be fully paid: and the said guardians and their successors shall, and they are hereby required duly to pay and keep down the interest of such money so to be borrowed, as the same shall become due; and when the principal shall be called for, they may borrow it from some other person, and secure it by an assignment of such security indorsed on the back thereof, in the form contained in the said schedule, No. XIV., or to the like effect: and the visitor and guardian, in order to expedite such payments, shall, as soon as the savings in the poor's accounts shall amount to a sum sufficient to pay off and discharge one of the sums which shall have been borrowed, pay off and discharge such sum, and in like manner as to all succeeding savings, until the whole debt so contracted and secured shall be discharged. These assessments were to continue at the same rate as they were when the poorhouse was established; but this was repealed by the 43 Geo. III. c. 110, which, after reciting that doubts had been entertained as to the efficiency of the 42 Geo. III. c. 74, which had enabled the overseer to pay off one-twentieth every year, enacts, that such assessments shall and may from time to time be diminished to such amount as shall be deemed proper and necessary: provided always, that the guardians of the poor, from the time being, of every such parish, shall yearly and every year, pay off or provide for a twentieth part at least of any moneys which shall have been borrowed for the purpose aforesaid, under the powers of the said act of the twenty-second year of his present Majesty's reign, and also shall duly keep down the interest of all moneys which shall be so borrowed; anything in the said recited acts of the twenty-second and forty-second years of his present Majesty's reign, or either of them, contained to the contrary notwithstanding. (S. 2.)

One twentieth to be paid off every year (a).

59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 14, provides, "that no sum exceeding the amount of a rate or assessment at one shilling in the pound upon the annual value of the property in any parish assessable to the rates for the relief of the poor, shall be raised, expended, or applied, in any one year, in purchasing, building, and repairing any buildings, or land, by this act authorised to be purchased, taken, built, or repaired, and in fitting up, preparing, and furnishing such buildings, and in stocking such land, or for any one or more of such purposes or objects, unless the major part of the inhabitants and occupiers assessed to the relief of the poor, in vestry assembled, shall consent thereto, nor until two-third parts in value of all the inhabitants and occupiers so assessed as aforesaid (whether present in vestry or not) shall have also signed their consent thereto in the vestry or parish book."

Limiting the amount to be raised for buildings, and the purchase of lands, &c.

Sect. 15 enacts, "that in every case where the inhabitants of any parish shall in manner aforesaid consent that the greater sum than the amount of a rate or assessment of one shilling in the pound will raise, shall be expended in one year for all or any of such purposes and objects, it shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish, with the consent of such majority as aforesaid of the inhabitants and occupiers thereof, to be given and signed in the manner herein-before directed (after the rate or rates at or amounting to one shilling in the pound shall have been actually levied and applied for such purposes or some of them), to raise any additional sum or sums, by loan, or by sale of an annuity or of annuities on any life or lives, not being under the age of fifty years respectively, or for any certain term not exceeding fifteen years, so as the whole sum to be raised for all or any of such purposes by loan, and by the sale of annuities, or by either of such means, shall not be more than five shillings in the pound of or upon the true annual value of the property which shall in such parish be assessed to the poor's rates (every proposal for any such annuity being first stated to and approved by the inhabitants and occupiers of such parish in vestry assembled); and the churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall and they are hereby authorised, in the names and on the behalf of the inhabitants of the parish, to sign and execute securities for the money which shall be so borrowed, and for the annuities to be so granted; and by every such security to charge the produce of the future rates to be made for the relief of the poor of every such parish with the repayment of the principal sum which shall have been so borrowed, and the interest thereof, or with the payment of the annuity thereby granted (as the case may be), at and upon the days and times, and in such manner and proportions, as in and by the security for every such loan and annuity respectively shall be appointed and expressed for the payment thereof; and the money to be raised by such future rates shall be subject and liable to the payment of every such loan, and the interest thereof, and of every such annuity accordingly."

Power to raise further sums by loans, or by the sale of annuities.

Future rates charged with loans and annuities.

(a) The 36 Geo. III. c. 10, s. 1, after reciting that certain local acts had limited the annual sum to be raised for the poor rates, and that the high price of wheat rendered such sum insufficient, enabled overseers to raise more according to the price of wheat, so that the rate did not exceed double the amount of the then rate. This latter clause was however repealed by the 52 Geo. III. c. 73.

Sect. 16 provides, "that no greater sum in the whole than the amount of a rate or assessment at one shilling in the pound shall in any parish be charged upon the future rates thereof, unless two-third parts in value of the proprietors of messuages, land, and tenements within such parish (whether for estates of freehold or copyhold, or by virtue of leases for terms of not less than fifteen years absolute or determinable upon a life or lives), shall have consented to raise the money for which the charge or security shall purport to be made; such consents to be given by writing under the hands of all persons and corporations sole, and the consent of every corporation aggregate under the hand of the president, head, or chief member thereof for the time being, and the consents of femes covert, minors, insane persons, and persons out of the kingdom, by and under the hands of their respective husbands, guardians, committees, trustees, attorneys or agents, who are respectively authorized to give such consents, and the consent of the major part of the trustees for any charitable or other purpose shall be sufficient in respect of the trust estates." "From and after the appointment of such guardian as aforesaid, one or more of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of every parish, township, or place, which shall adopt the provisions of this act, who shall be approved at some public meeting to be holden as aforesaid, shall receive the money to be collected by virtue of such poor's rates, and apply the same in manner following; (that is to say), if such parish, township, or place, shall not be united with any other by virtue of this act, such churchwarden or overseer shall pay to the guardian of the poor such sums, from time to time, as he shall have occasion to employ for the purposes of discharging the bills, and all other necessary expenses attending such house or houses, and the poor belonging to such parish, township, or place, and shall take receipts from such guardian for all the money so paid, expressing in every such receipt the purposes for which such money is wanted; and if the said parish, township, or place, shall be united with any other parish, township or place, by virtue of this act, such churchwarden or overseer shall pay from time to time, to the treasurer of such united parishes, townships, or places, their due proportion and quota of the several expenses attending the poor and poorhouse therein, under the authority and according to the direction of this act, and take his receipts for such money; or, if it shall be found more convenient, he shall permit such treasurer, from time to time, to draw drafts upon him for such money, in the form contained in the said schedule No. VIII., and pay the same when they become due, specifying in every such receipt and draft the general purposes for which such money is to be applied; all which payments so to be respectively made, shall be allowed to the said churchwarden or overseer, in his accounts with the parish, township, or place, wherein such money shall be raised; and the accounts, as well of the said churchwarden or overseer, as of the said guardian, shall be examined at every monthly meeting, and shall be examined and passed quarterly by the visitor of such poorhouse, after they shall have been verified upon oath before a justice of the peace."

His duties.

Salary.

Treasurer of parish workhouse may be appointed with salary.

By the 41 Geo. III. c. 9, s. 3, "any two justices for the district or division within which any such parish shall be situate, to whom the expediency of such appointment shall be made appear, by application from two-thirds in number and value of the owners and occupiers of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, qualified as by the said act is directed, to appoint a treasurer for the poorhouse of such parish, with a salary not exceeding ten pounds, according to the form prescribed in the schedule to the said act, in the case of united parishes." and removable for misbehaviour, &c. (a).

Justices may appoint the keeper of the workhouse to be the governor.

By 50 Geo. III. c. 50, s. 3, "it shall be lawful for the justices in any such special session, upon the application of the overseers of the poor of any parish or place, or of the major part of them, to appoint the keeper of the workhouse of any such parish or place to be the governor thereof; and the keeper so appointed, so long as he shall continue keeper of such workhouse, until the justices in any such special session shall revoke such appointment, (which they are hereby empowered to do), shall have, use, and exercise the powers and perform the duties by the said act of the 22 Geo. III. c. 13, (vide post,) vested in and imposed upon governors of the poor."

Officers, how long to continue.

III. c. 83, s. 14, enacts "that the offices of guardian, governor, visitor, or treasurer, to which any person shall be appointed under the authority of this act, shall determine in Easter week next after the respective persons shall be appointed thereto, on the day upon which the public meeting for such parish, township, or place, shall be held there; when the persons who, according to this act, are qualified and have a right to recommend another person to the justices, to be appointed to such office, shall either agree with the persons who held the same, to continue in such office, or shall proceed to recommend others, in the manner hereinbefore directed, as if such person had died."

Special rules and forms to be observed.

Sect. 34 enacts, "that the rules, orders, and regulations, specified and contained in the schedule hereunto annexed, shall be duly observed and enforced at every poorhouse or workhouse to be provided by virtue of this act, with such additions as shall be made by the justices of the peace of the limit wherein such house or houses shall be situate, at some special session; provided that such additions shall not be contradictory to the rules, orders, and regulations established by this act, and provided that the same be not repealed by the justices at their quarter sessions of the peace; and, for the purpose of having them more generally known, and more strictly attended to, the governors of every such house or houses shall, and are hereby required to cause the same to be printed in plain legible characters, and fixed up in some conspicuous part of every such house or houses."

(For the forms of proceeding directed by the act, see the Appendix.)

Forms to be observed. Two justices in petty sessions may direct the regulations prescribed by recited act to be observed.

By 49 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 5, reciting "that whereas certain rules, orders, bye-laws, and regulations are appointed to be observed and enforced in every poorhouse established under the authority of 22 Geo. III.; and whereas it is expedient that such rules, orders, bye-laws, and regulations should be extended to poorhouses and workhouses established in other parishes; it is enacted, that any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace may at any petty sessions direct such rules, orders, bye-laws, and regulations, or any of them, to be observed and executed in any parishes within their respective divisions or districts, as fully as in those incorporated by the said act.

c. 83, for the government of poorhouses and workhouses, should be extended to parishes which shall not have adopted the provisions of the said acts, enacts, "that any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, within their respective limits, may at any special session direct the rules, orders, and regulations, in the schedule to the said act of the 22 Geo. III. specified and contained, or any of them, with such additions as shall be made by such justices, to be observed and enforced in the workhouses or poorhouses, or any houses set apart for that purpose, although there should be no master or mistress to superintend the same, of any parish or place within their respective divisions or districts, as fully and effectually as the rules and orders by the said act of the 22 Geo. III. established, are to be observed and enforced within the parishes adopting the provisions of the same act; and that it shall be lawful for two or more such justices in any special session, from time to time as they shall see occasion, to add to and alter the rules, orders, and regulations which shall at any special sessions have been made and ordered to be observed; provided that no addition or alteration to be made by such justices shall be contradictory to the rules, orders, and regulations established by the said act of the 22 Geo. III., and provided that the same shall not be repealed by the justices at their quarter sessions of the peace; and for enforcing and carrying into execution such rules, orders, and regulations, in every parish and place where the same shall be established by virtue of this act, every justice of the peace shall for that purpose have the powers by the said act of the 22 Geo. By 50 Geo. III. c. 50, s. 5, "any breach of the rules and orders to be put in force by virtue of this act, shall be punished in such manner as is by the said act directed for the breach of the rules and orders to be enforced under the before-recited act of 22 Geo. III. c. 83." [See 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 7, post, p. 58.]

Breach of rules under this act to be punished.

No additions or alterations to the rules contained in schedule of 22 Geo. III. can be made without the consent of the commissioners, but when confirmed by them, they will be valid, and no justice can repeal them, 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 22; and by s. 42 the commissioners may make rules and regulations to be observed at every workhouse already established, or hereafter to be established for the government thereof, and the nature and amount of the relief to be given to, and the labour to be exacted from the persons relieved, and the preservation therein of good order, and from time to time to alter the same, and make new; and to alter, at their discretion, any of the rules and regulations contained in the schedule to the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and also to alter or rescind any rules and regulations heretofore made in pursuance of the said act, or any local act relating to workhouses or the relief of the poor; and all rules made by the commissioners shall be binding, as if the same were specifically embodied in this act.

Commissioners may make rules, &c. for present or future workhouses, and vary bye-laws already in force or to be made hereafter.

Rex v. Poor-Law Commissioners, (Re Alstonefield), 3 P. & D. 59; 11 A. & E. 559. The facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of the court, as delivered by Lord Denman:—This was a rule obtained by the Alstonefield corporation to try the validity of an order of the poor law commissioners, and the principal objections to it were founded on those parts which directed the appointment of an auditor or clerk. The corporation was formed under Gilbert's Act, 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and included under its management forty-two parishes. It was not disputed that the authority of the commissioners extended to direct the appointment of such officers as those above-named in unions formed by themselves, but it was urged that the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, expressly saved the operation of the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, in all matters not specifically altered or subjected to the control of the commissioners, and that the appointments in question fell within that rule, and were also inconsistent with the provisions of the 22 Geo. III. c. 83. Under that act, the overseers of each parish within the

The commissioners have power to order the appointment of an auditor and clerk in Unions under Gilbert's Act.

But an order prescribing the duties of a clerk, inter alia, to collect statistical information on the public service, is bad, and being bad in part is bad altogether.

union pay to the treasurer of such union, out of the poor rate, the parish quota towards the expenses attending the poor and the poorhouse. The treasurer disburses this money under the orders of the guardians, and an officer called the visitor settles and adjusts the accounts between the guardians and the treasurer—"if any question or dispute shall arise respecting the same:" in addition to this, one of two accounts, which by s. 24 the treasurer is to submit to the guardians monthly, an account, viz., "of the victuals, beer, firing, and other necessaries for the use and maintenance of the poor and of the governor at the house, and all other incidental expenses, must, after it has been agreed to and signed by the guardians," be inspected by the visitor, if not a guardian, and allowed by him, if he shall approve thereof. The treasurer is also, by s. 12, to make out an annual account of the expenses of the union house, and the earnings of the inmates, which is to be laid before the visitor and signified under his hand, if he approves the same, and submitted to the quarter sessions for their inspection. These are the provisions made by the act for the discharge of the duties of an auditor; and we cannot but think that, even with reference to the expenditure under the former system for the relief of the poor, these provisions were very inadequate. So long as the guardians and the treasurer are agreed upon the general accounts of the latter, the visitor has no authority to interfere at all. And when he interposes, it does not appear that he has any power to control the expenditure, or question the orders of the guardians; his interference seems to be limited to ascertaining the accuracy of the sums and the accordance of the items with their orders. In effect, therefore, the visitor exercises no control over those with whom the expenditure originates: he may interfere to see that the treasurer's accounts are correct, but has no power to question the lawfulness of the objects on which the guardians may have directed the money to be expended. But, whatever might have been thought of the sufficiency of the visitor as an auditor, before the recent change in the poor law, as the guardians are now to execute their duties "under the control and subject to the rules, orders, and regulations of the poor law commissioners," (see 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 21,) and as their expenditure and mode of accounting have been by some of such rules, which are unquestionably binding, placed under new restraints, a necessity has arisen for an inspection and audit of their accounts, which it is certain the visitor has no authority to institute. If, therefore, the commissioners have the power to direct the appointment of any officers in such a union, no one can doubt the propriety of their doing so in the case of an auditor. Sect. 46 has words large enough to extend to this union, and in terms embraces the case of an officer for the auditing, allowing, or disallowing of accounts. Nor is there anything in this inconsistent with the provisions of Gilbert's Act—the guardians, indeed, are subjected to a new control, and are subjected to new duties, but this arises from the express provisions of s. 21; these duties occasion a necessity for an auditor. The former visitor will continue to perform his duty, but is incompetent to the discharge of that of auditor; and the commissioners supply the want under the authority given them by s. 46. The order in question therefore seems to us free from all objection on this head. As an auditor is clearly a proper officer in such a union as that under consideration, so it is impossible to read the order in question, which regulates, for the future, the manner in which the guardians are to manage its affairs, without feeling that it is necessary for them to have the assistance of an intelligent clerk. It is stated that at present the treasurer discharges the duties of that office not by virtue of any independent appointment as clerk, but as treasurer under the Gilbert Act. We turn therefore to s. 12 of the act, which defines his duties, but these are confined to the receipt and payment of moneys, and the keeping of accounts, such as we have before stated. We may form some notion of the amount of his contemplated labours from the fact that the section limits his salary to 10*l.* a-year. It is clear that this is not such a clerk as is now necessary, and equally so that the commissioners have authority to appoint such an officer in this union. The order describes his duties, and they make it clear that he is assisting in the administration of the relief and employment of the poor, and in otherwise carrying the provisions of the new poor law act into execution. If, therefore, he had been appointed for the discharge only of duties (a) which fell within this definition, we should have thought that the order was free from objection on this head also; but we regret to find that other duties are imposed upon him, which appear to us clearly to go beyond the limits of the Poor Law Amendment Act; and it has not been suggested to us that the commissioners derive any authority from any other source to impose them. The most obvious of these are specified in "the preparing or superintending the preparation, and taking measures for ensuring the prompt and correct return of all such statistical information and reports as may be required for the public service." This may be in itself very desirable, but it must lead to expense in the way of salary and contingencies, which the commissioners have no right to impose on the parishes forming the union, and is too remotely and indirectly, if at all, connected with the object of the Poor Law Amendment Act to be within their jurisdiction. Upon this ground we think the order, which is entire, cannot be

(a) The following were prescribed as the duties of the clerk:—"To attend all meetings of the guardians, and to enter punctually in the minute-book the minutes of all the proceedings at every such meeting, and to submit such minutes to the presiding chairman of the same for his signature. To keep minutes of all matters, the consideration whereof has been deferred, of all business or orders unexecuted, and duly and punctually to submit the same to the consideration of the guardians. To conduct the correspondence of the guardians according to their directions, and to keep copies of all letters sent, and preserve all letters received, and all books and letters belonging to the incorporation, in convenient order for reference, in some office or room belonging to the guardians. To direct the services of notices, to communicate to the several officers and persons engaged in the administration of relief within the incorporation all orders and directions of the poor law commissioners, or of the guardians; and, so far as may be, to give such instructions as may be requisite for the prompt and correct execution of all such orders and directions, and to examine and report on any neglect or failure therein which might come to his knowledge. To prepare, or superintend the preparation, and take measures for ensuring the correct and prompt return of all such statistical information and reports as may be required for the public service. At every meeting of the guardians to take down the names of all the guardians who attend such meeting; of all the guardians who send substitutes, together with the name and condition of each person so sent, and the alleged reason of the non-attendance of the guardian sending him; and of all the guardians who by non-attendance have incurred the penalty imposed by the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 26."

The following were prescribed as the duties of the auditor:—"To audit the accounts of the incorporation, and of the several parishes comprised therein, at proper periods. To examine whether the expenditure in all cases is such as might lawfully be made, and to strike out such payments and charges as are not authorised by some provision of the law, or by virtue of the orders, rules, and regulations of the poor law commissioners. To see that the accounts are presented in the proper form, and that the particular items of receipt and expenditure are stated in detail, and supported by adequate vouchers of receipt and authority for payments; and that all sums received, or which ought to have been received, are brought into account." He was also required to give to the clerk to the board of guardians, to the treasurer, and to the officers of the several parishes, notice of the time of auditing the accounts; and for that purpose to fix some day within thirty days after Lady-day, Midsummer-day, Michaelmas-day, and Christmas-day respectively. He was also to receive the objections in writing of any rate-payer to the accounts, and to decide upon them; to examine officers of the incorporation and parishes therein respecting their accounts, and any other persons who could supply information on the subject; and, if he should be of opinion that any money or other property of the incorporation, or of any parish therein, had been embezzled or wilfully wasted or misapplied by any officer or person accounting, to collect the necessary evidence and submit a statement of it to the board of guardians, in order that they might proceed against the offender; and to examine, correct, and sign the quarterly abstracts; and report to the commissioners any facts which he should deem important to the interests of the incorporation.

supported; and we have said so much on the former objection, which we hold to be untenable, as well as on this which we sustain, for the purpose of pointing out in what way we think the jurisdiction of the commissioners may be legally as well as profitably exercised within the union, which we should hope would lead to an accommodation between them and the officers of the union. Rule absolute.

JUSTICES AND OTHERS VISITING WORKHOUSES.

Justices empowered to see bye-laws enforced, and to visit workhouses, pursuant to 30 G. 3, c. 49.

By 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, It is enacted, that justices may inspect and examine the workhouses, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the rules or bye-laws have been duly observed, as well as for such other purposes as justices are now authorised to visit workhouses under 30 Geo. III. c. 49; and if such rules or bye-laws have not been duly observed, such justice may summon the party offending before any two justices to answer the complaint; and upon conviction the party so offending shall be liable to such penalties and punishments as are hereinafter prescribed against parties wilfully neglecting or disobeying the rules of the commissioners. Where no rules or byelaws shall have been directed by the commissioners to be observed in the workhouse, this act shall not prevent any justice, physician, surgeon, or apothecary, or the officiating clergyman of any parish, from visiting such workhouse, and examining and certifying the condition of the same and of the poor therein, in such manner as any of them are authorised to do by the 30 Geo. III. c. 49.

The power given to Justices, &c. to visit workhouses reserved where commissioners' rules, &c. are not in force.

Justices, clergymen, &c may visit parish workhouses,

By 30 Geo. III. c. 49, s. 1, "it shall and may be lawful to and for any of his Majesty's justices of the peace, or any physician, surgeon, or apothecary, for that purpose authorised by warrant under the hand and seal of any such justice or justices, or for the officiating clergyman (a) of the parish or place, duly authorised as aforesaid, at all times, in the day time, to visit any parish workhouse, or house kept or provided for the maintenance of the poor of any parish or place, within the county, riding, liberty, or division, wherein such justice or justices shall be resident and shall have jurisdiction, to examine into the state and condition of the poor people therein, and the food, clothing, and bedding of such poor people, and the state and condition of such house or houses; and if upon any such visitation, the said justice or justices, or persons duly authorised as aforesaid, shall find any cause or occasion of complaint, that then and in such case such justice or justices, or persons duly authorised as aforesaid, shall, and they are hereby authorised and empowered, if he or they shall think fit, to certify the state and condition of such workhouse or poorhouse, and the state of the poor therein, and of their food, clothing, and bedding, to the next quarter-sessions of the peace to be held for such county, riding, liberty, or division, wherein such workhouse or poorhouse shall be situate, under his or their hands and seals respectively; and such justice or justices, or other persons duly authorised as aforesaid, shall cause the overseers of the poor, or master or governor of the said workhouse or poorhouse of such parish or place, to be summoned to appear at the same sessions to answer such complaint; and the justices assembled at such quarter sessions, on hearing the parties on any such complaint, shall and may, and they are hereby authorised to make such orders and regulations, for the removing of any cause of complaint contained in such certificate as aforesaid, as to them shall seem meet; and all the parties concerned shall, and they are hereby required to abide by and perform such orders and regulations as shall be so made by the justices at the said sessions."

Admission of Paupers into Workhouse.

22 Geo. III. c. 83, ss. 35. 37. "That it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace, on complaint made upon oath, by or on the behalf of any poor person belonging to any parish, township, or place, that the guardian, upon application made to him, hath refused such poor person proper relief, and after inquiring into the condition and circumstance of such poor person upon oath, either to order him or her, by writing under the hand of such justice, some weekly or other relief, or direct such guardian to send such poor person to the poorhouse, in case he or she shall appear a fit object to be kept and provided for there, according to the true intent and construction of this act; which order shall be complied with, or sufficient cause shown to the contrary, before such justice, by such guardian, within two days after he shall receive the same; and if any guardian shall, upon due notice of any such order, refuse or neglect to obey the same, he shall, for every such refusal or neglect, forfeit the sum of five pounds. And be it further enacted, that out of the penalty hereby inflicted upon the guardian, for disobeying the order of a justice of the peace for the relief and maintenance of any poor person, so much thereof as the justices of the peace who shall convict such offender shall direct to be paid to such poor person to whom such relief was ordered, shall be paid to him or her accordingly, and the remainder applied in such manner as the other penalties are hereby directed to be disposed of."

Remedy if the complainant is able and willing to work.

But if it appear that the complainant is an idle person, the justice may commit him.

Sect. 35. "Or if it shall appear to such justice, that the person so complaining, or on whose behalf such complaint is made, is able and willing to work, but wants employment, in that case it shall and may be lawful for such justice to order the guardian to procure him or her maintenance and employment in the manner hereinbefore directed; and if any guardian shall, upon due notice of any such order, refuse or neglect to obey the same, he shall, for every such refusal or neglect, forfeit the sum of five pounds. Or if it shall appear to such justice that the person making such complaint, or on whose behalf such complaint is made, is an idle or disorderly person, and has not used proper means to get employment, it shall and may be lawful for the justice, after examining such person, and hearing the whole circumstances of the case, to commit such person to the house of correction for any time not exceeding three calendar months, nor less than one calendar month; or if it shall appear to such justice, upon inquiry as aforesaid, that the husband or father of such person making complaint, or on whose behalf complaint shall be so made, for want of relief, is an idle or disorderly person, able to work, but by his neglect of work, or for want of seeking employment, or by spending the money he earns in alehouses, or places of bad repute, does not maintain his wife or children, and suffers them to be reduced to want, it shall and may be lawful for such justice of the peace, in like manner, to commit the husband of such poor woman, or the father of such poor child or children, to the house of correction, for any time not exceeding three calendar months, nor less than one calendar month."

Application to be made first to guardian, then to the visitor, before a justice makes any order.

Sect. 36. "Provided, that when any complaint or application shall be made to a justice of the peace, for the relief of any poor person, within any parish, township, or place, for which a visitor shall be appointed, such justice shall not summon the guardian to appear before him, unless application shall have been first made, by the person so complaining, to the guardian, and if he refuses redress, to the visitor (it being part of his duty to adjust matters of that sort), who shall order relief if he thinks it necessary, either within or out of the poorhouse as he shall judge right; but if sufficient relief shall not be so given or ordered, the poor person complaining, or on whose behalf such complaint shall be made, shall be redressed by such justice in the manner hereinbefore directed." But 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 27, enacts "that if it shall be made to appear to any justice to whom any such complaint or application for relief shall be made, that the visitor of the parish or united parishes from which relief shall be sought is absent from home, or is resident more than six miles from the place of abode of the complainant, and that application for relief hath been made to the guardian, and hath been refused, it shall be lawful for such justice to summon the guardian to appear before him to answer such complaint, and to proceed thereon, and make such order therein, as the case shall require, in like manner as in cases where application hath been made to the visitor, in the manner by the said act directed."

The visitor and not the justice is to determine whether relief shall be given in or out of the poorhouse.

Rex v. Laughton, 2 M. & Sel. 324. The defendant having been convicted by two justices at the special sessions, and fined 30*s.* for disobeying an order of a justice, under 33 Geo. III. c. 55, for the payment of 4*s.* for the relief of Mary Lewis and her children, appealed to the sessions. The conviction was confirmed. Case:—The parish of West Walton is incorporated under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, for the maintenance of its poor; and has a poorhouse fitted up for the reception of the poor. Application for relief being made by M. Lewis for herself and her two children, the guardian and the visitor directed them to be received into the poorhouse; whereupon the justice made the above order, directing a pecuniary relief out of the poorhouse. On the appeal, the question stated for the opinion of the Court was, "whether the magistrate had power and authority, under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, to make the said order for the pecuniary relief of the paupers out of the poorhouse?"—Lord Ellenborough, C. J. The justice does not affect to determine upon the ground of its being a qualified refusal of relief. If proper relief has not been refused, the justice has not any jurisdiction. The visitor, to whom it is referred by law, as a part of his duty, to say whether the relief shall be given in or out of the poorhouse, has decided that question, and has determined it to be proper relief. If it depended on the choice of the pauper, the poorhouse would be useless. The visitor having adjusted it, the matter was at an end, and not within the cognizance of the magistrate, and therefore the infliction of this penalty was not warranted.—Le Blanc, J. The 7th section of the statute, which has been relied on in argument as putting the guardian on the footing of an overseer, must be taken with reference to the general policy of the act in which it is contained; and when s. 36 of the same act directs that application shall be made both to the guardian and visitor, before any application is made to a justice, and when it adds that it is the duty of the visitor to adjust matters of that sort, that is, whether it is most proper to relieve in or out of the poorhouse, the liability of the guardian as overseer, imposed by s. 7, must be controlled by the subsequent clause. The visitor must always determine whether the party is to be relieved in or out of the poorhouse, otherwise the whole policy of the act would be avoided.—Bayley and Dampier, Js., concurred. Order of sessions quashed. See Rex v. Keer, 5 T. R. 159.

The guardians shall pay off a twentieth part of the borrowed money, under 22 Geo. 3, c. 83.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 28, "that every person or persons, to be sent to any house or houses to be provided under the authority of this act, shall, at the time of his or her entering such house, deliver, or cause to be delivered, to the governor thereof, or to his assistant, if any, an order, signed by one of the guardians of the poor of the parish, township, or place from which such person shall come, for the admission of such person or persons, in the form or to the effect contained in the said schedule, No. XII.; which order shall be carefully kept by the governor, and entered by him in a book to be provided for that purpose."

No lunatic, insane person, or dangerous idiot, to be detained in a workhouse more than fourteen days.

4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 45, enacts "that nothing in this act contained shall authorise the detention in any workhouse of any dangerous lunatic, insane person, or idiot, for any longer period than fourteen days; and every person wilfully detaining in any workhouse any such lunatic, insane person, or idiot, for more than fourteen days, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any place duly licensed for the reception of lunatics and other insane persons, or to any workhouse being also a county lunatic asylum."

Idle persons neglecting to provide for their families may be prosecuted.

22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 31, "that all idle or disorderly persons, who are able, but unwilling, to work or maintain themselves and their families, shall be prosecuted by the guardians of the poor of the several parishes, townships, and places wherein they reside, and punished in such manner as idle and disorderly persons are directed to be by the statute made in the seventeenth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second; and if any guardian shall neglect to make complaint thereof, against every such person or persons, to some neighbouring justices of the peace, within ten days after it shall come to his knowledge, he shall, for every such neglect, forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds, nor less than twenty shillings, one moiety whereof, when recovered, shall be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to be disposed of as the other forfeitures are hereinafter directed to be applied."

Persons not able to get employment, may be provided therewith by guardians.

Sect. 32. "That where there shall be, in any parish, township, or place, any poor persons who shall be able and willing to work, but who cannot get employment, it shall and may be lawful for the guardian of the poor of such parish, township, or place, and he is hereby required, on application made to him by or on behalf of such poor person, to agree for the labour of such poor person or persons, at any work or employment suited to his or her strength and capacity, in any parish, township, or place, near the place of his or her residence, and to maintain, or cause such person or persons to be properly maintained, lodged, and provided for, until such employment shall be procured, and during the time of such work, and to receive the money to be earned by such work or labour, and apply it in such maintenance, as far as the same will go, and make up the deficiency, if any; and if the same shall happen to exceed the money expended in such maintenance, to account for the surplus, which shall afterwards, within one calendar month, be given to such poor person or persons who shall have earned such money, if no further expenses shall be then incurred on his or her account to exhaust the same. And in case such poor person or persons shall refuse to work, or run away from such work or employment, complaint shall be made thereof by the guardian to some justice or justices of the peace in or near the said parish, township, or place; who shall inquire into the same upon oath, and on conviction punish such offender or offenders, by committing him, her, or them to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months, nor less than one calendar month."

Clothing suitable to be provided by guardians.

Sect. 33. "That the guardian of the poor for any parish, township, or place, adopting the provisions of this act as aforesaid, shall provide, at the expense of such parish, township, or place, suitable and necessary clothing for the persons sent by him to such poorhouse as aforesaid; and in case of his neglect so to do, the governor or one of the guardians of every such house shall make complaint thereof to some neighbouring justice of the peace, who shall summon the guardian so making neglect to appear before him to answer the same complaint, and direct him to provide such clothing as shall to such justice appear necessary; and if such guardian shall make default in providing such clothing, within ten days after such direction, it shall and may be lawful for such justice of the peace to direct the governor of such poorhouse, or the guardian so making such complaint, to provide the same, and to demand from such guardian so making neglect, the charges and expenses of such clothing; and in default of payment thereof, upon demand made, it shall and may be lawful for such justice or justices of the peace to levy the same, and the costs and charges attending the recovery thereof, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of every such guardian so making default."

Admission of Paupers into Workhouse.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 24, "that the poor persons who shall be sent to every such house, by virtue and under the authority of this act, shall be maintained therein at the general expense of the respective parishes, townships, and places, so adopting the provisions of this act as aforesaid, according to the terms, and in the proportions, directed and prescribed by this act. And that the treasurer, with the assistance of the governor of every such house, to be appointed as aforesaid, shall provide all fit and necessary provisions for the maintenance of such poor, and keep an account thereof."

9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 4. "And if any poor person of any parish, or united parishes, &c., where such house shall be, shall refuse to be lodged, kept, or maintained in such house or houses, he shall be put out of the parish book, and shall not be entitled to ask or receive relief from the churchwardens and overseers."

56 Geo. III. c. 129 (a), enacts "that all enactments and provisions contained in any act or acts of parliament since the commencement of the reign of his late Majesty King George the First, whereby any poor person or persons, other than such as shall actually apply for and receive parochial relief, are compelled or made compellable to go or remain in any house of industry or workhouse; or whereby any poor person or persons may be detained or kept in any house of industry or workhouse; at the discretion of the governors or directors thereof, or of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any district, parish, township, or hamlet, after such persons are capable of maintaining themselves; or whereby any poor person or persons may be compelled to remain in any house of industry or workhouse, until the charges and expenses to which any district, parish, township, or hamlet may have been put or become liable or chargeable for the maintenance or support of such poor person or persons, or any of his or her family, shall be repaid or reimbursed or satisfied by the earnings or labour of such poor person or persons; or whereby any poor child or children whomsoever is or are rendered liable to be apprenticed to any governor, director, or master of any such house of industry or workhouse; or whereby any parish, township, or hamlet, at a greater distance than ten miles from such house of industry or workhouse, shall hereafter be empowered or authorised to become contributors to, or to take the benefit of such house of industry or workhouse; or whereby any directors, governors, guardians, or masters of any such house of industry or workhouse, are authorised or empowered to hire out any poor person or persons of full age, or to contract or agree with any person or persons to have and take the profit of the labour of such poor person or persons; shall be wholly and severally, and the same are hereby wholly and severally repealed.

Acts passed since the beginning of the reign of Geo. I. compelling poor not applying for relief to go to the workhouse; or to remain there; or rendering them liable to be apprenticed to governor, &c.; or that distinct parishes shall not unite; or contracting for their labour; repealed.

Rex v. Carlisle (cited in Rex v. Haigh, p. 72,) 2 Nol. P. L. 357. The defendant was indicted for disobeying an order of sessions. Jane Carr, the pauper, having been delivered of two bastard children, was taken into the poorhouse of the parish of St. Mary's in Carlisle, which had been there established according to the 9 Geo. I. c. 7. There she and her children were maintained for a year and a half. Then the parish officers agreed to allow her 1s. a week towards the maintenance of herself and children. After six months they refused to continue the payment, but offered to take her and her children again into the poorhouse. She prayed them to take one child, and said she would take care of the other. That being refused, she offered to take 6*d.* a week. But the parish officers persisted in giving her no relief, unless she would come again into the poorhouse. Whereupon she applied to the quarter sessions, who made an order on the overseers to pay her 1*s.* a week towards the maintenance of herself and her two bastard children, until further order. The defendant, one of the overseers, refused, but at the same time offered (as he had done several times before) to take her and her children into the poorhouse. The question reserved at the assizes for the opinion of the judges was, "whether, under these circumstances, the defendant was by law empowered to refuse payment of such weekly allowance?" And the case being laid before the judges, they were all of opinion, upon considering the words of the statute, that, under the circumstances of this case, the defendant was by law empowered to refuse payment of such weekly allowance.

When a mother asks for relief for her bastard child only, and not for herself, she cannot be compelled to go into the workhouse, nor can the overseers refuse relief to the child. (a)

Rex v. Haigh, 3 T. R. 637. The defendants were indicted for disobeying an order of a justice, for the payment of a weekly sum to Mary Gray for the maintenance of her bastard child. It appeared that the mother applied for relief for her child only; and the question was, "whether the defendants were bound to obey the order, as the mother of the child refused to go into the workhouse?"—Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The only question is, for whom was the relief asked? for such person only is, according to the terms of this act of parliament, (9 Geo. I. c. 7,) to be sent to the workhouse. It is stated that the child only wanted relief: the application indeed was made by the mother, but it was not on her own account, but for her child only, who was of too tender an age to apply herself. This is, therefore, very distinguishable from Rex v. Carlisle, where the relief was asked both for the parent and the child. It would be extremely hard, and contrary to the spirit and words of this act of parliament, if, when all the children of a family, except one, were capable of supporting themselves, and that one was unable to maintain itself, and was under the necessity of receiving relief, the whole family were to be sent to the workhouse."

Whether a mother asking relief for her children be compellable to go with them to the poorhouse.

Rex v. North Shields, Doug. 331; Cald. 68. By order of a justice the overseers of North Shields were directed to pay to Ann, wife of Thomas Irwin, 2*s.* 6*d.* weekly, until such time as they should be otherwise ordered, for the support of her three children by her said husband; one aged six years, one three, and one fourteen months. The overseers appealed. Order confirmed. Case:—There was, at the time of making the order, within the township, a poorhouse, established according to the 9 Geo. I. c. 7, into which the parish officers were willing to receive the pauper, with her three children, and offered so to do; but she refused to go into the house with them. She had another child of eight years of age, for whom she did not seek relief; neither did she seek relief for herself. Her husband was a mariner, and prisoner in France, and the order stated her inability to provide for the said three children. These children, being nurse-children, the opinion of the sessions was, that they ought not to be separated from their mother, and that the mother, not seeking relief herself, was not compellable to go into the workhouse. It was urged that in Rex v. Carlisle, the relief asked, and granted by the order, was partly personal, and therefore it was distinguishable from this case, and within the statute.—Willes, J., said, this was a humane order, and he wished to support it. He did not think the words of the act in the way, and inclined to adopt the distinction made by the counsel between this case and that of Rex v. Carlisle.—Ashurst, J., thought the act extended to the present case: that maintenance for the children was relief to the mother. There might be great inconvenience if the Court were to adopt the other construction. One object of the statute was to encourage industry, by holding out the disgrace of going into a workhouse; and if parents could obtain a maintenance for their children without being compellable to go to the workhouse, idleness would be thereby promoted among artificers and manufacturers.—Buller, J., on the contrary, thought the distinction between this case and that of Rex v. Carlisle to be clear. The act was meant in ease of parishes; but the effect would be quite the reverse, if, when one of a numerous family wants relief, the whole must go to the parish workhouse; and, on the other hand, that the parish is not entitled to the labour of a whole family, because one of them might want relief.—The case stood over, and the order of sessions was afterwards quashed on another point, and the original order confirmed.

Parish officers may cause goods, &c. to be marked.

Sect. 2 enacts "that the overseers of the poor, or other person or persons who may be appointed for the ordering, regulating, managing, or providing for the poor of any parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, jointly with or independent of such overseers of the poor, shall or may, and they are hereby authorised and empowered to cause all such goods, chattels, furniture, clothes, linen, wearing apparel, tools, utensils, materials, and things capable of being marked, and from time to time belonging to such overseers or other person or persons, to be marked, stamped, or branded with the word 'workhouse,' and such other mark or marks as they shall think proper for identifying the parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, by which the same shall have been provided: And if any pawnbroker or other person or persons shall knowingly take in pawn, buy, exchange, or receive any goods, chattels, furniture, clothes, linen, wearing apparel, tools, utensils, materials, and things provided for the use of any of the poor who are or shall be received into the workhouse of any parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, or to whom the same shall have been given by the overseers of the poor, or other such person or persons as aforesaid, appointed as aforesaid, of or for any such parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, or any of them, or any of the goods or materials carried into any such workhouse or workhouses, to be wrought up, manufactured, or used by the poor there, or any of the goods or furniture of such workhouse or workhouses: or shall receive or buy any of the provisions allotted to or provided for the poor of such workhouse or workhouses, or shall be aiding or assisting therein: or if any person or persons shall cause such mark or stamp, marks or stamps as aforesaid, to be obliterated or defaced, every person so offending shall forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding the sum of five pounds, nor less than one pound, upon conviction thereof, either by the confession of such person or persons, or by the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, before any one or more of his majesty's justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, or division wherein the offence or offences shall be committed; one moiety of which said penalty shall go to the informer or informers, and the other moiety shall go and be paid to the overseers of the poor of the parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places to which such articles or things may belong, for the use of the poor of such parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places; and in case any person or persons who shall be convicted as aforesaid, shall not pay such penalty or penalties upon conviction, then and in such case such justice or justices of the peace shall and may and is and are hereby required to commit such offender or offenders to the common gaol or house of correction, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, for any space of time not exceeding two calendar months: and if any person or persons shall desert or run away from any workhouse or workhouses, and carry away with him, her, or

II. Relief of the Poor out of the Workhouse.

The commissioners have the regulation generally of the relief.

The authority of the commissioners in regulating the relief of the poor is now so general, that the present state of the law deserves consideration before entering on the former law on this subject. The power of the commissioners is general, but they are by the 15th section of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, prevented from interfering in any individual case for the purpose of giving relief. Subject to their control, the 54th section of that statute (a) enacts, that the ordering, giving, and directing of all relief to the poor of any parish which, according to the provisions of any of the said recited acts (b), or of the 1 & 2 Will. IV. "for the better regulating of Vestries," or of this act, or of any local acts, shall be under the government and control of any guardians of the poor, or of any select vestry, and whether forming part of any union or incorporation or not (but subject in all cases to the powers of the commissioners), shall belong exclusively to such guardians of the poor or select vestry, according to the respective provisions of the acts under which they are appointed; and no overseer shall give any relief or allowance than such as shall be ordered by such guardians or select vestry, except in cases of sudden and urgent necessity; in which cases he is hereby required to give such temporary relief in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money, and whether the applicant be settled in the parish or not: provided, that in case such overseer shall neglect to give such necessary relief in any such case of necessity to poor persons not settled nor usually residing in the parish to which such overseer belongs, any justice may order the overseer to give such temporary relief in articles of absolute necesssity, but not in money; and in case such overseer shall disobey such order, he shall, on conviction before two justices, forfeit any sum not exceeding five pounds; provided always, that any justice of the peace shall be empowered to give a similar order for medical relief (only) to any parishioner, as well as out-parishioner, where any case of sudden and dangerous illness may require it; and any overseer shall be liable to the same penalties as aforesaid for disobeying such order; but it shall not be lawful for any justice to order relief to any person from the poor rates except as hereinbefore provided.

11. Relief of Poor out of Workhouse.

They cannot order relief in an individual case.

No relief to be in future given, except by guardians, &c.; or select vestry;

except articles of necessity in cases of sudden necessity.

When upon neglect of overseer a justice may order some relief to persons not settled nor usually residing.

Any justice may give order for medical relief in dangerous illness.

Sect. 27. "That in any union which may be formed under this act, it shall be lawful for any two of his Majesty's justices of the peace usually acting for the district wherein such union may be situated, at their just and proper discretion, to direct, by order under their hands and seals, that relief shall be given to any adult person who shall, from old age or infirmity of body, be wholly unable to work, without requiring that such person shall reside in any workhouse: provided always, that one of such justices shall certify in such order, of his own knowledge, that such person is wholly unable to work, as aforesaid; and provided further, that such person shall be lawfully entitled to relief in such union, and shall desire to receive the same out of a workhouse."

Justices may order out-door relief to aged and infirm persons wholly unable to work.

Sect. 52 recites, that a practice had obtained of giving relief to persons or their families who, at the time, were in the employment of individuals, and the relief of the able-bodied and their families is in many places administered in modes productive of evil in other respects: and whereas difficulty may arise in case any immediate and universal remedy is attempted to be applied in the matters aforesaid; and enacts, that it shall be lawful for the commissioners to order to what extent and for what period the relief to be given to able-bodied persons or to their families in any particular parish or union may be administered out of the workhouse, by payments in money, or with food or clothing in kind, and all relief given contrary to such orders is unlawful, and shall be disallowed in the accounts; provided, that in case the overseers or guardians, upon consideration of the special circumstances of such parish or union, or of any person or class of persons therein, be of opinion that the application of such orders at the time or in the manner prescribed by the commissioners, would be inexpedient, it shall be lawful for such overseers or guardians to delay the operation of such orders for thirty days, to be reckoned from the day of the receipt of such orders; and such overseers or guardians shall, twenty days at the least before the expiration of such thirty days, make report of such special circumstances to the commissioners; and all relief which shall be given by such overseers or guardians, before an answer to such report shall have been returned by the commissioners, shall not be deemed unlawful, although given contrary to such orders; but notwithstanding the special circumstances, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, by a peremptory order, to direct, that from a day to be fixed thereby, such orders as they think expedient shall be enforced; and if any relief be given by such overseers or guardians after the said last-mentioned period, contrary to such last-mentioned order, the amount shall be disallowed in the accounts: provided also, that in case the overseers or guardians shall depart from the order in a particular instance of emergency, and shall, within fifteen days after every departure, report the same and the grounds thereof to the commissioners, and the commissioners shall approve of such departure, or if the relief so given shall have been given in food, temporary lodging, or medicine, and shall have been so reported as aforesaid, then the relief granted by such overseers or guardians shall not be disallowed.

Commissioners to regulate the relief to able-bodied paupers and their families out of the workhouse.

Relief contrary to their regulations to be disallowed: but overseers may delay the operation of such regulations under special circumstances and make report thereof to commissioners.

If commissioners disapprove of delay, they may fix a day from which all such relief shall be disallowed.

RELIEF BY LOAN.

Such relief as commissioners may direct to be considered as loan.

By 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 58, it is enacted, that any relief, or the cost price thereof, which shall be given to or on account of any poor person above the age of twenty-one, or to his wife, or any part of his family under the age of sixteen, and which the commissioners shall direct, (a) to be considered as given by way of loan, and whether any receipt or engagement to repay the same shall have been given or not, is hereby declared to be a loan to such poor person.

Power to justices to attach wages in hands of master or employer.

Sect. 59 enacts, that where any relief shall be given by way of loan, it shall be lawful for any justice, upon the application of the overseers or guardians of the parish or union providing such relief, and upon proof of the same having been given and still remaining due, to issue a summons, requiring such person, as well as his master or employer, to appear before any two justices, to show cause why any wages due, or which may become due, should not be paid over to such overseers or guardians; and if no sufficient cause be shown, or if such person, or some one on his behalf, shall not appear, then the justices shall direct the master or employer to pay, either in one sum or by instalments, as the justices shall think fit, taking into consideration the circumstances of such poor person and his family, out of such wages, to such overseers or guardians, the amount of such relief, and the receipt of any such overseer or guardian shall be a good discharge to such master or employer for so much as shall be so paid; and upon neglect to pay the money the same may be recovered in the same way as penalties, &c. under the act. See a similar provision in 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 29, post.

RELIEF OF THE POOR NOT IN WORKHOUSE, AND BEFORE 4 & 5 WILL. IV. c. 76.

the guide in the administration of relief. In modern times a different system prevailed, and constant relief was given to the able-bodied poor, though in full employment, whenever the number of children rendered the wages of the parents insufficient for their maintenance, a practice clearly sanctioned by the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 32. This system became so general and was considered so pernicious, that the immediate object of the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, was to put an end to such practice, either at once or by degrees; and in a former section the regulations of the commissioners for this purpose has been considered (a). The administration of the relief of the poor was originally entrusted to the overseers; and even now, where there are no guardians, select vestry, or local act, the duty still belongs to such overseers.

Duty of Parish Officers to procure Employment.

43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, provides that the overseers shall take order for setting to work the children of all such whose parents shall not be thought able to maintain their children, and all such persons, married or unmarried, having no means to maintain them, and using no ordinary and daily trade; and for the necessary relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them being poor, and not able to work.

Rex v. Collett, 3 D. & R. 582; 2 B. & C. 324. This was an appeal against the allowance of the accounts of the overseers. Case: The appellant is the proprietor of an estate in the parish of K., a part of which is in his own occupation. In consequence of the depression in the price of agricultural produce, the farmers have been rendered unable to make any improvements on their lands, and consequently have employed few labourers, by which means a considerable part of the labouring population has been totally unemployed; and during this period, all poor persons belonging to the parish, who had been unable to obtain employment, have received sums of money for their maintenance from the parish officers in proportion to the number of their respective families, for which no labour has been required from them. The respondents admitted that the persons to whom the sums objected to in the account were paid, were in fact both able and willing to work, but that no employment could be obtained for them. No evidence was adduced to prove that the overseers could have employed the labourers. None of the sums objected to were paid under there is a letter, which was addressed to Lord Treasurer Burghley, by a justice of peace for the county of Somerset, which shows that the great evils arising from habits of idleness amongst the poor began then to be understood, and strengthens the idea that one great object of the legislative provisions for the poor, made about that time, was to prevent able-bodied men from being unemployed. After observing upon the great increase of crime, and the number of wandering idle vagabonds, then committing depredations in that part of the country, the writer proceeds: "and when these lewd people are committed to the gaol, the poor country that is robbed by them are forced to feed them, which they grieve at. And this year there hath been disbursed, to the relief of the prisoners in the gaol, 73*l.*, and yet they allowed but 6*d.* a man weekly. And if they were not delivered at every quarter sessions, so much more would not serve, nor two such gaols would hold them. But if this money might be employed to build some houses adjoining to the gaol for them to work in, and every prisoner, committed for any cause, and not able to relieve himself, compelled to work, as many of them as are delivered upon their trials, either by the acquittal of the grand jury, or petty jury, burning in the hand, or whipping, presently transferred thence to the houses of correction to be kept in work, except some present will take any into service; I dare presume to say the tenth felony will not be committed that now is." This letter also shows that at that time prisoners committed for trial, although they could not be compelled, and were not willing to work, were, in point of fact, in some places supported at the expense of the public. It seems, however, that they could not legally claim to be so maintained. See the case of The Justices of the North Riding of Yorkshire, 2 B. & C. 286; S. C. 3 D. & R. 510. Vol. II. tit. "Gaols," &c.

Under the statute of Eliz. overseers must endeavour to find work for able-bodied poor who are out of employment.

Quere. Whether they could legally relieve such persons otherwise than by setting them to work and paying them for their labour?

any order from a magistrate. The parishioners met once a week, at which meetings all applications for relief were received, and where all labourers belonging to the parish, who had not in the preceding week been in constant employment, attended to give an account of their earnings, and received such sums as, with the earnings, should amount to a sum deemed competent to their maintenance in proportion to the number of their children. In several cases able-bodied men with four or five children, having had no employment in the preceding week, received from 7*s.* to 8*s.* 6*d.* for the week; having been employed three days, 3*s.* 6*d.* to 4*s.* per week; two days, 5*s.* per week; and so in proportion to the number of their children and the amount of their week's earnings. This relief was afforded to these persons, solely on the ground of their having been out of employment, without inquiry as to any means they might have for the supply of their immediate wants by sale or pledge of their household effects; and that in many instances the weekly relief was afforded to various able-bodied labourers for many weeks in succession.—Abbott, C. J. "It does not appear upon the case before us, that the overseers of the poor considered themselves bound to provide work for the unemployed poor, if that were practicable, nor whether they in any way endeavoured to attain that object. Before we determine whether the overseers were or were not justified in giving pecuniary relief to the unemployed poor, the case must go down to the sessions again, that we may be informed whether any, and, if any, what endeavours were made to procure employment for them. All that the court can now say is, that undoubtedly it is the primary duty of the overseers to find employment for the poor, if possible. And I express that opinion now for the sake of the poor themselves, to whom no greater kindness can be done than by enabling them to earn their own living by labour, instead of suffering them to eat the bread of idleness, by which their habits and morals must soon be corrupted."—Bayley, J., suggested, "That it was the bounden duty of the overseers to obtain work for the poor, if they could, either in or out of their own parish, and it was only in case of inability to procure work, that they would be justified in giving relief in money. Probably this very discussion would rouse overseers of the poor to a sense of their duty in endeavouring to find work for unemployed poor persons. There were several useful modes of employing poor persons, advantageous to the public, such as levelling hills, and improving roads. Within the last few years a great deal had been done in improving the public highways by this mode of employing poor labourers." The case was sent back to the sessions to be amended.

III. c. 12, s. 12, after reciting, that "whereas by an act passed in the 43d year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the churchwardens and overseers of the poor are directed to set to work certain persons therein described: and whereas, by the laws now in force, sufficient powers are not given to the churchwardens and overseers, to enable them to keep such persons fully and constantly employed;" enacts, "that it shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, with the consent of the inhabitants thereof in vestry assembled, to take into their hands any land or ground which shall belong to such parish, or to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish, or to the poor thereof, or to purchase, or to hire and take on lease for and on account of the parish, any suitable portion or portions of land within or near to such parish, not exceeding twenty acres in the whole;* and to employ and set to work in the cultivation of such land, on account of the parish, any such persons as by law they are directed to set to work, and to pay to Duty of Overseers to procure Employment.

By 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 59, s. 1, the overseer may enclose from any forest or waste lands belonging to the crown, lying in or near the parish, with the consent of the lord treasurer or the commissioners of the treasury, not exceeding fifty acres, for the purpose of cultivating and improving the same for the use and benefit of such parish, and the poor persons within the same (a).

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 42, allotments made for the poor in parishes enclosed under an act of parliament, may, with the consent of the trustees of the allotment and the overseers, be let to industrious cottagers. Each portion to be not less than one quarter of an acre, and not exceeding one acre. The statute makes provision about the mode and time of letting, and the recovery of the rent or possession of the land, and prohibits the erection of habitations, and it directs that the rent shall be applied in the purchase of fuel, to be distributed in the winter season among the poor parishioners legally settled and resident in or near the parish. There is a further power for the vestry to exchange such allotments for land more favourably situated. All these powers are now subjected to the rules of the commissioners. See Appendix, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 69, s. 4.

Allotments under enclosure acts.

The plaintiffs, overseers, enclosed some waste of a manor for employing the poor. The defendant pulled down the fence, under an alleged right of common, which the jury negatived. The plaintiffs failed to prove the consent of the lord, and on a motion for a nonsuit on this ground, C. J. Tindal said, "The plaintiffs enclose, cultivate, and allot portions of land; neither the lord of the manor nor the copyholder interfere; the defendant is a stranger, and as against him the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain this action on their mere possession." Matson v. Cook, 4 *Bing. such of the poor persons so employed as shall not be supported by the parish, reasonable wages for their work; and the poor persons so employed shall have such and the like remedies for the recovery of their wages, and shall be subject to such and the like punishment for misbehaviour in their employment, as other labourers in husbandry are by law entitled and subject to."

Sect. 13 enacts, "that for the promotion of industry among the poor, it shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, with the consent of the inhabitants in vestry assembled, to let any portion and portions of such parish land as aforesaid, or of the land to be so purchased or taken on account of the parish, to any poor and industrious inhabitant of the parish, to be by him or her occupied and cultivated on his or her own account, and for his or her own benefit, at such reasonable rent, and for such term, as shall by the inhabitants in vestry be fixed and determined."

(a) In 1832 a temporary act was passed for the better employment of the agricultural labourers, by which agreements made in vestry by a majority of three-fourths of the rate-payers, and approved by the justices at the petty-sessions, were to be binding on the parish; and it was enacted, that the overseers should not expend any money raised for the relief of the poor in the employment of any person in any work whatever. The statute continued in force till the 25th day of March, 1834.

Overseers may contract for the maintenance and employment of the poor.

By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 4, the overseers, with the consent of vestry (a), might contract with any person for the employing the poor in their respective parishes, or in the united parishes, and take the benefit of the work, labour, and service of such poor persons.

Farming out the poor to cease, where guardians appointed.

Agreement for diet or clothing of paupers in poorhouse.

22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 1. So much of stat. 9 Geo. I. "as respects the maintaining or hiring out the labour of the poor by contract, within any parish adopting the provisions of this act, is repealed; and s. 2 provides, that it shall and may be lawful for the visitor and guardian, or visitors and guardians, appointed as hereafter mentioned, of any parish, township, or place, or parishes, townships, and places, which shall have adopted the provisions and complied with the requisites of this act, and shall have a visitor appointed, from time to time to make agreements with any person or persons for the diet or clothing of such poor persons who shall be sent to the house or houses to be provided under the authority of this act, and for the work and labour of such poor persons, so that no such agreement shall be made for any longer time than twelve months, and so that the same shall be, and every such agreement is hereby declared to be, under the strictest inspection and control of the visitor, guardian, and governor of such poorhouse, and also of the justices of the peace for the limit where such poorhouse shall be; two of which justices, upon proof of any abuse, shall have power to dissolve such contract."

Notice of contracts for supplying workhouses to be given.

By 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 7, it is enacted, "that when and so often as any contract or contracts shall be made or entered into for the providing, furnishing, or supplying any articles, materials, or things for the use of the poor in the workhouse or workhouses of or belonging to any parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, or for the erecting of any building or buildings, the expense whereof is to be defrayed out of any rate or rates, or other moneys applicable to the relief of the poor, the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or other person or persons having the management, control, or direction of the poor in such parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, shall cause notice of their intention to enter into such contract or contracts, and of the time and place when and where they shall assemble and meet for such purpose, and of the security which will be required for the performance of such contract or contracts, to be affixed in a conspicuous manner on the outer door of the church, or respective churches, to which such parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, shall belong, or to be inserted in one or more of the public newspapers most generally circulated in the neighbourhood, seven days at the least previous to such meeting, in order and to the intent that any person or persons willing to undertake the supplying or furnishing the same, may make proposals for that purpose to such churchwardens and overseers, or other person or persons as aforesaid, at the time and place mentioned in such notice."

43 G. 3, c. 54, repealed.

The 43 Geo. III. c. 54, enacted, that the contractors should reside in the parish, and give security, to the satisfaction of two justices, in a penalty not less than one-half of the amount of the poor rate; but this statute is repealed by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 50, but the repeal is not to affect any bond or security given before the passing of the act. All contracts made by any parish or union relating to the poor must be made according to the rules of the commissioners. Ib. 49. See Appendix.

50 Geo. III. c. 50, s. 2. "Persons contracting for the maintenance of the poor of any parish or place shall, with respect to all such things as they shall contract to perform and provide for the poor, be subject to the jurisdiction and orders of justices of the peace in like manner in all respects as overseers of the poor are subject thereto; and that every order of any such justice to or upon any person so contracting, may be enforced and carried into execution by such means as the same might have been enforced and carried into execution against any overseer of the poor; and that every person so contracting for the maintenance of the poor, who shall refuse or neglect to obey any such order, shall be punishable by the like forfeitures and penalties, to be levied in the same manner as in cases of disobedience or neglect of the orders of justices by overseers of the poor."

Contractors for providing for the poor shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the justices as overseers of the poor.

Rex v. Beeston, 3 T. R. 592. On an application for a mandamus against an overseer of Drayton, to compel him to pay his proportion of parish money in his hands to the person who had contracted to maintain the poor: the question was, whether it was necessary that all the churchwardens and overseers, or the majority, should concur in making the contract. Three churchwardens and two overseers agreed to the contract, and one overseer refused to join. Lord Kenyon, "The foundation of my opinion is, that the stat. of 43 Eliz. c. 2, has directed that the general acts to be done by the churchwardens and overseers respecting the poor shall be done by a majority of them; and I think that the spirit of that statute pervades all the subsequent acts respecting the government of the poor. I consider the statute of Geo. I. as engrafted in the 43 Eliz. qualifying the particular act, but referring for the execution of it to the manner pointed out by that statute. Besides, in common understanding what is required to be done by the churchwardens and overseers, is satisfied by being done by a majority." The rest of the court concurred—and the rule was made absolute.

A contract made by a majority of the churchwardens and overseers will bind the rest.

Relief of Pensioners and their families.

Where the applicant for relief is entitled to a pension, the overseers are authorised to require an assignment of it.

The 2 and 3 Vict. c. 51, repeals so much of the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, as directs or authorises the assignment of any pension, superannuation, or other allowance granted in respect of service in the navy, royal marines, army, or ordnance for the indemnity or reimbursement of parishes, and as directs or authorises justices to order payment to parish officers of any such pensions, upon any pensioner or other person entitled thereto leaving his wife or family chargeable to any parish, and also the whole of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 27; and it provides for an assignment of such pensions when relief is given to the pensioner or his family, by admission into the workhouse. There is also a similar provision when the pensioner applies for temporary relief, without limiting the mode in which such relief may be given. If a pensioner leave his wife or family chargeable, a power is given to justices to direct a portion of the pension to be paid to the guardians, &c.—one-half if a wife and one child is left chargeable, and two-thirds if a wife and one child, or two, or more children.

Authorising assignment of pension on application for relief.

Sect. 3. "And be it enacted, that when any pensioner or person entitled to or in receipt of any pension or other allowance as aforesaid shall apply for temporary relief to the guardians of any union or parish in England or Ireland, or to the churchwardens or overseers of any parish in which the administration of the relief of the poor has not been directed to be governed by a board of guardians, or not situate within any union, so long only as such parish is not governed by such guardians, nor situate within any union, or to the heritors and kirk session in Scotland, or shall receive relief from the said guardians, churchwardens, and overseers, or heritors and kirk session, it shall be lawful for the said guardians, or churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and heritors and kirk session, but not compulsory upon them, to grant such relief in such case, or in the event of any pensioner receiving relief without previous application on his part, and to require the pensioner applying for or receiving the same to assign to them respectively his next quarterly payment of pension or other allowance, to the intent that such guardians, or churchwardens and overseers, or heritors and kirk session respectively, may receive the same, and retain for the use of the said union or parish so much thereof as shall have been by them respectively advanced for the temporary relief of such pensioner, or of his wife or family residing with him in such union or parish; and every assignment to be made of any such pension or other allowance for the purposes and according to the tenor of this act shall be exempt from stamp duty, and shall, as to any pensions payable at Chelsea Hospital or by the commissioners thereof, be in the form set out in the schedule to this act marked (D.), and as to Greenwich out-pensions in the form set out in the schedule to this act marked (E.), and as to all other the before-mentioned pensions and allowances payable by her Majesty's paymaster general in the form set out in the schedule to this act marked (EE.); and every assignment shall be certified by the chairman and clerk of the said union at some

As to the pension of insane pensioners.

Sect. 5. "And be it enacted, that in case any such army pensioner as aforesaid shall become insane, it shall be lawful for any one of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county or place in which such pensioner shall reside, upon due proof being made of such insanity, to certify the same to the lords commissioners of Chelsea Hospital, who shall thereupon order and direct, according to their discretion, that the pension of the said insane pensioner shall be paid to the guardians of the union or parish, or churchwardens and overseers of the parish not governed by a board of guardians or comprised in any union, or heritors and kirk session of the place in which such pensioner shall reside, or to the wife, child, or other person to whom the care of such insane person shall be intrusted, or to the treasurer of the county, if such pensioner shall be confined in a county lunatic asylum, or public asylum, or house licensed for the reception of persons insane; and the receipt of the person to whom the same shall be directed to be paid shall be a sufficient voucher and discharge for so much money as shall appear to have been paid thereon."

Relief to prisoners for debt.

52 Geo. III. c. 160. After reciting that "great distress is suffered by poor persons confined under mesne process for debt in such gaols as are not county gaols, in consequence of their not receiving any allowance whereon to subsist during the time of such confinement," it is enacted, s. 1, "that it shall be lawful for any one justice of the peace acting for the county, riding, or division, wherein any gaol which is not a county gaol is situated, to order the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein any such gaol (which is not a county gaol) shall be situated, to relieve any poor person who shall be confined in such gaol under mesne process for debt, and who shall appear to such justice to be unable to support himself or herself, and who shall have applied for relief to such overseers as aforesaid."

Justices to order parochial relief to debtors in such gaols as are not county gaols.

and to be served on the overseers of the poor of his parish;

Sect. 4. "That a copy of the order of removal, and of the order for suspending the execution of the same as aforesaid, shall, as soon as may be after the making thereof respectively, be served upon the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place in which such poor person shall, by such order of removal, be adjudged to be legally settled."

Sect. 5. "That although such poor person shall not have been actually removed in pursuance of such order of removal as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to direct the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place in which such pauper is adjudged to be settled, to repay to the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein such gaol shall be situated, all the charges proved upon oath of any such overseers of the parish, township, or place where the gaol is situated, to have been incurred in granting relief to such pauper during the time of his confinement and the suspension of such order, not exceeding 6*d. per diem;* and if the overseers of the parish, township, or place to which such order of removal shall be made, or any or either of them, shall refuse or neglect to pay any such sum so advanced as aforesaid within twenty-one days after demand thereof, and shall not within the same time give notice of appeal as hereinafter mentioned, it shall be lawful for one justice of the peace, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause the money so directed to be paid as aforesaid, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person or persons so refusing or neglecting to pay the same, and also such costs attending the same, not exceeding 40*s.*, as such justice shall direct; and if the parish, township, or place to which the removal was ordered to be made, be without the jurisdiction of the justice of peace issuing the warrant, then such warrant shall be transmitted to any justice of the peace having jurisdiction within such parish, township, or place as aforesaid, who upon receipt thereof is hereby authorised and required to indorse the same for execution; provided nevertheless, that if the sum so ordered to be paid on account of such costs and charges exceed the sum of 5*l.*, the party or parties aggrieved by such order may appeal to the next general quarter sessions for the county, riding, or division in which such gaol is situated, against the same, as they may do against an order for the removal of poor persons by any law now in being; and if the court of quarter sessions shall be of opinion that the sum so awarded be more than of right ought to have been directed to be paid, such court may and is hereby directed to strike out the sum contained in the said order, and insert the sum which, in the judgment of the said court, ought to be paid; and in every such case the said court of quarter sessions shall direct that the said order so amended shall be carried into execution by the said justices by whom the order was originally made, or either of them, or by such other justice or justices as the said court shall direct."

Appeal against the order of removal.

Sect. 6. "That it shall be lawful for the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein such poor person shall, by such order of removal, be adjudged to be legally settled, to appeal against such order to the next general quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division in which such gaol is situated, holden after the service of the copy of such order of removal, in case such copy shall have been served upon such overseers twenty-one days before the holding of such quarter sessions; but in case the same shall not be served twenty-one days before the holding of such next general quarter sessions, then the appeal may be to the next succeeding general quarter sessions holden for the said county, riding, or division, and upon such appeal the like proceedings may be had as are observed in other cases of appeals against orders of removal of poor persons by any law now in being: provided always, that in case such order of removal and suspension is not appealed against in manner aforesaid, or if upon appeal such order shall be confirmed, such poor person shall be deemed and taken to be legally settled in the parish, township, or place in which he shall by such order of removal be adjudged to be legally settled."

If pauper has no settlement in England or Wales the allowance is to be paid out of county rate.

Sect. 7. "That in case any poor person applying for relief under the provisions of this act shall, upon his examination as to his last legal settlement, be found not to be legally settled in any parish, township, or place within England and Wales, it shall be lawful for any one justice of the peace to order the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein the gaol is situated, (in which such poor person shall be confined under mesne process for debt,) to relieve such poor persons with a sum not exceeding 6*d. per diem* out of the funds in their hands applicable to the relief of the poor, which sum shall be reimbursed to the overseers of the poor of the said parish, township, or place, for the use of such funds, out of the county rate, by the treasurer of the county, riding, or division in which such parish, township, or place shall be situated, at the expiration of the confinement of such poor person upon such mesne process as aforesaid."

Medical Relief.

Relief by Medical assistance.

Medical assistance is within the meaning of relief, as understood and used in the poor laws, and an overseer is bound to supply such relief to a pauper labouring under a dangerous illness, though out of the workhouse, and not having previously had relief. Per Holroyd, J., Rex v. Warren, Worcester Lent Ass. 1820. See Casual Poor, post, 88 to 96; and see 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 54.

A stranger, and, à fortiori, a deputy overseer, directing a surgeon to attend a pauper, is liable, in respect of his retainer, to pay the surgeon's bill. But a deputy overseer is not liable unless he has expressly retained the surgeon. Watling v. Walters, 1 Car. & P. 132.

Relief by Loan (b).

Relief by Loan.

Overseers empowered, in certain cases, by direction of justices, &c., to give relief by way of loan only (a).

59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 29, after reciting, that it is expedient to discourage that reliance upon the poor's rates which frequently induces artisans, labourers, and others, to squander away earnings which would, with suitable care, have afforded sufficient means for the support of their families, enacts, "that whenever it shall appear to the justices, or to the general or select vestry, or to such guardians, governors, or directors as aforesaid, or to the overseers of the poor, to whom application shall be made for relief for any poor person, that he might, but for his extravagance, neglect, or wilful misconduct, have been able to maintain himself, or to support his family (as the case may be), it shall be lawful for the overseers of the poor (by the direction of the justices, or of the general or select vestry, or of such guardians, governors, or directors, where application shall have been made to them respectively,) to advance money weekly, or otherwise, as may be requisite, to the person so applying, by way of loan only, and to take his receipt for, and engagement to repay every sum to be so advanced (for which no stamp duty shall be required); and it shall be lawful for any two justices, upon the application (within one year after any such loan or loans) of one or more of the overseers of the poor for the time being of the parish, to summon the person to whom any money shall have been so advanced; and if upon examination by such justices into his circumstances, it shall appear to them that such person is able, by weekly instalments or otherwise, to repay the whole or any part of the money so advanced to him, and for which he shall have given any such receipt and engagement, it shall be lawful for such justices to make an order under their hands and seals for the repayment of the whole or of any part of such money, at such time and times, and in such proportions and manner as they shall see fit; and upon every default of payment, by their warrant to commit such person to the common gaol or house of correction, for any time not exceeding three calendar months, unless the sum and sums which shall be due and payable by virtue of such order shall be sooner paid."

Order of Justices for Relief.

Order of Relief.

Rex v. Highworth, 1 Str. 10; 1 Bott, 460. An order to pay 3*s.* weekly to a poor person was quashed, because it did not appear that the person relieved was poor and impotent. Parker, C. J., "I favour these orders as much as I can, because nobody takes care to draw them up for the poor. But it must be quashed." (Rex v. Stoke Ursey, 1 Str. 10; S. P. Rex v. Tipper, 1 Bott, 460.)

The order must express that the person is impotent as well as poor.

Rex v. Fearnley, 1 T. R. 316. This was a demurrer to an indictment against the overseer of Checkheaton, for disobeying an order of two justices, for the payment of 1*s.* 6*d.* a week to Sarah Firth, for the maintenance of herself and her bastard child. It was objected, that as the money was ordered to be paid weekly, the defendant could not be guilty of any disobedience before the expiration of the first week. But the Court were of opinion that the sum which was ordered to be paid weekly was due at the beginning of the week. Judgment was given for the defendant on another point.

On an order for relief weekly, the money is due the beginning of the week.

Rex v. Colbitch, 1 Barnard. 46. An order of sessions was made upon the overseers of this parish, that they should pay a surgeon his bill for curing certain poor under their care. The Court said that the sessions have no power to make such orders, and so quashed it.

Sessions have no power to order surgeon's bills to be paid;

Rex v. Woodsterton, 2 Barnard. 207, 247; 1 Bott, 465. An order by two justices for paying 5*l.* upon account of a poor inhabitant when he was in gaol, and likewise for paying a surgeon's bill that was due upon his account, was confirmed at the sessions. It was moved to quash these orders. It was urged that the justices have only power to order parish officers to relieve a poor inhabitant where it is fit he ought to be relieved. But in the present case the parish officers have actually given the party relief. They employed a surgeon and a nurse to take care of him. The surgeon and nurse have a proper remedy by way of action against the officers; and the justices have no pretence to interfere in this manner. And the Court were of opinion that these orders should be quashed. See Casual Poor, post, 88 to 100, and the cases collected in 1 Bott, 416, n.

Where to be Relieved.

Where to be Relieved.

By the several statues, the poor were to resort or be sent to their own parishes to be relieved; and in Clypton v. Ravistock, Sett. & Rem. 49; 2 Nol. P. L. 369; an order recited that J. S. was last settled in Clypton; then ordering the overseers of Clypton to repair to the parish of Ravistock, and to relieve him, being so sick that he cannot be removed. By the Court: "The justices have no authority to send for officers out of another parish, but the parish where the poor reside are bound to maintain them as long as they continue with them." In Darlington v. Hemlington, (Dougl. 9, n. 2, Cald. 6,) where two bastard children, settled at Darlington, resided with their mother as nurse-children in the parish of Hemlington, where the mother was settled, it was determined that the parish where the children's settlement was, should maintain those children in that other parish.

Poor to be maintained in the parish where they are;

excepting in the case of bastards, being nurse children.

Where to be Relieved

As a parish is not bound to maintain the poor, who are settled, but not resident therein, relief given to a pauper inhabiting another parish affords evidence that the pauper is settled in the relieving parish Rex v. Wakefield, post

Of appealing against the order

Appeal against Order

No appeal lies from an order of maintenance

In Rex v North Shields, Dougl 331 (see ante, 54), Willes, J, on delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "We think it unnecessary to give an opinion on the question which has been argued in this case, because I and my two brothers are satisfied that no appeal lies from an order of maintenance The 3 W III c 11, s 11, gives a concurrent jurisdiction, in the making orders for the relief of the poor, in or out of sessions, and doth not authorise an appeal The 9 Geo I c 7, makes no alteration in this respect The reason for not giving an appeal is, that the pauper might starve while the cause was in suspense We have spoken to several gentlemen very conversant in sessions law, and none of them ever heard of such an appeal" And the order of sessions was quashed, because they had no jurisdiction, and the original order affirmed

Mandamus to hear such appeal refused the overseer should obtain a fresh order of removal into the proper parish

Rex v Justices of Devon, 4 M & S 421 On a rule nisi for a mandamus to the justices at sessions to hear an appeal against an order for the relief of a pauper, which appeal the justices had determined at the last sessions, conceiving that they had not any jurisdiction, and the counsel cited a note from Burn, vol iv p 117, 21st edit (a) Per Curiam "If, in every case

(a) Note of Dr Burn, in the 21st edit. of this work It has been observed by Mr Douglas (Dougl 333), that the words of 3 W III c. 11, are, "by authority, under the hand of one justice residing within the parish, or (if none be there dwelling) in the parts near or next adjoining, or by order of the justice in sessions" This, he says, it should seem, must mean by order of the court of quarter sessions, not of justices as individuals, when they happen to meet at the quarter sessions. Therefore he makes a query concerning the case of Rex v. Winship, post, 83, where the court is stated to have held, that the sessions could not make an original order of maintenance. (See 36 Geo III c 23, post)

Unto which it may be added, with respect to this last case of North Shields, that the great fundamental statute of 43 Eliz c 2, s 6, enacts, that "if any person shall find himself aggrieved by anything done by the churchwardens and overseers, or by the justices, in relation to the relief of the poor, he may appeal to the general quarter sessions, whose order therein shall be final" which, by the rule that acts in pari materiâ are to be taken together and considered as one entire act, may seem to include this case concerning the order of maintenance The Carlisle case above mentioned was upon an original order at sessions, in which the jurisdiction was not objected to, but the cause was determined on the real merits The case of Rex v Winship, post, 83, in note, also was upon an original order of sessions, which order the report says was quashed, because the court was of opinion that the sessions had no power to make such order This present case of North Shields was an appeal against an order of a justice out of sessions, and in this case of appeal likewise the court was of opinion that the sessions had no jurisdiction From which two last cases it seems to follow that an order of maintenance by a private justice out of sessions is absolutely conclusive, which imports a power in this respect not usual in other like cases, especially as such justice is required by the statute to be an inhabitant of the parish, if any such be there residing, and consequently in all probability essentially interested in the poor rate As to the matter of practice, it is certain that nothing is more common at the sessions than applications for the maintenance of poor persons as well by original motion as by way of appeal from the order of private justices In some places this makes up almost half the business of the sessions, even to a degree of ridicule among the unthinking part of mankind, as if magistrates could be better employed than in relieving the miseries of the distressed. The reason that has been sometimes alleged against removing the poor rate into the courts at Westminster, lest the poor might starve before the cause should be determined, does not hold with regard to appeals against orders of maintenance The justice's order takes effect immediately, and continues in force till altered by other legal of an order for relief, an appeal will lie, this will divert the funds of the poor into other channels. This order is not in perpetuum, it is to pay until further order; and why cannot the overseers go back to the quarter where it was made, and point out that the pauper's residence is in another parish, and obtain a fresh order?" Rule refused.

12. Regulations of Parish Vestries.

[See ante, Vol. I. tit. Churchwardens.]

The 58 Geo. III. c. 69, intituled An act for the regulation of parish vestries, enacts, s. 1, that "no vestry or meeting of the inhabitants in vestry of or for any parish shall be holden until public notice shall have been given of such vestry, and of the place and hour of holding the same, and the special purpose thereof, three days at the least before the day to be appointed for holding such vestry, by the publication of such notice in the parish church or chapel on some Sunday during or immediately after divine service, and by affixing the same, fairly written or printed, on the principal door of such church or chapel."

Three days' notice to be given of vestries; by publication in the church, and affixing on the church door.

Sect. 2. "And for the more orderly conduct of vestries, be it further enacted, that in case the rector or vicar, or perpetual curate, shall not be present, the persons so assembled in pursuance of such notice, shall forthwith nominate and appoint, by plurality of votes, to be ascertained as hereinafter is directed, one of the inhabitants of such parish to be the chairman of and preside in every such vestry; and in all cases of equality of votes upon any question arising therein, the chairman shall (in addition to such vote or votes as he may by virtue of this act be entitled to give in right of his assessment) have the casting vote; and minutes of the proceedings and resolutions of every vestry shall be fairly and distinctly entered in a book (to be provided for that purpose by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor), and shall be signed by the chairman, and by such other of the inhabitants present as shall think proper to sign the same."

Chairman of vestries appointed.

Chairman to have the casting vote.

Minutes to be entered and signed.

Sect. 3. "In all such vestries every inhabitant present, who shall, by the last rate which shall have been made for the relief of the poor, have been assessed and charged upon, or in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value not amounting to 50*l.*, shall have and be entitled to give one vote, and no more; and every inhabitant there present, who shall in such last rate have been assessed or charged upon, or in respect of any annual rent or rents' profit or value, amounting to 50*l.* or upwards (whether in one or more than one sum or charge), shall have and be entitled to give one vote for every 25*l.* of annual rent, profit, and value upon, or in respect of which he shall have been assessed or charged in such last rate, so, nevertheless, that no inhabitant shall be entitled to give more than six votes: and in cases authority. The usual way is for the justices to order the overseer to pay to the pauper so much weekly or otherwise, until he shall be otherwise ordered according to law to forbear the said allowance, or, more generally, till further order. And this, if not acquiesced in, brings on an appeal to the sessions, where the court enlarges, mitigates, or takes off the charge as they shall see cause.

Rex v. Winship, 5 Burr. 2677; Cald. 72. A pauper having refused to go into the poorhouse, the overseers refused to pay her the allowance. She applied to the quarter sessions, where an order was made of the sum in arrear, and 2*s.* a week. The overseers refused to pay the allowance, whereupon they were indicted. The Court of K. B. thought the general question of vast consequence, but gave no opinion upon the merits, holding the sessions order to be bad and illegal upon the face of it; "the sessions cannot make such an original order." Judgment for the defendants. In a note, Mr. Caldecott says, that certainly the court made no such determination as that expressed in the words marked by inverted commas. See Cald. 71, n.

(a) Where guardians are elected under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, the right of voting is regulated by that statute, as regards the occupier, but the number of votes which the owner may give is to be governed by this law; and see this subject more fully considered, Title, "Vestries."

where two or more of the inhabitants present shall be jointly rated, each of them shall be entitled to vote according to the proportion and amount which shall be borne by him of the joint charge; and where one only of the persons jointly rated shall attend, he shall be entitled to vote according to and in respect of the whole of the joint charge." (a)

Persons rated to the poor, though not resident, may vote in vestry.

59 Geo. III. c. 85, reciting 58 Geo. III. c. 69, which gives a power in certain cases to rate payers, enacts, s. 1, "that any person who shall be assessed and rated for the relief of the poor in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value arising from any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, situate in any parish, in which any vestry shall be holden under the said recited act, although such person shall not reside in or be an inhabitant of such parish, shall and may lawfully be present at such vestry; and such person shall have, and be entitled to give, such and so many vote or votes at such vestry in respect of the amount of such rent, profit, or value, as, by the said act, any inhabitant of such parish present at such vestry might or ought to have and be entitled to give, in respect of such amount, and to all intents and purposes, as if such person were an inhabitant of such parish; anything in the said recited act to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

Clerk or agent of corporations, &c., may vote in vestry according to the value of the premises rated.

Sect. 2. "That in all cases where any corporation or body politic or corporate, or company, shall be charged to the rate for the relief of the poor of such parish, either in the name of such corporation, or of any officer of the said corporation, it shall and may be lawful for the clerk, secretary, steward, or other agent duly authorised for that purpose, of such corporation or body politic or corporate, or company, to be present at any vestry to be holden in the said parish under the said recited act; and such clerk, secretary, steward, or agent shall be entitled to give such and so many vote or votes at such vestry, in respect of the amount of the rent, profit or value of such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as by the said act any inhabitant assessed to such rate, present at such vestry, might or ought to have and be entitled to in respect of such amount; anything in the said recited act to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

Inhabitants coming into parish since the last rate may vote.

58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 4. "That when any person shall have become an inhabitant of any parish, or become liable to be rated therein, since the making of the last rate for the relief of the poor thereof, he shall be entitled to vote for and in respect of the lands, tenements, and property for which he shall have become liable to be rated, and shall consent to be rated in like manner as if he should have been actually rated for the same."

Inhabitants refusing to pay poor rates, to be excluded from vestries.

(a) Where a right of nominating a perpetual curate was given to the parishioners, the bye-law or resolution of a parish vestry cannot exclude those who have not paid their church rates. Faulkner v. Elgar, 4 B. & C. 449; 6 D. & R. 517. But in Edenborough v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 2 Russ. 93, Lord Eldon held, that where the advowson of a parish was vested in trustees for the benefit of the parishioners, the right of voting at the election may by long usage be limited to parishioners who pay church and poor's rates; and an election by such was confirmed. In this case the same eminent judge determined that a vote by ballot on such occasions was illegal, and an election so made void.

Attorney-General v. Wilkinson, 7 Moore, 187; S. C. 3 B. & B. 266. Mistake rectified.

The word "and" was inserted in the above statute by mistake, to rectify which, it was enacted by 59 Geo. III. c. 85, s. 3, "that no person who shall have refused or neglected to pay any rate for the relief of the poor, which shall be due from and shall have been demanded of him, shall be entitled to vote or to be present in any vestry of the parish for which such rate shall have been made, until he shall have paid the same; nor shall any such clerk, secretary, steward, or agent, be entitled to be present or to vote, nor shall be present or vote, at any vestry in such parish, unless all rates for the relief of the poor, which shall have been assessed and charged upon, or in respect of, the annual rent, profit, or value, in right of which any such clerk, secretary, steward, or agent, shall claim to be present and vote, which shall be due, and which shall have been demanded at any time before the meeting of such vestry, shall have been paid and satisfied."

Clerk of companies disqualified from voting if rates not paid.

In the parish of W., the poor rates, according to ancient custom, had always been made without respect to the value of property in the parish, but according to the supposed ability of the party charged: Held, that persons so rated were not rated in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value, within the meaning of the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 3, and therefore were not entitled to more than one vote at vestry meetings, although rated upon more than 50*l.*

Nightingale v. Marshall, 2 B. & C. 313; 3 D. & R. 549. Case for a false return to a mandamus. The office of sexton for the parish of Saint Mary, Whitechapel, in the county of Middlesex, is an ancient office, and the right of election is in the inhabitants paying church and poor's rates, in vestry assembled. The office became vacant, and there were two candidates, the plaintiff and J. W. Several inhabitants of the parish claimed a right to give more than one vote under the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 3: and the only question in the case is, whether, under the circumstances hereinafter stated, a plurality of votes was admissible at the said election. The poor rates are not, and never have been, assessed upon all the inhabitants uniformly, according to an equal pound-rate: but the rate purports to be made, and, according to ancient custom, always has been made, by the discretion of the vestry without respect to value, but according to the ability of the party charged, such ability being estimated with reference to property, whether in the parish or out of it. In some instances the property is stated in respect of which the party is charged; but in a great majority of cases the property is not stated, and where it is stated, the rate is not in proportion to the rent of the property. Abbott, C. J. "I give no opinion as to the validity of the rates in question. My opinion is founded entirely on the third section of the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, which provides for a plurality of votes. Looking at this rate, I am clearly of opinion that no person in this parish 'is rated upon or in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value.' If the rate were so made, it must be proportioned to the amount of the rent, profit, or value, in respect of which it is imposed. It is not so proportioned; and it therefore appears not to have been imposed in respect of the property mentioned in the act, but in respect of some ability to contribute to the relief of the poor, measured by some other standard. I am therefore of opinion that the provisions of 58 Geo. III. c. 69, respecting a plurality of votes, do not apply to the parish in question; the plaintiff, consequently, was not duly elected to the office of sexton, and a nonsuit must be entered." Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that this parish is not within the operation of 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 3. The general rule is, that there shall be an equal pound-rate upon the property in the parish; therefore all persons having an estate equal in value contribute the same sum. The value of their property is the criterion of the rate. It was the intention of the legislature, by the statute referred to, to increase the power which each inhabitant would have at the vestry meetings, in proportion to the burthen borne by him. This parish cannot have the benefit of that act, for the custom (which may be legal) to make the rate in a particular mode, prevents the property of any individual in the parish being the criterion of the burthen borne by him. We cannot, then, say that the rate is imposed in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value; and unless that be so, the provision for a plurality of votes does not apply." Holroyd, J. "The rate stated in this case is not such as to bring the parish within the third section of 58 Geo. III. c. 69. To be within that, the parties must be assessed upon some annual rent, profit, or value: the rate does not show that they have been so assessed. Certain rents are stated, but the inequality of the rate shows that it is not imposed in respect of those rents; nor does it appear to have been imposed in respect of any profit or value, much less annual profit or value. It is left uncertain in respect of what it is assessed, and therefore is quite insufficient to make the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 3, applicable to their vestry meetings." Best, J. "If the inhabitants of Saint Mary, Whitechapel, are anxious to avail themselves of the provisions of the vestry act, they must alter their mode of rating. By that act it is not sufficient that the parties should be rated at 50*l.* or upwards; to have more than one vote, they must be rated in respect of annual rents, profit, or value. Now it is stated in the case, that each inhabitant is rated according to the discretion of the vestry, and the rate itself shows that the amount of it is not regulated by the amount of the property in the parish. If so, it cannot be made according to the principle laid down in the act; and therefore no person can, by virtue of that act, be entitled to a plurality of votes."

Provisions in relation to parishes extended to townships, &c.

Sect. 7. "That all provisions, authorities, and directions, in this act contained, in relation to parishes, shall extend, and be construed to extend, to all townships, vills, and places having separate overseers of the poor, and maintaining their poor separately, and that all the directions and regulations herein contained, in regard to vestries, shall extend and be applied to all meetings which may by law be holden of the inhabitants of any parish, township, vill, or place, for any of the purposes in this act expressed; and that the notices by this act required to be given of every vestry, may, in places in which there is or shall be no parish church or chapel, or where there shall not be divine service in such church or chapel, be given and published in such manner as notices of the like nature shall have been there usually given and published, or as shall be most effectual for communicating the same to the inhabitants of every such parish, township, vill, or place, respectively."

12. Regulations of Parish Vestries.

Sect. 8. "That nothing in this act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to alter the time of holding any vestry, parish, or town meeting which is, by the authority of any act, required to be holden on any certain day, or within any certain time, in such act prescribed and directed; nor shall anything in this act contained extend to take away, lessen, prejudice, or affect the powers of any vestry or meeting holden in any parish, township, or place, by virtue of any special act or acts of any ancient and special usage or custom, or to change or affect the right or manner of voting in any vestry or meeting so holden."

Not to alter time for holding vestries specially directed; nor to affect special vestries.

Sects. 9 and 10. "That nothing in this act contained shall extend to any parish in the city of London, or borough of Southwark."

Not to extend to London or Southwark.

Sect. 11. "That this act shall extend only to England and Wales."

To England and Wales only.

Rex v. Churchwardens of St. James's, Clerkenwell, 1 Adol. & Ell. 317; 3 Nev. & Man. 411, S. C. A local act passed before the stat. 58 Geo. III. c. 69, for the regulation of parish vestries created the office of guardians of the poor for a particular parish, and enacted that vacancies should be annually filled up by the rated inhabitants assembled in the vestry-room, who should elect persons in the room of those going out: held, that after the passing of 58 Geo. III. c. 69, the inhabitants must be allowed in such election the number of votes in proportion to their respective assessments defined in the latter act, for that the local act did not give this vestry such a peculiar constitution as to bring it within sect. 8 of 58 Geo. III. c. 69, which preserves to vestries holden under any special act, the powers and rights of voting which they previously enjoyed. The intention of the act was to change the method of determining the majority in all cases where no special constitution existed before (a).

The exception as to local acts does not apply where the vestry is not specially constituted.

May v. Gwynne, 4 B. & A. 301. A rule had been obtained, calling on the plaintiff in this case to produce and permit the defendant to inspect and take copies of certain papers, belonging to the parish of Hammersmith, which were in his possession. It appeared that the defendant had, by the authority of the vestry, made a report, in writing, respecting the conduct of the plaintiff, founded, as was stated, on the inspection of certain documents then in the parish chest, but now in the possession of the plaintiff. This report having been published, an action was brought by the plaintiff for a libel, which the defendant wished to justify, and these documents were necessary for that purpose; and the defendant contended, that he, being an inhabitant of the parish, was entitled to see and take copies of them. It was doubtful in the affidavits, whether the plaintiff or another person was legally the vestry-clerk of the parish. Cause having been shown, Abbott, C. J., said, "This is a motion of the first impression; and I am of opinion that the court ought not to order a plaintiff to furnish evidence against himself. If the plaintiff be legally the vestry-clerk, then he has a right to the custody of these documents; and if he be not, then the person really entitled to the office may by mandamus obtain possession of them. But the defendant has no such right; and I think that we ought not, in this case, which is for a libel, to grant the defendant's application. If the papers had been wanted for the purpose of advancing any parochial right, the case would have been different."—Rule discharged with costs.

The court will not compel the vestry clerk of a parish to produce and permit copies to be taken of documents from the parish chest in his custody, for any other than parochial purposes.

Wilson, D. D. v. M'Math, 3 B. & A. 241. The ecclesiastical court has jurisdiction, ratione loci, over the order and proceedings of vestry meetings held in a church; and therefore, where a rector had libelled in that court a parishioner, for preventing him from presiding as chairman at such meeting, a prohibition was refused.

In sound legal principle the rector is the head and præses of the meeting. The vestry-act, 59 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 2, (a) provides "that in case the rector, vicar, or perpetual curate, shall not be present, the persons so assembled shall forthwith nominate, by plurality of votes, one of the inhabitants to be chairman," which is nearly tantamount to a declaration, or by necessary implication declares, that if the rector, vicar, or curate, be present, he shall preside; and the legislature must evidently have considered that by law and usage he was entitled to preside. (3 Phill. Ec. Ca. 87.)

The acts of one vestry are not binding on a succeeding vestry, and may be confirmed or rescinded by such succeeding vestry; but the confirmation of the succeeding vestry is not necessary to make the acts of the preceding one valid. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7; 7 Jac. I. c. 4, s. 8; 5 Geo. I. c. 8; 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 31, 32; 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3; 11 Geo. IV. c. 10, s. 2; 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 56, 57, 71.

The statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, compelling the relief of poor persons by their parents or children.

Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7, enacts, "that the father and grandfather, and the mother and grandmother, and the children of every poor, old, blind, lame, and impotent person, or other poor person not able to work, being of a sufficient ability, shall, at their own charges, relieve and maintain every such poor person in that manner, and according to that rate, as by the justices of peace of that county where such sufficient persons dwell, or the greater number of them, at their general quarter sessions, shall be assessed; upon pain that every one of them shall forfeit twenty shillings for every month which they shall fail therein." [See also 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 56, 57.]

Sect. 11. "Which penalties shall go and be employed to the use of the poor of the same parish, and towards a stock and habitation for them, and other necessary uses and relief, as before in this act are mentioned and expressed; and shall be levied by the said churchwardens and overseers, or one of them, by warrant from any two such justices of the peace, or mayor, alderman, or head officer of city, town, or place corporate, respectively, within their several limits, by distress and sale thereof as aforesaid; or in defect thereof, it shall be lawful for any two such justices of peace, and the said aldermen and head officers, within their several limits, to commit the offender to the said prison, there to remain without bail or mainprize till the said forfeitures shall be satisfied and paid."

(a) The natural obligation upon such near relatives as parent and child cannot be disputed. See the doctrine, 1 Bla. Com. 447. But independently of the express enactment in the 43 Eliz. c. 2, and other subsequent statutes, there is no legal obligation on a parent to maintain his child, or on a child to relieve his parent; and therefore a third person, who may afford such relief, even from absolute want, cannot sue the parent for a reasonable remuneration, unless he expressly or impliedly contracted to pay. See per Le Blanc, J., 4 East, 84; Sir T. Raym. 260, margin; Palmer, 559; 2 Stark. 521; and where the father had reasonable grounds for believing that the child was provided for by another, a third person cannot relieve the child and sue the father, Urmston v. Mersconnem, 4 A. & E. 899. Whereas, in the case of husband and wife, the former may, in some cases, be sued for necessaries provided for the latter, even in defiance of the husband's injunctions not to supply them. The common law considered moral duties of this nature, like others of imperfect obligation, as better left in their performance to the impulse of nature. However, a parent may, under circumstances, be indicted at common law for not supplying an infant child with necessaries. Russell & R. C. C. 20; 2 Camp. 650; and very slight circumstances will suffice to justify a jury in finding a contract on the part of the father.

13. Liability of Relations to maintain each other.

The 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 26, after reciting the 40 Eliz., and whereas it is expedient to extend the power by the said act given to justices in their quarter sessions to justices in petty sessions, enacts, "that it shall be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, for the county or other jurisdiction in which any such sufficient person shall dwell, and they are hereby empowered, in any petty session, to make such assessment and order for the relief of every poor, old, blind, lame, impotent, or other poor person not able to work, upon and by the father, grandfather, mother, grandmother, or child (being of sufficient ability), of every such poor person, as may by virtue of the said act be made by the justices in their general quarter sessions; and that every such assessment and order of two or more justices in any petty sessions shall have the like force and effect as if the same were made by the justices in their general quarter sessions; and the disobedience thereof shall be punishable in like manner."

Justices in petty sessions empowered to order relief by parents, &c.

And 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 78, gives the same powers for recovering these sums as are given for the levying of penalties under that act.

Rex v. Munday, 1 Str. 190. Order reciting that Munday had a good fortune with his wife, and that her mother was poor, therefore he is ordered to provide for her. By Pratt, C. J. "The cases which have hitherto been were either where the judges were divided, or the matter came not directly in question, or was only a case at the judge's chamber. It never came judicially before the whole court till now. And as it is res integra, on consideration we are all of opinion that the son-in-law is not bound, either within the words or intent of the statute, which provides only for natural parents. By the law of nature, a man was bound to take care of his own father and mother. But there being no temporal obligation to enforce that law of nature, it was found necessary to establish it by act of parliament, and that can be extended no farther than the law of nature went before; and the law of nature doth not reach this case."

The statute of Eliz. extends only to natural relations. (a)

Tubb v. Harrison, 4 T. R. 118. This was an action of covenant, in which the defendants, who were father and son (after reciting that differences had arisen between the son and his wife, and that they had agreed to live separate), covenanted inter alia to pay all the debts contracted by her, which her husband was by law liable to pay. One of the breaches assigned was, that they had refused to repay money laid out for board, lodging, and other necessaries for her infant son by a former husband. Lord Kenyon, C. J., on the authority of Rex v. Munday, 1 Str. 190, ante, p. 78, in which an order of maintenance was reversed by the court, because the stat. of Eliz. extends only to natural relations, was of opinion that the husband was not liable to pay the expenses of maintaining the wife's child by a former husband, although the wife were then living, and ordered those articles in the account to be disallowed.

Same point.

One who marries a widow, having children by her former husband, was not bound under the statute of Eliz. to maintain such children, though they were maintained by the widow before her second marriage, when her second husband acquired her former means. Therefore, if the second husband maintain such children, it was holden a good consideration for a

By that statute a man was not bound to maintain his step-children.

(a) Before this case a different doctrine prevailed. Reg. v. Clentham, Fol. 39. By the whole court: "The husband ought to provide for the daughter-in-law during the wife's life, in the right of his wife; but when the wife dies, the relation is dissolved, and he is not by any means obliged to provide for the daughter-in-law after the mother's death." In this case the wife was dead.

Reg. v. St. Botolph's, Aldgate, Fol. 42. The question was, whether the husband shall be chargeable to maintain his wife's children by a former husband? And it was resolved he was during the wife's life, in her right, but not after.

There was an order upon the mother, who was married to a second husband, to maintain her children which she had by the former husband. But, by the court: "A feme covert cannot be charged, but they ought to have charged her husband." Fol. 44; 1 Bla. Com. 448, 449.

13. Liability of Relations to maintain each other.

promise by them, when they come of age, to repay the expense of their maintenance respectively; especially where the second husband was a man of small substance, and the children had a competent provision to receive when they came of age, which was to accumulate for them in the meantime, and he made no application to Chancery for an allowance out of the fund, as he might have done. Cooper v. Martin, 4 East, 76.

But the Poor Law Amendment Act imposes this liability.

But now by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 57, every man who after the passing of the act (14 Aug. 1834) shall marry a woman having children, legitimate or illegitimate, shall maintain them as part of his family, until the child attains the age of sixteen, or the mother dies; and the children, for the purposes of this act, are to be deemed part of the husband's family (a). This statute gives the justices no express power to make any order; but the 78th section empowers justices to enforce the payment of orders under 43 Eliz. or that act, as penalties may be.

Son's wife, the son having run away, not to be maintained by the son's father.

Rex v. Kempson, 2 Str. 955. An order was made upon the father to pay a sum to his son's wife, his son having run away from her. A divorce a mensâ et thoro for adultery was afterwards obtained against the wife. Two exceptions were taken: first, that it appears the son's wife was an adulteress; and therefore the husband himself would not have been bound to maintain her, much more the husband's father could not. To this it was answered, and allowed by the court, that whatever effect this act of the wife might have upon the husband, it could not have any upon the parish. Secondly, it was objected, that the statute extends only to natural relations, and for this purpose was cited the case of Rex v. Munday, and the court were of opinion that this objection was fatal, and that the act doth not extend to relations in law. 2 Barnard, 329, 364, in Rex v. Flintan, p. 107. It was urged in favour of the argument, that the husband was bound to maintain a wife living in adultery; that otherwise the latter would be cast upon her relations; upon which Bailey, J., said, "If the husband were dead, she must be supported by those relations; may it not be said that her misconduct shall have the same effect?" Littledale, J. "Having rendered herself unworthy of her husband's protection, she returns to the same state as if she were not married." 1 B. & Ad. 227.

Parents of an adulteress liable to maintain her.

Father not liable for son's widow.

Reg. v. Dunn, 2 Nol. P. L. 263. An order was made that the defendant should maintain his son's widow. An objection was taken, that by the death of the son the relation which she bore to the father ceased; and although the order was quashed, because it was not set forth that the father was of sufficient ability, yet the court seemed to allow the exception good.

Nor daughter-in-law.

Rex v. Benoire, 1 Bott, 449; 2 Nol. P. L. 263. An order for the maintenance of a daughter-in-law was quashed because there was no relation in blood, nor obligation by nature.

The instances are not numerous in the books in which this question has been discussed. Affection will, in most instances, induce the discharge of this obligation with more efficacy than an act of parliament; and even where that motive is wanting, a sense of shame will supersede the necessity of resorting to the statute, where the party is of sufficient ability to render this assistance to relatives, even more distant in degree than is expressed in the enactment.

An order on a grandfather need not state that the father is unable.

In Rex v. Cornish, 2 B. & Adol. 498. Lord Tenterden. "There is nothing in the statute of Eliz. to show that the obligation of the grandfather is absolute only in the event of the father being unable, and that being so, the justices who make the order are not bound to assign on the face of it any reason why they made it on the grandfather." Littledale, J. "The statute gives the justices a discretionary power; if the grandfather be a rich man, and the father a poor man, they may in the exercise of their discretion make an order on the grandfather to maintain his grandchildren." Order confirmed.

S. P.

Though the father be living, yet, if he be unable, the grandfather, being of ability, may be compelled to keep the grandchild, and also to pay so much money as the justices shall think reasonable for the time past. Reg. v. Joyce, 16 Viner, 423.

13. Liability, &c.

OF THE ORDER OF MAINTENANCE.

The order must set forth that the person is poor, &c.;

St. Andrew's Undershaft v. Mendez de Breta, 1 Ld. Raym. 699. The defendant, being a Jew, had an only daughter, who was converted from Judaism, and embraced Christianity, whereupon the defendant turned her out of doors, and refused to allow her any maintenance. On complaint to the sessions, they, reciting that she was the daughter of the defendant, and that he was a man able to maintain her, made an order that the defendant (being very rich) should allow her 20*s.* a month. But because they did not allege that she was poor, or likely to become chargeable, the order was quashed.

and chargeable;

An order on a husband to relieve his wife, stating her to be poor, &c. but not adjudicating that she was chargeable, is bad. Rex v. Tripping, 16 Ven. 424; 1 Bott, 430.

and not able to work.

Rex v. Gulley, Fol. 47; 1 Bott, 431. The order set out that Mary Gulley was in a poor destitute condition, and that her father was able to maintain her, and therefore they made an order upon him to allow her 2*s.* 6*d.* a week till further order. Objected, it did not appear that she was lame, blind, or unable to work; so that, though she was in a destitute condition, it might be because she would not work; and upon this exception the court quashed the order.

And that the person on whom the order is made is of sufficient ability.

Reg. v. Halifax, Sett. & Rem. 52; 1 Bott, 429. On a motion to quash an order for the father-in-law to pay so much a week to his daughter-in-law, because it was not said that he was of sufficient ability, Parker, J. said, "This order must be quashed. Everybody is supposed, prima facie, to be of ability to maintain himself and family, and no further. Suppose this woman had had three husbands, who shall contribute then?" Powis said, "The last husband's father."

An order to pay indefinitely as to time, is good.

Jenkin's Case, 2 Salk. 534. An order of sessions was made, that the defendant shall pay 2*s.* a week towards the support of his father, till that court shall order the contrary. Which was held good because it was indefinite, and no set time limited; and if an estate happened to fall to him, they might apply to the justices, otherwise if a time was limited.

The order must be made by the justices of the county where such sufficient person dwells.

The order may be made either by the justices at quarter sessions, 43 Eliz. p.98, or at petty sessions, 59 Geo. III. c. 96. If a child lives in the county of Middlesex, and be maintained by the parish there, and the grandfather lives in the county of Suffolk, the justices of Middlesex can make no order therein, but the justices of the county of Suffolk must make the order, 2 Bulstr. 344, Rex v. Reeve.

A recital that G. was of the parish, and a subsequent adjudication that the said G. should pay, shows that G. was within the jurisdiction.

Reg. v. Toke, 3 N. & P. 323; 8 A. & E. 227. This was an order made in the form given in the Appendix, where it was recited that application had been made to the justices by the overseers against Gilbert of the parish of M. in the said county, and it was objected, that there was no adjudication that Gilbert dwelt within the county, so as to show that the justices had jurisdiction.—Littledale, J. In Comyns' Digest, Abatement (F. 25), "Many cases are given in which the word 'of' may be used to signify a person's addition of place, although it would not necessarily denote that he resided there. This order was made under the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 26, which extends to justices at petty sessions the jurisdiction given by the statute of Elizabeth, to them at quarter sessions. Jurisdiction is given to two or more justices of the peace, 'for the county or jurisdiction in which such sufficient person shall dwell;' and the objection to this order is, that it does not sufficiently appear that the party on whom it is made was dwelling within the county, so as to give the justices jurisdiction. I confess I have doubts whether this objection is not good, but my brothers are against the objection, and my doubts are not strong enough to induce me to dissent from their opinion. Complaint is made to the justices against

Order of Maintenance.

'T. G. of Mersham,' &c., and they make an order upon the said T. G., and if the justices thereby adopt the description given to T. G. by the complaining parties, it may be taken that there is an adjudication that T. G. was dwelling within the county; although I should say the word 'said' perhaps goes no farther than to make out the identity of the party. In 2 Nolan's Poor Law, p. 264, it is said that the order of maintenance must state that the person upon whom it is made lives within the jurisdiction of the justices who make it, and Rex v. Woodford, 1 Bott, 460, is cited as an authority. In that case the order was bad, but the form of it is not given. Altogether, I must own, I am not without doubt on this question." Patteson, J. "I had some doubt during the argument, but am now satisfied that the order is good. Although the word 'of' has various significations, it is very commonly used to signify a person's dwelling-place. Then the word 'of' having this meaning, are we to take it as having been used by the justices, or merely by the churchwardens? If it is used by the churchwardens only, then we must be driven to intendment, which I would rather avoid, to support this order. But I am of opinion, without any intendment whatever, that the justices themselves may be considered to have adopted the description given by the churchwardens of the party on whom they make the order." Coleridge, J. "I think that, whether in the case of orders or convictions, it is the duty of this court to see that the justices do not act without jurisdiction. But when once their jurisdiction appears, the language in which facts are stated by them should be construed fairly and candidly, and supported by reasonable intendment. Here the question is, with reference to their jurisdiction, whether the word 'of' sufficiently indicates the place of the party's abode, on whom they have made their order; I think it does. The word then being sufficient in itself, have the justices employed it? On reading through the order, I think it appears that they have adopted, as their own, the word used in the first instance by the churchwardens, and have in fact adjudicated upon T. G.'s residence. The case of Day v. King, 5 A. & E., is distinguishable. The order in that case set forth the evidence of a number of facts, the existence of which was necessary in order to give the justices jurisdiction, but the adjudication did not decide that they had any existence." Rule discharged. Counsel then applied for costs, it being a rule against magistrates. Per Curiam. "No; it is a very slovenly order."

Pauper not to be sent to such sufficient person.

Reg. v. Jones, Fol. 41; 1 Bott, 425. There was an order for the grandmother to take care of her grandchildren, and by the order they send the grandchildren to the grandmother. By the whole court: "They cannot send the grandchildren to the grandmother; but the justices ought to have made a rate upon the grandmother of so much a-week." See 59 Geo. III. c. 12, §. 38.

It must appear that pauper is chargeable.

And an order may be that the grandfather shall pay so much (a) for the time past, while the grandchild was chargeable, as well as for the time to come, the father being living, but unable to do it. (Reg. v. Joice, 16 Vin. Abr. 423.) The inability of the father need not appear in the order. (Rex v. Cornish, ante, 80.)

Penalty of 20*s*. a month for disobedience, but the order of maintenance to a larger extent may be enforced by indictment.

Mr. Christian has supposed (1 Bla. Com. 448, note 1,) that the relations mentioned in the 43 Eliz. c. 2, can only be compelled to allow each other 20*s. a-month, or* 13*l. a-year;* but he has not distinguished between the power to award a sufficient maintenance and the punishment for the breach of the order. The amount of maintenance is in the discretion of the magistrates, and they may order much more than 20*s*. a-month. And if the party disobey the order by not paying that sum, though exceeding 20*s*. a-month, he may be indicted. (2 Burr. 799.)

Rex v. Robinson, 2 Burr. 799. The defendant was indicted for refusing to obey an order of sessions for maintaining his two infant grandchildren.

(a) Retrospective order on a parish is bad, Rex v. Maulden, 2 Man. & R. 146; 8 B. & C. 80, post.

Order of Maintenance.

In arrest of judgment it was urged that this is a new offence: and where a statute creates a new offence, and gives a particular penalty, and a specific method of recovering the same, that course ought to be pursued, and the party shall not be punished by indictment. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The rule is certain, that where a statute creates a new offence by prohibiting and making unlawful anything that was lawful before, and appoints a specific remedy against such new offence, not antecedently unlawful, by a particular sanction and particular method of proceeding, that method must be pursued, and no other; but where the offence was antecedently punishable by a common law proceeding, and a statute prescribes a particular remedy by a summary proceeding, there either method may be pursued, and the prosecutor is at liberty to proceed either at common law, or in the method prescribed by the statute; because there the sanction is cumulative, and doth not exclude the common law punishment. In the present case a remedy existed before the statute of the 43 Eliz.; for disobedience to an order of sessions is an offence indictable at common law. So that there are two remedies: one, to proceed by way of indictment for disobeying the order, where the weekly payment is neglected or refused to be made: the other, to distrain for the 20*s.* penalty after neglect of payment for a month. The former method has been taken in the present case; and there is no doubt but that an indictment will lie for disobeying an order of sessions. But, notwithstanding there are two remedies given, it would be extremely oppressive to take the remedy by indictment, if there are no circumstances which obstruct the proceeding in the shorter way of summary remedy. This would be wrong and unreasonable when the primary remedy can be put in practice. But in some cases it may be impracticable to proceed in the summary method by way of distress, as if the party upon whom the order is made be gone out of the county (which is said to be the case here), in which case the penalty cannot be levied by distress and sale, nor the offender committed by the justices. And there may be a disobedience to the order, even before the month is out, and the forfeiture is only 20*s.* for every month which they shall fail. However, that would be too severe a verdict for disobedience to the order, with such very great haste as not to wait till the month should be expired." And the court were unanimously of opinion that the judgment ought not to be arrested.

Indictment will lie for refusing to obey the order of sessions.

An order of maintenance must be positive, not by recommendation; it must observe the words of the statute, and state how long the maintenance is to continue. (Rex v. Pennoyer, 1 Bott, 433.)

It must be an order, not a recommendation.

Since disobeying an order of justices is an offence at common law, (vide Rex v. Balme, Vol. III., tit. Indictment, s. 2), the law of the above case also applies to orders made by two or more justices in petty sessions, under stat. 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 26, ante; 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 31.

An order must be served and obedience formally demanded, to complete an indictable offence. (4 Dougl. Rep. 388; R. v. Moorhouse.)

The 5 Geo. I. c. 8, recites that divers persons run or go away from their places of abode into other counties or places, and sometimes out of the kingdom, some men leaving their wives, a child, or children, and some mothers run or go away, leaving a child or children, upon the charge of the parish or place where such child or children was or were born, or last legally settled, although such persons have some estates, which should ease the parish of their charge in whole or in part, and then enacts "that it shall and may be lawful for the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of such parish or place where any such wife, or child or children shall be so left, upon application to, and by warrant or order from any two justices of the peace, to take and seize so much of the goods and chattels, and receive Churchwardens accountable for the moneys so received.

By s. 2, the churchwardens and overseers aforesaid shall be accountable to the justices at quarter sessions for all such money as they, or any of them, shall receive by virtue of this act.

Punishment as a vagrant.

The 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3, enacted, that persons being able to work or other means, but refusing wilfully or neglecting to work to support their families, whereby they shall become chargeable to the parish, shall be deemed idle and disorderly persons, punishable by imprisonment and hard labour, not exceeding a month. And the fourth section enacts that "every person running away and leaving his wife, or his or her child or children, chargeable, or whereby she or they, or any of them shall become chargeable to any parish, township, or place, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, punishable as therein mentioned." See tit. Vagrants.

A bastard is not "a child" within the Vagrant Act.

Reg. v. Maude, 6 Jurist, 646, Wightman, J. "On a rule for a mandamus to D. Maude, justice, to convict a single woman under the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, for running away and leaving her bastard child chargeable to the parish, the question to be considered was, whether a bastard was included under the word 'child' in the act of parliament. By the 4th section, certain persons are to be deemed rogues and vagabonds, and, amongst them, 'every person running away and leaving his wife, or his or her child or children chargeable to the parish.' It was argued that, though in the cases of tenure the word 'child' is to be understood a legitimate child, it is not to be so considered where the object of the law is to punish or to disable. It was admitted, that the question was raised for the first time, and that it had hitherto been considered that the penalties of the act applied to the desertion of legitimate and not of illegitimate children. But it will, on considering the question, appear that the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, is not the first statute in which the same or nearly the same words are used in describing a class of persons who are to be deemed rogues and vagabonds. By the 3 Geo. IV. c. 40, s. 3, 'all persons who run away and leave their wives or children chargeable to the parish, are to be so deemed; and by the 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 2, 'all persons who run away and leave their wives or children, whereby they become chargeable to the parish,' are to be deemed rogues and vagabonds. In all these statutes the words are nearly the same, 'wives or children,' and by placing them together, it would seem, without more, to indicate that the legislature intended legitimate children and not bastards; and for nearly a century these words have been so used, and in those statutes have been so considered. And there is no instance to be found, at least I have found none, of any attempt to apply those words to illegitimate children. But it has been expressly held, in the case of The City of Westminster, v. Gerrard, (2 Bulstr. 346) that a bastard was not within the 7th section of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, which enacts, 'that the fathers and grandfathers, and the children of every poor person unable to work, shall relieve.' I am therefore disposed to think that a bastard child is not within the meaning of the word 'child,' as used in the act of parliament in question. It is no further necessary to refer to the acts of parliament relating to the putative fathers and mothers of bastards, than to observe that distinct provisions are made for the maintenance of bastard children, and the compelling the parents to provide for them; and that in all such statutes, bastards are described in terms as such; and that in the General Poor Law Amendment Act, 4 & 5 Will. IV, c. 76, where the word 'child' is used, as for example in sect. 56, a legitimate child is clearly intended; and that where the word 'child' is intended to have a more extensive signification, it is expressly so declared, as in sect. 57, by which the husband is made liable to maintain the children of the wife before marriage, whether legitimate or illegitimate. The only case referred to in the argument in support of the rule, was that of R. v. Hodnett, (1 T. R. 86,) in which it was held, that a bastard was within the meaning of the Marriage Act, 26 Geo. II. c. 33, s. 11; but the question there was not as here with respect to the meaning of the word 'child,' which was not used either in the 11th or the subsequent section, but whether a bastard was so strictly filius nullius, that he could not be considered within the meaning of the statute, which requires that the marriage of a person under age by licence shall be by consent of the father, mother, or guardian. That case seems to me hardly to bear upon the particular point in the present, which turns, as I have already stated, upon the meaning of the legislature in the use of the word 'child;' and I therefore think that the rule should be discharged."

14. Persons Deserting their Families.

The order must state how much of the goods or rents should be seized, and the quantum of relie to be appropriated out of them; and in case of rents must limit the period of such appropriations.

Stable v. Dixon, 6 East, 163. In covenant for rent, the defendant pleaded as to 7*l.* 16*s.* parcel of the rent, that before the rent became due, the plaintiff had gone away from his place of abode at Corney into some other place, leaving his wife chargeable to Corney, their place of settlement; that he continued away from the 24th of June, 1801, to the time of the action brought, and that during all that time she continued chargeable; and was necessarily maintained by the parish: whereupon, upon application of the overseers, an order was made by two justices, and delivered to the overseers, whereby the said justices authorised and commanded the said overseers of Corney to receive the annual rents and profits of the lands and tenements of the plaintiff at Bromhill, towards the discharge of the parish at Corney for the providing for the plaintiff's wife, &c. On the 18th of July, 1801, the order was confirmed by the Court; and the Court did then order the overseers, &c., to receive 7*l.* 16*s.* rent of the rents of the lands of the plaintiff at B., towards the discharge of the said parish for the providing the plaintiff's wife. And then the plea alleged payment. To this the replication was, that on the first of October, 1801, the said 7*l.* 16*s.* in the order of sessions mentioned, was paid by defendant to the then overseers of Corney, pursuant to the said order, and that on the 25th of March, 1802, the said 7*l.* 16*s.* was allowed by the plaintiff to the defendant out of the rent. To this replication it was by the defendant rejoined, that the said sum of 7*l.* 16*s.* so mentioned in the fourth plea to have been so paid, was another and a different sum of 7*l.* 16*s.* than the sum of 7*l.* 16*s.* so deducted and allowed as aforesaid, viz. for the second year's payment under the said order in the said plea mentioned. To this there was a demurrer. And it was urged, that the original order was void, as being prospective, to seize the rents and profits for future expenses; or if it might be prospective, still it did not ascertain the quantum of relief required by the parish, conformably with the words "so much" in the statute; and Rex v. Chaffey (a) was cited. Also that the sessions had it only in their power to confirm the order, and direct a sale, and (perhaps) vary the sum before directed to be levied. And, that if the sessions could remedy any defect in the original order by ascertaining the sum to be raised, they have fixed it at 7*l.* 16*s.*, and that sum is by the pleadings admitted to be paid and deducted out of the rent: the order therefore is functus officio; for it does not state that the same sum shall be raised annually. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The 5 Geo. I. gave to magistrates a power of appropriating to the purposes of the act so much of the goods and chattels, and so much of the annual rents and profits of the

(a) 2 Ld. Raym. 858, where on a motion to quash an order of justices authorising the overseers to seize "of the goods of the defendant what they should judge proper to secure the parish for the maintenance of a bastard child," it was objected that the 13 & 14 Car. II., c. 1, 2, s. 19, only authorised a seizure of what the justices should deem proper; and for this reason the order was quashed.

14. Persons Deserting their Families.

party, as they should order and direct, or as the sessions afterwards, to whose confirmation such order is to be submitted, should think fit. But it never was meant to invest the parish officers or magistrates with a right to take indefinitely all the property of such a person without apportioning how much of it was to be taken for that purpose. The language of the act is, that the goods and chattels, &c. are to be taken for or towards the discharge of the parish; which imports that it was to relieve the parish from a burthen already incurred, and which was therefore capable of being then ascertained. But even if they had a prospective power, still the justices are to ascertain how much is to be taken. The act expressly says, the officers shall take so much as the justices shall order. That makes it imperative on the magistrates to ascertain the sum: but if an order like this could be sustained, it would open a door to great vexation. If any person happened to go away, leaving his family a charge on the parish, it would authorise the justices to make the parish officers trustees for the whole of his property to whatever amount. The original warrant then being made in the exercise of an indefinite instead of a limited authority, and being void in that respect, the next question is, Whether it were capable of receiving confirmation from the sessions? and assuming that it could, as capable of limitation in respect of the sum to be taken by the parish officers (for they seem there to have abandoned the ground of an indefinite seizure), then can the order of sessions be sustained beyond the terms of it, as an order to receive the sum of 7*l.* 16*s.*? Admitting that it might be good to that extent, as an order to receive a definite sum (subject, however, to the objection to it as a confirmation of an original indefinite order of seizure), the answer is, that the sum is already paid and allowed: but taking it as it is now contended for, as an order to receive that sum annually out of the rents and profits without any limitation of time, the objection applies, that from want of such limitation, as, 'till some other order made,' it is void by the authority of the case mentioned. Therefore, unless the order of sessions be understood as limited to raise 7*l.* 16*s.* once for all, that would be invincibly bad; and if so understood, the order has been satisfied." Grose, J. "The defendant insists that the order of sessions authorises the annual payment of 7*l.* 16*s.* for ever. If it do, such an order cannot be sustained for a moment, for the statute authorises the overseer to take only so much as the justices shall direct: that is, so much as the parish shall have sustained. The intention of the legislature was only to indemnify the parish: and it meant either that the money ordered to be taken should have been expended by the parish, or that the justices should judge what was proper to be expended upon the family of the absconding man." Lawrence, J. "The first order ought to have specified the sum to be raised; it should have specified how much property was to be seized, and then the order of sessions should have stated how much of that should be sold or appropriated. I cannot consider the order of sessions as directing that more than one sum of 7*l.* 16*s.* should be taken. If more had been intended they should have said so more distinctly, by adding the word 'annually,' or 'till further order.' The defendant has no reason to complain of having been misled by the order. Besides, if the order were illegal, he should have refused payment, and if indicted for disobedience he might have defended himself; or he might have brought an action of trespass if his goods had been distrained, for he would not have been concluded by an order to which he was no party from showing that it was illegal. But I think the order of sessions only meant that one sum of 7*l.* 16*s.* should be taken."—Judgment for the plaintiff.

Can the order be prospective?

Can the illegal order of justices receive confirmation from the sessions?

If the husband remain in the parish, his effects cannot be seized for his wife's support The act applies to runaways only.

It has been held, that if a man refuse to maintain his wife, but nevertheless remains in the parish, no order can be made on 5 Geo. I. c. 8, to seize his effects; but the wife must have recourse to the common remedy of suing for alimony; or any one who supplies her with necessaries may have his action against the husband for money expended to his use. (Rex v. Justices of Kent, Burn's Justice, 25*th edit.*) See now the 5 Geo. IV. ante.

Assignment by a

Before the 5 Geo. I. the parish officers might have taken an assignment of the property of the husband, and there is nothing in this statute to prevent that. But as the land was conveyed in trust for the benefit of a charitable use, to the intent that the rents and profits may be applied to the use and benefit of the poor in aid of the poor-rate, the deed is within the enacting clause of 9 Geo. II. c. 36, s. 1, and not being enrolled is void. It is not a deed within the 2nd sect., made for a valuable consideration paid by the person to whom it is made.

pauper in custody to indemnify the parish for expenses incurred for his wife, is good; but it is a charitable use and must be enrolled.

Rex v. Flintan, 1 Bar. & Adol. 227. This was an appeal against a conviction of the defendant as an idle and disorderly person for refusing to maintain his wife.—Conviction confirmed. Case:—Elizabeth, the wife of W. H. Flintan, became chargeable to the parish of St. Andrew on the 20th of February, 1829, and received from that time to the time of the conviction four shillings a week from the said parish. W. H. Flintan was then able wholly to maintain his wife. W. H. Flintan and his wife cohabited together for some years until the 26th of November, 1826, when they quarrelled on account of her having pawned some of their plate; and on the following day she quitted his house in his absence, and without his knowledge, and has not resided with him since. She subsequently sued her husband for alimony, by reason of adultery committed by the husband, who produced, in his defence, evidence of adultery committed by his wife; and the Court decreed, that W. H. Flintan had been guilty of adultery, and that the said Elizabeth Flintan had been guilty of adultery, and therefore dismissed W. H. Flintan from the citation. The adultery which was proved upon the wife had been committed while she lived with her husband, and without his knowledge or subsequent condonation; the adultery proved upon him did not take place till after that time, and after she had left him. The question for the opinion of this Court was, Whether W. H. Flintan was, at the time of the said conviction, legally bound, under these circumstances, to maintain his wife, within the meaning of the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3? Bayley, J. "This case is very clear. By this statute, a man is criminally answerable for refusing to maintain any of his family whom he is legally bound to maintain. That obligation must be made out; and it is not established in the case of a wife who has left her husband and lives in adultery." Littledale, J. "I do not see the distinction attempted between the parish and an individual supplying necessaries. If the husband is not obliged to answer for the wife's contracts, or to receive her into his house, it cannot be said that he is 'legally bound to maintain her.'" Parke J. "It would be strange if the Court could hold that a man was not civilly liable for the supply of necessaries to his wife, and yet that not supplying them rendered him a vagrant." (a)—Conviction quashed.

A man is not liable to the penalty of 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 3, for neglecting and refusing to maintain his wife, who has left him and committed adultery; although he himself has been guilty of adultery since her departure.

Justices empowered to order payment of wages of seamen, whose family, during his absence, has become chargeable, for the indemnity of parishes.

The 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 32, recites that, "in many instances the wives and families of seamen employed in the merchants' service become chargeable to parishes, while their husbands and fathers are absent on such service, and it is expedient to provide for the indemnity of such parishes by and out of the wages of such seamen; it enacts, that where the wife or family of any seaman employed in any voyage or trip (not being his Majesty's service) shall, during his absence on such employment, become chargeable to any parish, it shall be lawful for two justices, upon complaint thereof to them made by any one or more of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish, and verified on oath, by order under their 15. Of Relieving Casual Poor.

1. By whom to be relieved, &c.

It is contrary to the humane spirit of the English laws, that any individual shall be permitted to perish from starvation or want of medical assistance. Whoever is by sudden emergency or urgent distress deprived of the ordinary means of subsistence, has a right to resort for immediate relief to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which he may happen to be at the time when he is thus bereft of support, whether he has acquired a settlement there or not, or to the relieving officer; and it is the bounden duty of the overseers and relieving officers immediately, and without waiting for an order of relief, to render the necessary assistance in such cases.

Duty of overseers to relieve.

By the 4 & 5 Will. IV., c. 76, s. 54, the overseers are bound, in cases "of sudden and urgent necessity," to give relief in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money, whether the party is settled in the parish or not; and if they refuse, a justice may make an order; and also in cases of sudden and dangerous illness, give an order for medical relief.

Duty of overseer under 4 & 5 W. 4 c. 76.

The relieving officer is also bound to supply all cases of immediate want: of this provision the professional beggar fully avails himself. At a late period of the day, when there is no time for inquiry into the truth of his story, he applies for relief, and the relieving officer gives him an order for the workhouse, which the beggar knows ensures him some food and a clean bed without any cost. To check impositions, the legislature has, by the 5 & 6 V. c. 57, s. 5, provided that the guardians may prescribe a task of work for such persons; but they are not to be detained for more than four hours after breakfast, and if they refuse to work, they may be committed as vagabonds.

Duty of relieving officer.

Vagrants relieved in the workhouse may be compelled to work for four hours.

Where guardians have been appointed under the 22 Geo. III, c. 83, the 38th section provides, that in case any poor person shall be retarded in his passage through a parish in which he has no settlement by accident, by dangerous illness, or bodily infirmity, the guardian where such distressed object shall be, shall provide lodging and suitable nourishment and assistance, and may recover the expenses from the guardian of the parish in which he is settled. It makes provision also for the burial of such persons if they die, and also of those found dead. (a)

Where a person in need has no settlement, or it cannot be discovered, he must be relieved in the parish where he happens to be whilst remaining in a state of pauperism; and so also if he is irremovable.

Who are casual poor.

There is also another class of paupers to be here mentioned, viz. persons born in Scotland, Ireland, or the Isle of Man, Guernsey, or Jersey, and who have acquired no settlement in England or Wales; and provisions have been made for their removal. Persons comprehended within any of the above descriptions are called "casual poor," the law with respect to whom will be here stated in detail.

In Paynter v. Williams (post), it was argued that casual poor were persons in the parish without the intention of remaining there. B. Bolland. "I think that definition of casual poor cannot be so confined. In R. v Chatham, 8 East, 498, Lord Ellenborough lays down the rule much wider." See that case, which determines that persons whose settlements are unknown are casual poor.

any dangerous illness or bodily infirmity, without the means of subsistence, or of proceeding to the place of his or her settlement, the guardian living near the place where such distressed object shall be, shall, and is hereby required, upon notice thereof, forthwith to provide lodging, and suitable nourishment and assistance (and also clothing, if necessary) for such person, until he or she can be removed with safety; and when such person shall be in a state of health fit to be removed, shall take such person to some neighbouring justices of the peace of the county, riding, division, city, or place, where such person was found, who shall examine him or her upon oath, touching the place of his or her settlement, and make an order for his or her removal thither, if they think fit: and the parish officer who shall so receive and provide for such person or persons as aforesaid, shall make a charge of the expenses attending the same, which, on being allowed and certified by the justices before whom such poor person shall be so taken, or some other neighbouring justices within the limit where such person was found, the same shall be paid by the guardian of the parish, township, or place, where such poor person shall be settled, in case the same can be discovered, and shall happen to be within that county, on demand made thereof, and on the production of such allowance and certificate as aforesaid, or in default of payment, the same shall be levied upon the goods and chattels of any such guardian so making default, after due summons, by warrant from a justice of peace having jurisdiction there; and if any poor and sick person circumstanced as aforesaid shall die before he or she can be so examined, or if any poor person shall be found dead in any parish or place to which he or she did not belong, the guardian of such parish or place respectively shall, and is hereby required, in every such case, to cause such person to be buried in the parish, township, or place where he or she so died or was found dead, and shall make a charge of the expenses attending the same respectively, which shall be allowed and certified by a justice of the peace, after examining into the place of his or her settlement, and shall be paid by the guardian of the parish, township, or place where such person shall appear to have been settled, if the same shall be within that county; but in case the settlement of such poor persons respectively cannot be discovered, or shall not be within that county, the same shall be paid by the treasurer of such county, riding, division, city, or place where such person was so relieved, on the production of such allowance and certificate, out of the county or public money to be collected within his limit, and allowed to such treasurer in his accounts."

And by 33 Geo. III. c. 35, s. 3, "after the passing of this act, all such casual poor as may happen to be within, and would be entitled to relief from, any one of such parishes, townships, or places as have been, or may hereafter be, united together for the purposes of the act hereinbefore first mentioned, shall be relieved by all the said parishes, townships, or places conjointly, and in the same respective proportion as they shall and are directed to contribute for the general purposes of the said act, according to the provisions and regulations in the said act specified and contained."

containing a child at the Hospital, which the governor refused to receive. This child is casual poor, and must be maintained by the parish of St. Pancras, within whose ambit the hospital is situated.

1. By whom to be Relieved.

Where a bastard child is born, for whose support the parents neglect to provide necessaries, the parish officers are obliged to do so, without an order of justices for that purpose. (Hags v. Bryant, 1 Hen. Bla. 253.)

Neglected bastard.

Independent of the particular provision for places having guardians, it may now be considered as a general principle, that there is a legal and moral obligation upon the overseers of every parish to maintain every pauper, that meets with an accident or becomes afflicted with a sudden and dangerous illness in his parish; and that the parish cannot be relieved by causing such person to be removed to a neighbouring parish. It is true, that where an inhabitant of the parish is so afflicted, an order for his removal may be obtained, and execution of it suspended, and then the expenses incurred will be repaid by the parish in which the pauper is settled, if he was afterwards removed to it. But no such order can be obtained, where the pauper was accidentally in the parish, and has not come there to settle. Without such order, the parish in which the accident happens has no legal claim on the parish in which the pauper is settled; but if an overseer authorises directly a surgeon to attend a non-resident parishioner, he is liable to the surgeon. It seems he is also liable, if after knowledge of the attendance of the surgeon, he sanctions it by requiring a fresh attendance. No promise can be implied from a master to pay a surgeon for his attendance on his servant, who may meet with an accident in the discharge of his duty. These principles will be found to have been established in the following cases:—

Relief of paupers meeting with an accident.

Rex v. St. James, Bury St Edmunds, 10 East, 25. An order removed S. Offord from St. James in Bury to Ixworth. Order quashed. Case:— The pauper being settled in Ixworth, was employed on the 23d of December, 1807, as a day labourer, by R. H. of Ixworth, to drive a load of hay to Bury, and to return with a load of muck. In loading the muck, he fell and broke his leg. On the 24th of December, two magistrates took the pauper's examination, made out the order of removal, and (the pauper being unable to be moved) suspended the execution by an indorsement on the back of the order. The pauper was attended by a surgeon, by the order of the parish officers of St. James. On the 1st of April, 1808, the magistrate took off the suspension, and made the order for payment of the expenses. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "No doubt can be raised on the question; no person is removable from the parish where he is, but by positive statute. The 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, (which confers the power of removing) after reciting that poor people endeavour to settle themselves in those parishes where there is the best stock, &c., and when they have consumed it then go to another parish, &c. says, that it shall be lawful, on complaint of the parish officers, within forty days after any such person coming so to settle as aforesaid, in any tenement under the yearly value of 10*l.* for any two justices of the peace of the division where any person likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to remove him to the place of his last legal settlement. The expression of coming to settle, denotes the party comes animo morandi, or manendi; it may be for a temporary purpose, but still it must be understood that he comes to settle there. But how can it be said that the pauper went into this parish animo morandi at all? He went into the town with a cart of hay, which he was to dispose of, and return with a load of muck. How, then, can it be said that he went there to settle? Then, if he were not removable within the terms of the 13 and 14 Car. II., can we find any enlargement of the power of removal? The 35 Geo. III. has the words inhabiting or sojourning; but it would be an extravagant construction of either of those terms to say that it meant to include such a case as this.

A labourer who goes to a parish to load a cart, and breaks his leg there by accident, is casual poor, and no order of removal can be made with respect to him whilst he is unable to be removed. (a)

Persons "coming to settle" only can be removed.

(a) As to the removal of a person oscillating between two parishes, Rex v. Birmingham, 11 East, 251, post.

1. By whom to be Relieved.

Then, if the order be not warranted by either of these statutes, there is no authority for it, and the sessions have done right to quash it?'—Le Blanc, J. said, that "it had been properly admitted, that 35 Geo. III. did not enlarge the 13 & 14 Car. II. The 35 Geo. III. was meant to provide that persons who by law were before removable, if likely to become chargeable, should not be removed till actually so; and to make provision for suspending the order of removal, when made in case of sickness or infirmity, and that the expenses incurred in the care and maintenance of the persons, between the order to remove and the actual removal of them, should be defrayed by the parish to which they should be found to belong."

A poor person legally settled in the parish of A., came into the parish of B. animo morandi, and met with an accident, he cannot be regarded as casual poor, and an order of removal being made and suspended, the parish of A. must pay the expenses incurred in curing and maintaining the pauper during the suspension.

Rex v. Oldland, 6 N. & M. 529; 4 A. & E. 929. S. Vox was removed from Monythusloyn to Oldland. Order confirmed. Case:—Some considerable time before the accident hereinafter mentioned, S. Vox being then settled in Oldland, resided in Monythusloyn for the purposes of his employment, and continued to reside there up to the time of the order. During his residence he was employed in a colliery there, and in the course of his employment, on the 29th day of May, 1832, his thigh-bone was broken. Vox was thereupon carried to the nearest dwelling-house in Monythusloyn,—a surgeon was sent for by the parish officers of that parish, and the expense of 10*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* was afterwards, and by reason of the accident, incurred by the said parish officers in his cure and maintenance. Vox had not been chargeable to M. up to the time of the accident, but the surgeon had been employed by the said parish officers to attend Vox in consequence of the accident, before the order of removal was made. On the 30th of May, 1832, Vox, being by reason of the accident incapable of being removed or brought before any justice, for the purpose of being removed, without endangering his life, his examination was duly taken, and thereupon the order in question was made, and suspended. On the 31st of October following, Vox being in a fit state to be removed, the same justices took off the suspension, and made an order for the payment by the appellants of 10*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, for the expenses incurred under the suspension of the order. The question was, whether at the time when the order was made, Vox was removable from Monythusloyn, so as to charge the appellants with costs incurred under the suspension of that order.—Lord Denman. "This is a perfectly clear case. The pauper had, before the accident occurred, or the order of removal was made, come to settle, within the meaning of the 13 & 14 Car. 2, in Monythusloyn. Previously to 35 Geo. III. a person who had so come to inhabit, if likely to become chargeable, was removable. The 35 Geo. III. altered the law in that respect, and permitted the removal to take place only where the party was actually chargeable. It appeared to the legislature that there was some danger that a pauper who became chargeable by illness might be removed too soon, and the statute therefore gives power to the magistrates to suspend the order, if it shall appear to them that the pauper is unable to travel by reason of sickness or other infirmity, or that it would be dangerous for him so to do. 'Other infirmity,' I apprehend, means any infirmity, however occasioned, and therefore includes an accidental injury like that in the present case. There was another danger to be prevented. The party might be taken before a magistrate to be examined as to his settlement, before he was in a fit state to go out. This occasioned the fourth section of 49 Geo. III. c. 124, which provides that whenever any pauper is by age, illness, or infirmity, unable to be brought up to the petty sessions, to be examined as to his settlement, any one magistrate acting for the district where the pauper may be, may take his examination. The present is the converse of Rex v. St. James, in Bury St. Edmunds. The decision in that case proceeded on the ground that the party had not come to settle and inhabit, within the meaning of the statute of Charles. Here, he had come to settle and inhabit."—Littledale, J., concurred.—Patteson, J. "I think the order was valid. To hold otherwise, would be to decide in direct opposition to the act of 35 Geo. III. Undeniably the pauper might have been removed if that removal could have taken place without danger to his life.

He was an inhabitant; he had come to settle, and was actually chargeable. It is immaterial whether he became chargeable in consequence of an accident, or from any other circumstance. It is said that the pauper was not removable because he was liable to be maintained by the parish in which the accident occurred. If indeed it had happened that he was casually in the parish, then no removal could have taken place, because the statute of Charles only authorises the removal of persons who have come to settle. In that event he would have been a casual pauper. I do not agree with the definition, that casual poor are poor persons made chargeable to parishes by meeting with accidents in such parishes. A person who is resident in a parish, and becomes chargeable by reason of having met with an accident, cannot be considered as a casual pauper. I do not however mean to lay down that a foreigner, who resided in a parish, and who there met with an accident and became chargeable, might not be considered as a casual pauper."—Coleridge, J. "The question is, whether the pauper was removable at the time when the order was made, so as to charge the parish to which the pauper belonged with the cost of his maintenance, during the period of the suspension of the order of removal. First, then, was the pauper removable? If by this question it is meant to ask whether the magistrates could make a valid order of removal, I say that undoubtedly they could. The magistrates might have gone, if it had been necessary, and examined the pauper, as to his settlement. He had come into the parish animo morandi, and he was chargeable. But although the order might be made, it could not be carried into effect, on account of the infirmity of the pauper. The 35 Geo. III. was passed for the very purpose of providing for this state of circumstances. It empowers the magistrates to suspend the order, and imposes the expense of maintaining the pauper during the time of suspension, on the parish to which he belongs. The only remaining question is, whether the order of suspension could be made. It is shown that the pauper was incapable of being removed without danger to his life, in consequence of infirmity; and this being so, it follows, of course, that it was the duty of the justices to direct that the execution of the order should be suspended." Order of sessions confirmed.

Who are casual poor.

Rex v. St. Lawrence, Ludlow, 4 B. & Ald. 660. Order of removal from St. Lawrence, Ludlow, to Leinthall Starks, Salop, discharged. Case:—On the 31st of October, 1818, G. Thomas, the pauper, was sent with his master's team for coals, and on the road, in the parish of Bromfield, was thrown down by the horses, by which means his thigh was fractured: the accident took place about half a mile from Ludlow, in the parish of Bromfield. A person passing by with an empty waggon took the pauper to the Bell Inn, in the parish of St. Lawrence, Ludlow, where the pauper was taken in, and remained fourteen weeks, attended by a surgeon. The overseers of Ludlow came to the Bell the same day, and examined the pauper, and directed the mistress of the house to take care of him: they also were present when the surgeon was there. On the 4th of November an order of removal was made by the magistrates, removing the pauper to Leinthall Starks, his place of settlement. There was also an order of suspension at the same time. On the 17th of July, an order for the charges incurred by St. Lawrence was made.—Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that in this case the sessions were right in holding that the pauper was irremovable. The Rex v. St. James, Bury St. Edmunds, (a) seems to me to have been most correctly decided, and I do not think the present case materially distinguishable from it. But it is said that Rex v. Birmingham, (b) 14 East 251, is at variance with its authority. I am not of that opinion; but if it were necessary to decide between the two cases as conflicting authorities, I should adhere to the opinion of the court in Rex v. St. James, Bury St. Edmunds. For the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, only gave a power of removal of those paupers who were coming to settle. Now how can it be said that this pauper was coming to settle in St. Lawrence, Ludlow? Nor does the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, make any difference, for previously to the passing of that act, a pauper under these circumstances could not have been removed. And that act only regulated the powers of removal already existing, but did not give any new power to the magistrates for removing paupers who were irremovable before." Order of sessions confirmed.

A pauper settled in A. met with a severe accident in B., and was carried into the adjacent parish C., to be cured: He is casual poor in C., and irremovable. An order of removal to A., and suspended, is invalid.

Where a pauper had his leg fractured in one parish, and was conveyed for cure to a house in another parish, the overseer of the parish where the cure was performed, was held liable for the expenses. (a)

Lamb v. Bunce, 4 M. & Sel. 275. Assumpsit for a surgeon's bill. Smith, a carter to a farmer in West Woodhay parish, met with an accident, in driving his master's team, in the parish of Hamsted Marshall by which one of his legs was fractured. He was immediately conveyed to the nearest and most convenient house, which was a public-house situate in the adjoining parish of Enborne, and distant about half a mile from the spot where the accident happened. Smith, not being in a condition to be removed to his master's, the plaintiff, who was a surgeon and was generally employed to attend the poor of Enborne, was sent for, but it did not appear by whom, and he attended him until he recovered. During his attendance, the defendant, the overseer of Enborne, frequently visited Smith, and knew that the plaintiff attended him, and when Smith was fit to be removed, took him in a cart to his master's at West Woodhay. Smith was not a parishioner of Enborne.—Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This pauper was to be considered as casual poor wherever his infirm and indigent body was found, and he had a claim on the parish where he was so found to have his necessities provided for by them. That was the parish of Enborne; and I consider that when the parish officer visited the pauper according to his duty, and knew that the plaintiff, who was generally employed for the poor, was in attendance upon him, and did not repudiate his attendance, he in effect commanded it. It cannot be matter of dispute in point of law, and I could wish it were so understood, that where time is not afforded for procuring an order of justices, the law raises an obligation against the parish where the pauper lies sick as casual poor, to look to the supply of his necessities; and, if the parish officer stands by and sees that obligation performed by those who are fit and competent to perform it, and does not object, the law will raise a promise on his part to pay for the performance. Mr. Shepherd has argued, that a moral obligation is not sufficient to raise an implied promise to a third person; but I think this case is out of that objection, because the defendant, by not repudiating the plaintiff's attendance, did that which is equivalent to a previous request. As to the objection that the parish of Hampstead Marshal was the place where the accident and injury arose, there is no pretence for saying that there is an

(a) In a former edition was the following note. It may sometimes happen that the parish where the accident occurs may not afford a proper place to give relief. The parish officers or others may, probably, without bestowing a thought upon the boundaries of parishes, do that which ought to be done immediately, namely, carry the pauper to the house nearest to the place where the accident happened, instead of conveying him to a considerable distance. In Lamb v. Bunce, the impression of the Court was, that the parish in which the house was situate was the proper parish to have given relief. There is no express decision upon this point, and Mr. Justice Bayley, it will be seen, reserved it, in giving his judgment in Tomlinson v. Bentall, (post, 117.) It can hardly be doubted, however, that whenever the question comes to be decided, that the Courts will follow up the manifest impression of these cases, and declare that this expense must be borne by the parish in which the house is situate where relief is afforded, if such house is nearest to the spot where the accident has happened, and has been chosen on that account alone, from a laudable anxiety to obtain for the pauper the most prompt and efficient assistance. It can make no difference in this respect, even where the pauper's settlement is in the adjoining parish. It is highly prejudicial to the rights of the poor, that when an accident has happened, the question should be agitated, or even pass in the minds of those persons in whose power the sufferer is of necessity placed, whether a burthen, which must fall somewhere, must be borne by them, or can, by any contrivance, be shifted to others. The various dicta upon this subject seem to establish that a pauper, become so under such circumstances, obtains a settlement pro tempore in the parish where the accident has left him to be relieved; and that his settlement in his own parish is suspended till the cause of its interruption is removed.

exclusive liability attaching to the parish upon that account; there is no reason for connecting the place where the accident happened with the liability."—Le Blanc, J. "There is no doubt that if the parish officers had sent for the plaintiff to attend the pauper, he would have been bound so to do. For here the plaintiff was in the habit of attending the parish poor; therefore he was not a stranger, but a person pointed out by the parish as the person to attend to this duty. He does attend, and this with a full knowledge of the parish officer, who does not make any objection on his part; consequently the parish officer must be taken to have assented to it. Therefore, there is quite sufficient to raise the presumption of a previous request."

1. By whom to be Relieved.

In case of accident to a poor person, it is the duty of the overseers of the parish in which the accident happened to provide necessary medical and other relief, and such parish is bound to pay all needful expenses, though the pauper is in fact removed to another parish.

Tomlinson v. Bental, 5 B. & C. 738; 8 D. & R. 493. Assumpsit for a surgeon's bill. The plaintiff was a surgeon. The defendants in 1824 were overseers of the parish of Heybridge. In October in that year P. Bannister, a poor woman belonging to the parish of Malden, returning from Witham to Malden in a cart, about ten o'clock at night, was thrown out of the cart in the parish of Heybridge, near to a public-house there called the Hoy. Her thigh was broken, and she was otherwise much hurt. The constable of Heybridge being sent for, desired her to be sent out of that parish. She was placed again in the cart, and taken over a bridge (which divides Heybridge and Malden); the driver of the cart then remonstrated with the constable, and told him that he was wrong in removing her from Heybridge. Upon this the constable ordered her to be taken back to Heybridge, and said he would go and consult a neighbouring magistrate. The magistrate, who was also churchwarden of Heybridge, advised him to take the woman to the nearest public-house and send for a doctor. The landlord of the Hoy refused to take her in. The driver of the cart then suggested to the constable to take her to the poorhouse. The constable said he did not know where they would put her. The pauper, who had been exposed to the cold air for some hours, said, "if you do not know where to put me, for God's sake take me home." The constable desired a bystander to pay attention to the request made by the pauper to be sent home, as it was likely they might be called to speak to the fact upon some future occasion. She requested not to be put under the care of the plaintiff, (who was apothecary of the parish of Malden,) but of one Thorpe, who was apothecary of Heybridge. The constable then desired her to be taken to Malden. The driver of the cart refused to take her back to Malden, unless the constable would give him a note that she should be taken care of by the parish of Heybridge. The constable said he would, but he did not. He accompanied her to her house at Malden, where she arrived about two o'clock in the morning, and asked Thorpe to attend her, and told him the pauper was at her own house. Thorpe said that in that case he, as the apothecary of Heybridge, had nothing to do with her. The constable then sent for Tomlinson, and the latter attended her for several weeks. B. Graham was of opinion, that there was some evidence to go to the jury, that the magistrate, who was churchwarden, and the constable, felt the obligation to afford the pauper relief, and that the constable actually undertook to pay the plaintiff for his attendance; and secondly, he was of opinion, that as the accident which happened in the parish of Heybridge was one which required immediate care and attention, it was the duty of the officers of that parish to have taken the pauper to the house nearest to the place where the accident happened, and where they could procure accommodation for her, and to have provided medical assistance immediately; and if, as humanity required them to have done, they had sent for a surgeon to attend her in that parish, they would clearly have been liable; and that they could not, by neglecting their duty and removing her to another parish, relieve themselves from that liability which the law had cast upon them. Verdict for the plaintiff. On motion for a new trial—Abbott, C. J. "The pauper met with the accident in Heybridge, an accident that entirely incapacitated her from going to her own place of abode; and, therefore, if she had been taken to any house in Heybridge, as she ought to have been, and relief had been administered to her there, it is clear that the parish officers would have been liable for the expenses of her cure. Rex v. St. James, in Bury St. Edmunds, (ante, 113,) is an authority to show that "it would not have been competent to the parish officers to have removed her, as a person coming to settle in Heybridge. If she had been taken to a house in Heybridge, therefore, the parish officers would have been under a moral and legal obligation to provide assistance for her. One of the parish officers did very properly recommend her to be taken to the nearest public-house, which was in Heybridge. The occupier of that house did not think proper to open his doors and receive her. A proposition was then made to take her to the poorhouse; and upon the way thither, some conversation took place, which excited in the mind of the poor woman (who at that time had been lying in the cold some hours) an alarm, whether, when she arrived there, she should be properly treated, and she said, 'for God's sake, take me to my own house!' and she was then taken home. The first proposal was to take her to her own parish; but, upon a remonstrance by the driver of the cart, the constable desisted. She was, however, ultimately taken to her own house. The constable of Heybridge sent to the plaintiff, and desired him to take care of her. As the parish officers of Heybridge must have paid for the medical attendance if she had remained there, it seems to me that the removal from that parish to another, (although it was her own,) coupled with the fact that the surgeon was called in from the parish of Malden, does not relieve the inhabitants of Heybridge from the obligation to which they would have been clearly liable, if this woman had been taken to some house in that parish, and taken care of there: and for these reasons I think that the verdict was right."—Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the verdict was right. It is of very great importance, with a view to the protection to which the poor are entitled, that it should be fully understood upon whom, under such circumstances as those which have occurred in the present case, the legal obligation to provide medical attendance attaches. I do not put the case upon the ground of moral obligation, or upon the ground of the constables having sent for and employed the plaintiff; but I put it upon the ground that the law imposed a legal obligation upon the parish officers of Heybridge to employ a surgeon for the cure of the pauper. I think it is highly prejudicial to the rights of the poor, that when an accident has happened, the question should be agitated or even pass in the minds of those persons in whose power the sufferer is of necessity placed, whether a burthen which must fall somewhere, must be borne by them, or can by any contrivance be shifted to others. It is of importance, therefore, that it should be certain upon whom the obligation to provide medical attendance rests. For otherwise the consequence will be, that poor persons, who ought not to be removed from the place where they have met with an accident, will, perhaps, at the risk of their life, but certainly with great aggravation of their sufferings, be removed to a distance. In this case the pauper met with the accident in Heybridge, which incapacitated her from moving herself from the spot where it happened. The best and most obvious course would have been, to have done that which the magistrate of the place suggested should be done, viz., to have removed her into the public-house, but if she was not placed there, she ought to have been placed in the poorhouse, or, at all events, she ought to have been sent to some house in the parish. I am of opinion that when the parish officers refused her an asylum in that parish where she was entitled to have it, and forced her to go to her own house, all the attendance given by the plaintiff in the parish of Malden, in consequence of the wrongful conduct of some of the parishioners of Heybridge, is to be considered as if it had been given in the parish where the accident happened, and as if the house which she occupied had been in the parish of Heybridge. Although the attendance was not given in the parish of Heybridge, but in the parish of Malden, yet as one of the parish officers of Heybridge knew that the attendance was indispensably necessary, and that the removal from Hey-bridge to Malden had been wrongful; it seems to me exactly the same as if the parish officer had stood by and seen the attendance of the surgeon upon the pauper in the parish of Heybridge" After referring to Lamb v. Bunce, he said, "There was a subsequent case of Gent v. Tomkins, in this Court, which seems to support the principle, that the law casts the obligation of providing medical attendance for a pauper disabled by an accident, upon that parish where the accident has happened. In that case the action was brought, not against the overseers of the parish in which the accident happened, but against the overseer of the parish to which the pauper belonged, and the Court intimated a very strong opinion that it was not properly brought against the overseer of the latter parish. It may sometimes happen that the parish in which the accident happens may not be the proper place to give relief. It may happen that the parish officers, without entering into the question what are the limits of particular parishes, will do that which ought to be done immediately, namely, carry the pauper to the house nearest the place where the accident happens, instead of carrying her to a considerable distance. In Lamb v. Bunce, ante, 91, the impression of the Court was, that the parish in which the house was situate was the proper parish to have given the relief; but, without deciding that point, I am of opinion that, in this case, inasmuch as the accident happened in the parish of Heybridge, and that was the place where, under all the circumstances, the pauper was entitled to receive surgical assistance, the plaintiff is entitled to look to the parish of Heybridge for payment of his bill." Holroyd, J. "The accident having happened to the pauper in the parish of Heybridge, it was the duty of the officers of that parish to provide medical assistance for her there. They might have done that, although the occupier of one public-house refused to receive her. But I think they could not, by removing her elsewhere, shift upon other people that burthen which the law cast upon themselves; and that, whether they procured the medical assistance to be given in the parish or out of the parish, they are liable."—Littledale, J. "Whenever any accident happens to a poor person of such a serious nature as to render removal out of the parish dangerous or improper, I think the law casts an undoubted obligation on that parish to administer all necessary relief. If the pauper in this case had actually been taken to a house in Heybridge, and resided there while the surgeon was attending her, that parish would have been liable for her cure; but it appears to me that, under the circumstances of this case, she was improperly taken out of the parish; and that any officer or inhabitant taking her to another parish, where it was improper to take her, cannot by so doing release the inhabitants of the former parish from the obligation."

1. By whom to be Relieved.

1. By whom to be Relieved.

If a pauper meet with an accident in a parish not his own, and he is attended by a surgeon there, no legal obligation lies upon the overseers of the pauper's parish to pay the surgeon's bill. (a)

Gent v. Tomkins, 1 D. & R. 541; 5 B. & C. 746. The plaintiff, a surgeon at Winslow, was called in to attend one Tyrrell, a pauper of Newton Longville, who had met with an accident in the former parish. Tyrrell was confined at Winslow, and regularly attended by the plaintiff till he was removed to his own parish, of which the defendant was an overseer. Previous to Tyrrell's removal from Winslow, the defendant called upon the plaintiff, and desired him to take care of the pauper, and do what he could for him, and added, "that he would see him paid;" and, on a subsequent application by the parish officers of Winslow, the defendant said, "that if it was right that they should pay the surgeon's bill, they would." The plaintiff originally made the parish officers of Winslow debtors in his bill, but subsequently altered it, and debited the parish officers of Newton Longville.—Abbott, C J. said, he was quite satisfied there was not in this case any legal obligation upon the defendant to pay the plaintiff's demand in the first instance, or to provide for the pauper. The court said they were clearly of opinion there must be a new trial, in order that the jury might distinctly consider whether the attendance of the plaintiff upon the pauper, after the accident, was in consideration of the defendant's express promise to pay.—Rule absolute.

(a) This case (as Sneath v. Tomkins) is noticed in a note 1 Car. & P. 132, where the reporters say, "that it was intimated from the bench, that two of the judges thought it highly doubtful whether, as the pauper was casual poor in B., there was any consideration even for a subsequent express promise by the overseer of A., and they had very great doubts whether the action could be maintained, as this promise came within the rule of nudum pactum."

But an overseer may render himself liable by express promise to pay.

In Wing v. Mill, 1 B. & A. 104. The pauper was attended by a surgeon (the plaintiff), but was not resident in W., the defendant's parish, though settled there, and Lord Ellenborough said, "In this case both the legal and moral obligation obtain. The parish of W. have, by their weekly allowance, admitted that they were bound to provide for the pauper, and the defendant, one of the overseers, after the pauper's death, expressly desires the plaintiff to send his bill made out to the overseers, and promises that he shall be paid. Watson v. Innes, Buller's N. P. 129, is decisive on the subject, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover."

Acquiescence in a surgeon's attendance upon a non-resident parishioner raises a promise by the overseer to pay; but without evidence of express employment or acquiescence of overseer, a surgeon cannot recover.

Paynter v. Williams, 1 Cromp. & Mees. 810. Lord Lyndhurst, "The facts of the case are, that the pauper being settled in G., resided in F. for some time, during which he received an allowance from his own parish; that allowance was afterwards discontinued, the overseers saying they would not pay him any more unless he removed into his own parish. He was afterwards taken ill, and attended for nine weeks by the plaintiff (a surgeon); then a letter is taken to the overseers of G., and they directed the allowance to be renewed, and it was continued to the death of the pauper. They knew, therefore, of the pauper's being there; that in my opinion amounts to a request on the part of the officers that the pauper should not be removed, and to a promise that they will allow what is requisite. They knew by the same letter of the plaintiff's attendance. This in my opinion was an acceptance of the plaintiff's services, and created a legal liability." Bayley, B., "The legal liability of the parish was not alone sufficient to enable plaintiff to maintain this action without a retainer or adoption by the parish. The legal liability does not give any person who chooses to attend a pauper a right to call for payment. In Wing v. Mill, supra, the parish officers knew of the attendance, and sanctioned it." Verdict for plaintiff for the expenses incurred after the letter.

If a stranger gives an order for the attendance of the plaintiff as a surgeon, he is liable. There can be no implied promise from a deputy overseer. (Watley v. Walters, 1 C. & P. 132.)

Parish liable for all attendance in cases of accident.

Simmons v. Wilmott, 3 Esp. R. 91, Lord Eldon held that the parish was not merely liable to a surgeon who exerts his professional skill, and gives the requisite medical attention to a pauper under such circumstances, but that a common person who took care of an individual who had been severely bruised by accident, by being thrown off his master's cart, so as to render it unsafe to remove him, and was carried to such person's home, who attended him for ten days and provided a nurse, &c., might recover against the parish for the lodging, maintenance, &c., of the individual so relieved, as he came within the description of casual poor. On the day of the accident, the plaintiff sent to the overseer to inform him of the circumstance and the overseer ordered the parish beadle to assist in taking care of the person, and Lord Eldon said, if a common person takes care of such a person on the liability of the parish officers, I think he has a right to recover against them.

The law will not raise an implied promise in the parish where a pauper is settled, to reimburse the money laid out by another parish in which he happened to be, in providing necessary medical assistance for him. (a)

Atkins v. Benwell, 2 East, 505. The plaintiffs were the parish officers of Toddington, and the defendants of Milton Bryant. J. Mitchell was a pauper settled at the time of his illness and death in Milton Bryant, but resided with his family at Toddington, and was there suddenly attacked with dangerous illness, which prevented his being removed from the place of his residence to that of his settlement without endangering his life. The plaintiffs gave notice to the defendants of the illness of their pauper within two or three days after the pauper was so taken ill; and the pauper, about three weeks from such notice, died in Toddington; and the plaintiffs, from the time of such notice, laid out 14*l.* 12*s.* as well for necessaries for the pauper and family, as for medicines, and also on the funeral. The present action was brought to recover that sum. The jury found that there was no express promise of the defendants to pay it to the plaintiffs. Watson v. Innes, (Bul. Ni. Pri. 129,) was cited, where, however, there was a special promise to pay the plaintiff's bill. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "That last circumstance makes all the difference. A moral obligation is a good consideration for an express promise; but it has never been carried further, so as to raise an implied promise in law. There is no precedent, principle, or colour for maintaining this action."—Le Blanc, J. "There was a moral as well as legal obligation to maintain the pauper in his illness in the parish where he was at the time."

A master is not liable, upon an implied assumpsit, to pay for medical attendance on a servant who has met with an accident in his service.

Wennall v. Adney, 3 Bos. & Pul. 247. This was an action to recover the amount of a surgeon's bill for attending the servant of defendant, who had broken his arm and was caried to the house of his mother, where the surgical attendance was given. As the defendant had not employed the plaintiff, or made any promise of payment, the plaintiff was nonsuited. Lord Alvanley, C. J. "I have reason to believe that the opinion delivered by Lord Kenyon, in Scarman v. Castell, (b) was not a hasty opinion, but formed upon reflection. I have no difficulty, however, in saying that I concur with the learned judge before whom this cause was tried, in thinking that the defendant is not liable. In this kind of question much may depend upon the nature of the contract entered into between the master and the servant. Sometimes a master engages to supply his servant with necessary victuals, and it may undoubtedly be argued, that necessary victuals mean such victuals as may suit the state of health or infirmity in which the servant happens to be; as if a servant be in need of wine, or victuals of that description, which are given by way of medicine. It is sufficient, however, to observe, that previous to Scarman v. Castell, there is no authority in the law of England to be found, which warrants the position contended for on the part of the plaintiff. I have no doubt whatever that parish officers are bound to assist, where such accidents as these take place; and that the law will so far raise an implied contract against them, as to enable any person who affords that immediate assistance which the necessity of the case usually requires, to recover against them the amount of money expended." The other judges fully concurred.

Parish officers bound to assist him.

The master of a servant, whose limb is fractured by an accident in the course of his duty, is not liable to the expense of his cure, but he is casual poor, and must be supported by the parish in which the accident happened.

Newly v. Wiltshire, Cald. 527; 4 Dougl. 283, S. C. This was an action brought by an overseer of one parish against the defendant, for expenses incurred in the cure of the defendant's servant, whose limb had been fractured by his falling from the shaft of his master's waggon, in the parish of which the plaintiff was overseer. The defendant knew of the accident the same night it happened, and visited the boy during the cure, and afterwards received him to complete his year's service, and paid him his whole year's wages. Lord Mansfield, "Whether judicially said, or when other subjects were under consideration, I cannot help thinking in general, that a master ought to take care of his servants in sickness. Upon every principle of humanity he ought; but the question here is, what is the law? and no authority has been produced to show that the parish have a remedy over against the master; and it cannot be. Parishes are bound to take care of their casual poor. There is no express contract to this purpose, nor can any be implied." Postea to the defendant.

2. Scotch and Irish Poor.

Geo. III. c. 12, and 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, as relates to the removal of poor persons born in Scotland, Ireland, the Isles of Man and Scilly, are repealed.

Justices at sessions may order removal, by sea or land, of chargeable poor born in Scotland, Ireland, the Isles of Man or Scilly, at the expense of the complaining parish.

2. And it is enacted, that from and after the first day of January, 1834, it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace, and they are hereby authorised and required, upon the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor, that any person born in Scotland, or Ireland, or in the Isle of Man or Scilly, hath become chargeable to such parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor, by himself or herself, or his or her family, to cause such person to be brought before them, and to examine such person and any other witness or witnesses on oath touching the place of the birth or last legal settlement of every such person, and to inquire whether he or she, or any of his or her children, hath or have gained any settlement in that part of the United Kingdom called England; and if it shall be found by such justices that the person so brought before them was born in either Scotland or Ireland, or the Isle of Man or Scilly, and hath not gained any settlement in England, and that he or she hath actually become chargeable to the complaining parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor, by himself or herself, or his or her family, then such justices shall, and they are hereby empowered, by an order of removal under their hands and seals, in the form in the Schedule hereunto annexed, to cause such poor person, his wife, and such of his or her children so chargeable, as shall not have gained a settlement in England, to be removed, by sea or land, in such manner as may have been directed by the justices at quarter sessions assembled in and for the county, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty in which the said parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor may be situate, by and at the charge and expense of the complaining parish, to Scotland or Ireland, or the Isle of Man or Scilly respectively, according as such poor person, or his or her family, shall belong to Scotland, Ireland, or the Isle of Man or Scilly, the charge and expense whereof shall be repaid, in manner hereinafter mentioned, to such complaining parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor, out of the county rate raised and levied in the county, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty in which such parish shall be situate.

Expense to be repaid by county &c., in which complaining parish is situate.

The wife and unemancipated children of a Scotchman, who has not acquired any settlement in England, must, if chargeable, be sent by a pass along with the husband to Scotland, and cannot be removed to the maiden settlement of the wife.

Rex v. Leeds, 4 B. & A. 498. An order for removing Hannah, the wife of T. Robinson, and her children, from Leeds to Almondbury, was discharged. Case: The husband of Hannah was a Scotchman, residing at Leeds with his family, and had not acquired any settlement in England. Not being able to maintain his wife and children, they were obliged to apply for relief to the township of Leeds, and were actually chargeable to that township at the time of the order. He consented that his wife and children should be removed to Almondbury, the place of his wife's maiden settlement.—Abbott, C. J. "This question arises out of the compulsory power formerly vested in justices of the peace, of removing a wife from her husband by consent: and it is one, and that not the smallest of the evils attendant on the poor laws, that cases should have arisen under them, in which this court has held that such a removal, amounting to a temporary divorce, might lawfully be made. It is to be observed, however, that in Rex v. Eltham, (a) there was the consent of both husband and wife to the separation. I am very glad we are relieved by this act of parliament from the necessity of considering those cases. I think it is impossible to read the words of the 33d sect. of 59 Geo. III. c. 12, without seeing that the magistrates have now the power in cases like the present, of sending the husband, together with his wife and family, by a pass to Scotland; and, having this power, I am of opinion that they cannot now remove the wife and family to her maiden settlement, so as to separate her from her husband. I think, therefore, that the order of sessions was right, and ought to be confirmed."—Bayley, J. "It is against public policy and good morals, to permit the separation of husband and wife, even with their consent. This question, however, turns on the 59 Geo. III. c. 12 s. 33, which enacts, that it shall and may be lawful for the magistrates, and they are thereby required, in certain specified cases, to cause persons born in Scotland, &c., to be brought before them. Now these are words of compulsion on the magistrates to institute proceedings in cases like the present. The act then provides, that the justices shall inquire into the settlement of the head of the family and his or her children, in order, as it seems to me, to ascertain whether any of those children have been emancipated. It then enacts that such justices shall and are hereby empowered to cause such poor person, his wife, and such of his children as have not gained a settlement in England, to be removed by a pass to Scotland. Now it is to be observed that the wife is thus, for the first time, introduced in the latter part of this clause, which is perfectly silent in the prior part of it, as to any inquiry to be made by the justices respecting her settlement. I think therefore that the magistrates have no discretion given them of removing the wife to her maiden settlement, and thereby of separating her and her family from the husband. If the magistrates remove at all, they must remove the whole family together to Scotland, under the provisions of this act of parliament."—Holroyd, J. "The words of this clause are imperative on the magistrates, in case they make any order, to remove the whole family to Scotland, and not, as they have done here, to remove the wife and family to the place of her maiden settlement. By the act, if the husband becomes chargeable by himself, or his family, he may be removed; and it seems to me, that it is altogether immaterial, provided the head of the family be born in Scotland, whether the children be born in England or not. The only exception is as to those children who have gained settlements in England in their own right. Then, as a power is now given to remove the husband, the wife must be removed with him: for the power of removing her to her maiden settlement was allowed to exist only from the necessity of the case, and must cease with it. It seems to me that we cannot narrow the construction of the words of this statute, unless, in so doing, we clearly saw that we should further the intention of the legislature. And as I do not think that their intention was to prevent the removal of the whole family together, I am of opinion that the decision of the sessions was right."—Best, J. "If the point decided in Rex v. Eltham were to occur again, I think it would perhaps be worth considering whether that decision could be supported. It is, however, not necessary to determine that question now, because I am clearly of opinion, that, under the clause of this act of parliament, it is imperative on the magistrates to remove the whole family to Scotland. It seems to me that clearer terms could not have been used. For the act expressly says, 'that the magistrates shall, and they are hereby empowered, to remove such poor person, his wife, and such of his children as have not gained a settlement, to the place of his birth or last legal settlement.' The statute could not, therefore, mean to leave a discretion in the magistrates as to whether they would exercise this power or not. And by adopting this construction, we shall, as it seems to me, further the object of the statute, which was to remove the inconvenience which existed from idle and improvident persons coming to this country, and remaining here irremovable with their wives and families. Any other construction would produce great inconvenience. It is quite clear that the head of the family may be removed; and if he should be removed, after the separation from his family, the wife and children would, in all probability, remain permanently chargeable."—Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Benett, 2 Bar. & Adol. 712. C. Hines, an Irish pauper, being pregnant, was at her own request, on the 9th of March 1831, admitted into the workhouse belonging to the parish of St. Luke, Middlesex, and on the bastard child born in a parish in England, and within the age of nurture, may, on becoming chargeable, be passed to Ireland, though the child cannot be sent with her, the act not authorising the removal of any settled person.

23d was there delivered of a bastard child. She resided in the workhouse from the time of her admission, and was during that time chargeable to the parish. On the 6th of May the parish officers took her before two magistrates and required them by a pass to cause her to be removed, and her infant child also, for the purpose of nurture. They refused. A rule nisi was obtained for a mandamus to compel them to sign the pass, and after argument Lord Tenterden, C. J., delivered the judgment of the court. "This case was very well argued in the course of this term. The difficulty is in saying what precisely ought to be done under the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33, which provides for the removal of Irish and Scotch paupers in the mode pointed out as to rogues and vagabonds, by 17 G. II. c. 5, s. 13, 14. It was said in support of the rule, that where a woman settled in one parish in England had a bastard child born in another parish, also in England, it had been usual to remove the child with the mother for nurture, and that it was then taken care of by the parish to which it was sent, at the expense of the parish where it was settled by birth. On the other hand, it was contended, that the child having a settlement in the parish where it was born, the act of parliament gave the justices no power to remove it; and it was observed, that where a child was removed with its mother from parish to parish in England, no difficulty arose, because one parish or the other was obliged to give it present support, but that in Ireland, where there are no poor laws, there was no parish which could be called upon to nurture the child, nor any one to enforce maintenance from the place of its birth. There was much weight in those observations. There may certainly be great inconvenience in separating the mother and child; still, if the law gives no authority to remove the child, that inconvenience cannot be avoided while the law continues as it is. And it is clear that by 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33, no such power is given. That section requires two justices, upon complaint that any person born in Scotland or Ireland hath become chargeable to a parish by himself or herself, or his or her family, to inquire whether he or she, or any of his or her children, have any settlement in England; and if it shall be found that such person born in Scotland or in Ireland has no settlement in England, and has become chargeable to such parish by himself, or his or her family, then by a pass to cause such poor person, his wife and such of his or her children as shall not have gained a settlement in England, (a) to be removed to the place of his or her birth, in the manner directed by the 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 13 and 14. The statute therefore authorises and requires the justices to remove to Ireland the mother who has not gained any settlement in England, but it gives them no power to remove the child which has acquired a settlement there by its birth. There may undoubtedly be hardship in removing the mother without the child, but that must be submitted to, for the act is imperative. The rule, therefore, must be made absolute as to the removal of the mother, and discharged as to that of the child."

The daughter of Irish parents who had gained no settlement in England, she and the family are removable to Ireland, under 3 & 4 W. IV., c. 40, though she was above 18 and born in England. The provisions of this act are not affected by 4 & 5 W. IV., c. 76, s.

Case:—Ann Cotterall, aged 18 years, who has never done any act to gain a settlement in her own right, was born in wedlock, in Mile-end Old Town, of Irish parents who have not gained any settlement in England. On the 20th August, 1834, she was delivered of a male bastard child in St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, in the house of her father, with whom she continued to reside as part of his family, occasionally going out charing; and on 21st August, 1834, application was made by her mother to the overseers of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, for relief for Ann Cotterall and her bastard child only, upon which the order appealed against was made. 56, limiting the age during which a parent is considered liable for relief given to his child to 16.

Where the daughter of an Irish pauper is removed with her father to Ireland under 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 40, her bastard child born in England cannot be removed with her.

decision of the court is, whether reference being had to the provisions of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40, s. 2, and 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, ss. 56 & 71, the pauper and her bastard child were settled in Mile-end Old Town. The judgment was delivered by Patteson, J., as follows:—" The question in this case is, whether the removal of the pauper, with her infant bastard child, to the appellant hamlet can be sustained; and that depends upon this further and principal question, whether she ought not to have been removed with her father to Ireland, under the provisions of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40, s. 2. The case states that the pauper was born in the appellant hamlet, of Irish parents, who have gained no settlement in England. They, therefore, are directly within the section of the statute above referred to, if at the time of this order made the father had become chargeable to the parish of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, provided the effect of it has not been altered by the subsequent statute of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. And it seems to us that the pauper's father was so chargeable at the time in question. The language of the 2d section of the first-mentioned act, with reference to this subject, is, 'hath become chargeable by himself or herself, or his or her family.' Now the pauper was, at the time of her removal, living with her father as a part of his family, having done no act, nor having contracted any relations, inconsistent with that character. Relief therefore to the pauper under her father's roof, in the manner stated in the case, did render the father removable to Ireland, and as a consequence the daughter also. It is now to be considered how far the former act is affected by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. And it is at once observable that the object of the two statutes is perfectly distinct. The former is confined merely to making provisions for the removal of certain persons born in Ireland, Scotland, &c., who have gained no settlements in this country. No question affecting the removal or settlement of persons born in England is touched or attended to; whereas the objects and provisions of the latter statute are purely and exclusively English. Various and important alterations are made in the laws respecting the gaining of settlements, the duty of overseers, and the management of the poor; all of which are of necessity applicable and confined to England. It is observable, also, that the title of the act itself purports to concern England and Wales, and them only; nor do we perceive any regulation which has the slightest relation to Ireland, Scotland, &c., the places enumerated in the first-mentioned statute. We think therefore that the sound construction and interpretation of the two statutes is to hold them to be in effect and operation, as they are in object, wholly separate and distinct. This being so, we are of opinion that the provision in the 56th section of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, as to the age up to which the parent is to be deemed answerable for relief given to a child, viz. sixteen, (whatever might have been its effect upon relief given to a child above that age, as to the chargeability of the parent, if the parties had been English,—on which we give no opinion,) does not apply to the present case, depending, as it has been already stated it does, on the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40, s. 2. We think, therefore, that the character of the daughter's residence with the father, and his liability to maintain her and to be considered chargeable by relief given to her, are to be considered as they would have been if the latter act had not passed. It is true that in Rex v. Whitehaven (post, 126,) the sessions had quashed an order of justices removing an Irishwoman pregnant, and living with her parents unemancipated, to her birth settlement, upon the ground (as stated in the case) that she ought to have been sent with her parents by a pass to Ireland under the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, (which has the same expressions as to the chargeability of the father as the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40, viz. 'became chargeable by himself or his family:') and this court quashed the order of sessions upon, as it seems, but little discussion, and not with very much consideration. Upon that case two things are to be observed; first, that the question how far the woman, circumstanced as she was, could gain a settlement by birth, was not noticed at all; whereas, in the case of Rex v. Leeds (ante, 122,) that question was considered, and it was held that birth in such case gave no settlement; (a) next, that the decision proceeds expressly upon the ground that under the 59th Geo. III. the chargeability contemplated by the statute was the actual asking for relief, and not the constructive chargeability (by pregnancy) under the 35th Geo. III. c. 101; upon which it may be sufficient to observe, that the defect upon which the court held the decision of the sessions wrong, does not exist here. Relief in this case was actually asked for and given before the order of removal was made. It remains to be added, that, according to the authority of Rex v. Bennett, p. 123, the bastard in this case cannot be removed with the mother to Ireland. This however is a circumstance not necessary for our decision, which is, that the removal of the pauper, which should have been to Ireland, having been made to the appellant hamlet, is wrong; and that therefore the order of removal and the order of sessions confirming the same, must be quashed."

2. Scotch and Irish Poor.

Where the unemancipated daughter of an Irishman, not having acquired any settlement of his own in England, became pregnant, and as such chargeable: held, that this did not make her father and family removeable by a pass; but that she might be removed to the place of her birth.

Rex v. Whitehaven, 5 B. & A. 720; 1 D. & R. 384. Case: The pauper, Mary M'Cormick, an unmarried woman with child, and thereby chargeable, but who had not applied for or received parochial relief, was removed from Whitehaven to Workington, as the place of her birth settlement. The pauper, at the time of her removal, was above the age of twenty-one, had gained no settlement for herself, was unemancipated, and living with her father and mother, as part of their family. The father and mother were both Irish, and had gained no settlement in England. The father had not applied for or received any relief from the removing township, for himself or any part of his family. Per Curiam. "We are of opinion that the chargeability contemplated by the legislature in 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33, was the actual asking for parish relief, and not the constructive chargeability created by 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 6."

The child born in England of Irish parents is removeable to the place of his birth, if his father is dead, and mother married again.

R. v. Great Clacton, 3 B. & A. 410. John Welsh, aged eight years, was removed from Ipswich to Great Clacton. Order confirmed. Case: W. Welsh, the pauper's late father, was born in Ireland, and was married in that country, 1807, to A. Clanty, who was also born there. The son was born in 1810 in the parish of Great Clacton, and the father died in Ipswich in 1817, without having gained any settlement in England. The mother subsequently married H. Fayett, a settled inhabitant of Ipswich, where she resided when the pauper became chargeable. Before the last marriage she had acquired no settlement in England. Per Curiam. The removal was properly made. Without determining what the case might have been, if the mother had been also removable at the time, it is clear here, that she having acquired a settlement by marriage, the pauper's case is to be considered as if he had no parent alive. Then if so, the clause in question only applies to persons who are themselves born in Ireland, which she was not.—Order confirmed.

An English-born emancipated child of Irish parents, who have no settlement, has a birth settlement, and is not removable with his parents to Ireland.

Reg. v. Preston, 4 P. & D. 509; 12 A. & E. 822. Ann, wife of Daniel Minto, and her children, were removed from Great Bolton to Preston. Order confirmed. Daniel Minto was born in the township of Preston, of Irish parents, who were both resident there at the time of his birth and for some years afterwards, but they subsequently removed to Manchester, where they have since dwelt. Neither of them ever had a settlement in England. He married the pauper, Ann Minto, in Manchester, in 1832, and the children removed are their legitimate children. For some time after his marriage he continued to reside in Manchester with his wife apart from his parents. He then quitted Manchester, with his wife and family, and went to reside in Great Bolton, where they lived together until about four months before this order, when he absconded, leaving his wife and family chargeable to Great Bolton. He did not reside with his parents after his marriage." Lord Denman. "Rex v. Clacton (supra) is in point, and must govern this case. Though Rex v. Clacton

(a) The decision in that case was, as she remained a part of the family of an Irish native." See Reg. v. Preston.
"That the child was not entitled to the benefit of her Birth Settlement, so long was shortly argued, there is no reason for saying that it was not well considered. The circumstances of Rex v. Leeds, and Rex. v. Mile End Old Town, were very different; those cases are not opposed to Rex v. Clacton." Order confirmed.

2. Scotch and Irish Poor.

The wife of an Irishman, who has no settlement in England, may, if deserted by him, be removed to her maiden settlement.

Rex v. Cottingham, 7 B. & C. 615; 1 M. & R. 439, 469. Case: Anne O'Hara's maiden settlement was in Cottingham, and she had acquired no subsequent settlement. The settlement of her eldest child Henry, who was a bastard, was also in that parish. Patrick O'Hara, a native of Ireland, was married to Anne, on the 28th of April, 1819, and the three youngest children were the issue of such marriage; he had no settlement in England. In 1819, after the marriage, and whilst Patrick and his wife resided at Hull, Anne and her eldest son became chargeable to Hull, and were thereupon (with the consent of the husband) removed to Cottingham, the place of her maiden settlement, and the order of removal upon that occasion stated her to be the wife of Patrick, an Irishman, who had no settlement in England, and the said P. O'Hara had consented to her removal. This order was not appealed against, and the appellant parish granted relief to Anne and her said child for a short time. In 1827, P. O'Hara having left Hull, and it not being known what had become of him, the wife and family again became chargeable to the parish of the Holy Trinity, who removed them to Cottingham. Bayley, J. "This is a very plain case. Before the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, passed, it was clearly established by a series of authorities, from St. John's Wapping v. St. Botolph's Bishopsgate, to Rex v. Harberton, that where a woman had a settlement, married, and was deserted by her husband, who had no settlement, the maiden settlement of the wife was thereby revived, and she might be removed thither. Here the husband at the time when the order of removal was made had deserted his wife, and she did not know where he was. According to the authorities she was clearly removable to Cottingham, unless the law in this respect has been altered by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 23. The object of the legislature was to relieve parishes from the necessity of maintaining, as casual poor, persons born in Scotland or Ireland; and with that view it authorises their removal to the place of their birth, together with their wives, &c. The statute does not authorise the removal of the wife alone to the place of the birth of the husband; and the husband having quitted the parish could not be removed to Ireland, and that being so the wife could not be removed without him. This is a case, therefore, not within the act of parliament, and the law applicable to this case remains as it was before the passing of the act. In Rex v. Heaton Norris, the same construction was put upon this statute. In that case, a Chelsea pensioner, born in Scotland, left his wife and family at Heaton Norris whilst he came to do town duty, and in his absence the wife and family were removed to the wife's maiden settlement. On appeal, the sessions stated a case, in which the only question they put was, whether under the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33, the removal ought to have been to Scotland? The judges thought not. In Rex v. Leeds, (ante, 122,) it was only decided that where the husband (who was born in Scotland) and his wife were living together, the wife must be sent along with him to Scotland. The law applicable to this case remains the same as it was before the 59 Geo. III. c. 12; it follows, therefore, that the wife and children were clearly removable to the place of her maiden settlement. No mischief will result from this decision, for during the absence of the husband, the family will be maintained by the parish which is bound to maintain them, and upon his return that parish may pass him and his family to Ireland."

Poor persons born in Guernsey and Jersey.

Power to remove chargeable poor born in Jersey or Guernsey, at expense of complaining parish.

The 11 Geo. IV. c. 5, repeals the several provisions relating to removal of paupers, born in Guernsey and Jersey, contained in 17 Geo. II. c. 5, 59 Geo. III. c. 12, and 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, and enacts, by sect. 2, "that it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace, and they are hereby required, Guernsey and Jersey Poor.

upon the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, that any person born in either of the isles of Jersey or Guernsey hath become chargeable to such parish, by himself or herself, or his or her family, to cause such person to be brought before them, and to examine such person, and any other witness or witnesses, on oath, touching the place of the birth or last legal settlement of every such person, and to inquire whether he or she, or any of his or her children, hath or have gained any settlement in that part of the United Kingdom called England; and if it shall be found by such justices that the person so brought before them was born in either of the isles of Jersey or Guernsey, and hath not gained any settlement in England, and that he or she hath actually become chargeable to the complaining parish, by himself or herself, or his or her family, then such justices shall, and they are hereby empowered, by an order of removal under their hands and seals, to cause such poor person, his wife, and such of his or her children so chargeable, as shall not have gained a settlement in England, to be removed, by and at the charge and expense of the complaining parish, to the place of his or her birth."

Relief of Insane Persons.

When the settlement of an insane person cannot be ascertained, he is to be confined in an asylum at the expense of the county.

It sometimes happens that the settlement of an insane person cannot be ascertained. The legislature has therefore provided, that, in such cases, the person, by the order of justices, is to be confined in the asylum for the county in which the person is found. If there is no such asylum, then in a public hospital or place licensed for the reception of insane persons, and the expenses of removal and maintenance are to be defrayed by the county. 9 Geo. IV. c. 40, s. 41. See title "Insane," where the statute is recited at length. By s. 42, where the settlement of a person so confined has not been ascertained, two justices may inquire into it, and may make an order on the parish where the settlement is adjudged to be, for the repayment of the charges incurred within twelve months previous to the date of such order, and may make an order for the future expenses. When any poor person is deemed to be insane, one justice may require the overseers to bring such person before two justices, who upon due examination may cause him or her to be sent to the lunatic asylum, or licensed house. By 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57, s. 6, the guardians of a union have all the powers given to the overseers, and they are required to pay for the maintenance of the poor in the public asylum.

Two justices may ascertain the settlement and order repayment of expenses and an order for future expenses.

The justices who order the repayment must be the same justices who inquire into the settlement.

Reg. v. Darton, 12 A. & E. 78. Two justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire made the following order:—To wit.—Whereas Ann Challenger, of Woolley, in the said riding, being a person, insane, lunatic, and dangerous to go abroad, was, on the 29th day of August last past, removed to and confined, under an order of two justices of the peace acting in and for the West Riding, in the lunatic pauper asylum at Wakefield in the said riding, and whose legal settlement, after due inquiry made and satisfactory evidence obtained, is at Darton, in the said riding: therefore we, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for the said riding, do hereby adjudge the legal settlement of her, the said Ann Challenger, to be in the parish, township, or place of Darton, in the said riding. And whereas it had been duly proved before us, upon oath, that the sum of 6*l.* 13*s.*, being reasonable charges, hath been incurred by the township of Woolley aforesaid, in the removing, maintenance, and care of the said Ann Challenger, the insane person, to the lunatic pauper asylum at Wakefield aforesaid: we do, therefore, order and direct the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place of Darton aforesaid, to which parish, township, or place, the last legal settlement of the said Ann Challenger is ascertained and adjudged to belong, to pay the sum of 6*l.* 13*s.* to the overseers of the poor of Woolley aforesaid, upon demand. Given under our hands and seals the 20th day of March, 1839. Lord Denman, C. J. "We would make every possible intendment in favour of an order of justices; but, where two successive acts are to be done by the same persons, and there is no proof that they were so done, but we are told to assume it, merely because of some reference made to the first in executing the last: that is a gap which we cannot get over by intendment. Stat. 9 G. 4, c. 40, s. 42, enacts that the same justices who make the order for repayment shall have inquired into the settlement, and done all things necessary to such inquiry. Now in this case it does not appear that the justices who made the order had the proper parties before them and made the requisite inquiry. The order, therefore, is bad, and it is unnecessary to say anything as to the other objections."—Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion. It does not appear that the justices who inquired and those who made the order were the same persons. From the statement, I should rather imagine not. It seems as if they had been told what took place on the inquiry."—Patteson, J. "This is clearly a bad order under sect. 38. And sect. 42 comes into operation only where the settlement is discovered after the pauper has been sent to the asylum. The persons who are then to act in ordering repayment, are the justices who inquired into the settlement. This order does not say before whom the evidence was taken and inquiry had. All may have been done on some occasion previous to that of making the order. And I think that the magistrates cannot in any case order payment to be made to the overseers of the removing parish. If the place of settlement is known, an order for the expenses may at once be made upon the overseers of the place of settlement, under sect. 38; if unknown, it may be made upon the county treasurer. If the overseers do not choose to obtain either order, it is their own fault. The order for repayment must be made upon some one who was legally obliged to pay at first. That seems, in the present case, to have been the county treasurer."

Relief of Insane Persons.

An order for removal of a lunatic is good, though the words used are "having adjudged."

Rex v. Maulden, 2 Man. & R. 146; 8 B. & C. 78. This was an appeal (as stated in the notice) "against an order of settlement and maintenance" of a lunatic, and the order stated, that the justices, after due examination, having adjudged the legal place of settlement of A. C. to be Maulden, did require, &c. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think that on reading the order and the notice of appeal, we must assume that there was but one order, and one proceeding. The appellants by the notice of appeal treat the order in question as an order of settlement. That being so, the first question is, whether there appears on the face of the order a sufficient adjudication by the justices that the pauper's last place of settlement was in Maulden? The justices say in their order 'that they by virtue of the powers vested in them by the statute 5 Geo. IV., after due examination had on oath, having adjudged the legal place of settlement of the pauper to be in Maulden.' Now it is conceded, that if the justices had said 'that they do adjudge,' it would have been sufficient. As the appellants, however, by their notice of appeal treat the order in question as an order of settlement, we must assume that there was no other order made; and if that be so, we cannot understand the words 'having adjudged' to have been used in any other sense than that which would have belonged to the words 'do adjudge.' The next question is, is the order good altogether? It is objected to as being retrospective. The effect of a retrospective order is to bring on inhabitants who ought not to bear it a charge incurred during a former period. It is quite unnecessary that the justices should have the power of making a retrospective order; for an order for the payment of a weekly maintenance might have been made as soon as the pauper was placed in the asylum; and as there is not any necessity that the justices should have such power, and as no such power is expressly reserved to them, I am of opinion that they had it not. This order, therefore, so far as it relates to the bygone time is bad, but good as to the residue." Rule absolute for quashing the order as to that, discharged as to the residue.

Retrospective order bad: order good in part.

The 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 38, does not authorize a retrospective order for

Rex v. St. Nicholas, Leicester, 4 Nev. & Man. 624; 3 Ad. & E. 79. In November, 1832, H. Beaumont was removed to the house of J. Burgess, licensed for the reception of insane persons, by an order, which stated, the maintenance of a lunatic. And an order stating that the justices have adjudged that the pauper's settlement is in a particular parish was held sufficient, though the form given in the schedule to the act was not pursued, and the order contained no words of present adjudication.

Relief of Insane Persons.

Form of Order of Removal.

"that the justices, having called to their assistance S. Eddowes, surgeon, and upon examination had of him the said H. Beaumont, are satisfied that he is so far disordered in his senses that it is dangerous for him to be permitted to go abroad; and having made inquiry into the settlement of the said H. B., we have adjudged that his settlement is in the parish of St. Nicholas." In November, 1834, an order was made by the same justices; which, reciting the former order, it appears to us the said justices, that the said H. Beaumont was, pursuant to order of the justices conveyed to the house of J. Burgess, and directed the overseers of St. Nicholas to pay the weekly sum of 18*s.* unto J. Burgess for the maintenance, medicine, and care of H. Beaumont, during so long a time as H. Beaumont "hath been" and shall be under the care of the said J. Burgess. These two orders were removed by certiorari.—Lord Denman. "It appears quite plain from the terms of the act, and from the judgment of Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Maulden (ante), that a retrospective order cannot be supported; because by the act of parliament the power is only given to make an order for future maintenance. But with regard to the first order, there is in my opinion no valid objection to it. It proceeds on the 44th clause, which enacts [his lordship here read sect. 44 of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 40]. The justices are authorized to proceed in the same way with regard to the persons to whom that section relates as had been directed by the 38th section. Now according to s. 38, which refers to the schedule No. 5, there are only three descriptions of persons, viz. persons who are lunatic, insane, or dangerous idiots, for whose maintenance an order is authorized to be made; and the 44th section introduces a new description, viz. a person so far disordered in his senses, that it is dangerous for such person to be permitted to go abroad. In such a case section 44 requires the order to be made in conformity with the form given in the schedule No. 5, which is referred to by section 38. As section 44 requires the order to be made according to the form in the schedule, it must necessarily introduce into the meaning of the words of the form that new description of persons. The order in this case does not say, in the precise language of the form in schedule 5, that the party is a lunatic, insane, or dangerous idiot. Probably it would have been more correct to have introduced that form of words. The form, however, is sufficiently complied with when in every other respect the order follows the language of the schedule." Littledale, J. "I am entirely of the same opinion. By section 44, (which relates to persons not chargeable, whereas section 38 relates to poor persons chargeable to any parish), this person is brought within the jurisdiction of the justices; for it appears that he was a person wandering about and at large, and deemed to be insane, and not chargeable to any parish, and that he was brought before the justices, and was found to be so far disordered in his senses that it was dangerous for him to be permitted to go abroad. The justices are also to inquire as to the settlement of the party. This they have done. By section 44, therefore, the justices have jurisdiction, and they are to exercise that jurisdiction in the manner therein pointed out. An objection is made to the form of the order, but it exactly pursues the form given in schedule 5, except where that form is adapted to a person who is lunatic, insane, or an idiot."—Patteson, J. "I am of opinion that the rule must be made absolute so far as regards quashing the prospective part of the second order. The first order appears to me to be good. The objection to the first order, as to the adjudication of settlement, is answered by Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Maulden (ante, 129). We must construe the words 'have adjudged' as if they were 'do adjudge.' With regard to the objection as to the form of the order, we must look at section 38 coupled with section 44. It is evidently intended that when a party is deemed insane, wandering abroad, the justices should proceed in the manner pointed out in section 38, and that the form of order should be such as would apply to the circumstances of the case. In the form given in the act, the words 'as the case may be' are inserted after the words 'lunatic, insane, or idiot.' I do not mean to say that if the order in this case had used the word 'insane,' it would not have been good. Looking at section 44, the legislature seem to have used the words 'a person being so far disordered in his senses that it is dangerous for him to go abroad' as a definition of the insanity; for section 44, after directing an examination whether a person is so far disordered in his senses, that it is dangerous for him to be permitted to go at large, goes on to say, that the justices shall make inquiry into the settlement of such insane person. As to the retrospective part of the second order, Rex v. Maulden (ante, 867,) is directly in point, and this cannot be distinguished from that case." Coleridge, J. "I am of the same opinion. Two objections have been made to the order of November, 1832; of which the first is, that it does not follow the form in the schedule in the act. If the words of section 44 are examined, it will be found that there is nothing there said which makes that necessary. The act only directs that the parties shall proceed in the same manner before directed in the case of a person chargeable to any parish. Then when section 38 (which applies to persons chargeable) is looked at, the only direction there is, that it shall be lawful for the justices to make an order according to the form in the schedule, not that they are always to make use of that form, but they are to frame the order according to that form. It never can be contended that the very words of the form are to be used. The form states that the person is chargeable to the parish, without any restrictions with reference to the 44th section. It never could be the intention of the legislature, that a form untrue in fact should be used. The form in the schedule contemplates persons lunatic and insane, and idiots. A person not fit to walk abroad may be insane, but the 44th section, in my opinion, applies to a different class of persons from those described in section 38. The first objection, therefore, cannot be sustained. The other objection is, that there is no adjudication of the settlement. The first order is not directed to the parish to which the person is to be removed, but to the officers of the parish where the party is found. The words 'have adjudged' may be construed to mean 'do adjudge;' but surely if these words could not bear this meaning, yet as the section does not direct in what manner, or when, or where, an adjudication of the settlement is to be made, it would be quite sufficient for the justices to say 'we have adjudged' that the settlement is in a particular place. I quite agree that the second order is bad, in so far as it is retrospective." Second order quashed so far as relates to payments in respect of a by-gone period.

What notice of appeal is insufficient to raise the question whether justices have jurisdiction to make an order directing repayment of the expenses of maintaining a lunatic to the treasurer of the county.

If a previous order ascertaining the settlement had been quashed on appeal for want of form, other justices have jurisdiction to make a subsequent order.

Justices of the county of G. have jurisdiction to make the order on the overseers of P. in the county of H., though the latter county does not jointly maintain the lunatic asylum.

Reg. v. Pixley, 7 Jurist, 597. The facts of this case will appear in the judgment of the court. The grounds of appeal were that the order had not been made in conformity with the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40; that it had been made by two justices for the county of G. on the overseers of P. in the county of H.; that the settlement of the pauper had been previously ascertained by two other justices of the county of G.—Williams, J. "This was a case stated for our opinion by the sessions of the county of Gloucester; it thereby appeared that two justices of the county, Cooper and Baker, made an order bearing date the 28th October, 1841, under the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, respecting a pauper lunatic, and directed the officers of the appellant parish to pay a certain sum to the treasurer of the said county of Gloucester, for the expense of maintaining the said pauper in the lunatic asylum for the county, and which said order was upon appeal confirmed. The said order is set out at length in the case, and it is stated by way of recital therein, that the said pauper lunatic had been brought before two other justices of the said county, Crawley and Wintle, as chargeable to the hamlet of Wotton in the county of Gloucester, on the 4th May, 1840; that the said last-mentioned justices having called in medical advice, were satisfied the pauper was insane and a lunatic; that the said last-mentioned justices made inquiry into the settlement of the said pauper, but that the same could not be ascertained, and that thereupon, by their warrant or order, the overseers of the said hamlet of Wotton were directed to convey the said pauper to the lunatic asylum for the said county of Gloucester; that it appeared to them, the first-mentioned justices, that the said pauper was still confined in the said asylum, and that the sum of 23*l.* had been

Relief of Insane Persons.

An order on the overseers of the appellant parish for the repayment of the expenses of removal and for maintenance of a lunatic pauper to the overseers of the removing parish is bad.

paid out of the rates by the treasurer of the said county of Gloucester; and that it was duly proved before them the first-named justices, Cooper and Baker, that the pauper's settlement was in the appellant parish of Pixley in the county of Hereford; it was thereupon ordered that the officers of the said appellant parish of Pixley should repay to the treasurer of the county of Gloucester the said sum of 23*l.*, together with a further weekly sum in the said order specified. From this statement on the face of the order in question, it would appear that the justices secondly mentioned had made one order only on the subject. By the statement of the case, however, it appeared that those justices had made two orders: one apparently, for it is not stated directly, in the form in the schedule No. (5), annexed to the said act, and dated 4th May, 1840; and another dated April 19, 1841, by which latter the settlement of the said pauper had been ascertained and adjudged to be in the same place, viz. the appellant parish; this latter order containing the adjudication of the settlement, was, it seems, quashed for want of form, but not upon the merits, at the October sessions, 1841; and thereupon the present order of the 28th October following was made. And the question now arises upon the competency of the first-mentioned justices, Cooper and Baker, to make that order; and especially after the statement in the case in opposition to the recital therein above noticed, that two other justices had previously inquired into and by their order adjudicated upon the settlement of the said pauper lunatic, and found him to be as we have already seen in the appellant parish of Pixley. The first objection to the jurisdiction of the justices arises from the manner in which the repayment of the expenses of the lunatic in the asylum is directed to be made; namely, to the treasurer of the county. The first section regulating the repayment of the expenses incurred by the lunatic is the 38th: that directs it to be made by the officers of the place in which the lunatic is adjudged to be settled to the treasurer or other proper officer of the lunatic asylum. The treasurer of the county is not therein named. The next section to which reference was made, is the 42nd; and there is no person therein named to whom the repayment of the reasonable charges of the removal or maintenance of the lunatic is to be made. By the 41st section, relating to the case in which the settlement cannot be ascertained, in such case the treasurer of the county is authorised to pay the expenses out of the county-rate; but that is, such expenses as he shall be authorised to defray by order of two justices to him directed for that purpose. Supposing therefore that, although no person is named in the 42nd section, under which this order purports to be made, to whom repayment is to be made, the treasurer of the county having been named in the 41st, he must therefore be supposed to be the person intended in the 42nd; yet as no order of two justices directed to him for that purpose existed in this case, third persons, such as the appellants here, seem not to be barred from appealing against it. But then comes the question whether the present objection is open to the appellants on their notice of appeal. We think it is not. By sect. 60, it appears 'the nature and matter' of appeal must be stated; and the only head under which this can come, if at all, is No. 3 in the notice of appeal; but that is too general and is not sufficient, especially where the notice does, as here, specify other particulars. If the notice of appeal had stated this as an objection, the order to the treasurer might have been produced. For these reasons this objection is not sustainable. It is further objected, that the language of the 42nd section under which any argument is attempted to be made to sustain the present order is in the following terms:—[The learned judge read it]. The jurisdiction therefore of two justices is made to depend upon the settlement of the lunatic not having been previously ascertained. And it is said in this instance, that there is no jurisdiction, as there has been an order of two justices on the 19th April, 1841, ascertaining the settlement; and such is true in fact. But the case states, that that order had been quashed upon appeal for want of form, and not upon the merits. The order no doubt was intended to point out the distinction as to the consequence of it, but there is no distinction as to the order itself, whether it be quashed for want of form or on the merits. It would make a difference as to the future litigation of some points, but the order is equally gone in either case. It must be taken, therefore, that, as there was no previous adjudication of settlement, no objection exists as to the jurisdiction to make the order on that ground. The fourth head of appeal arises on the objection to the order being made by two justices of Gloucestershire upon the overseers of a parish in Herefordshire. Of course the jurisdiction must be consistent with the language of the 42nd section; and that is large enough to extend to it. But the 43rd section raises a difficulty by specially authorising two justices of one county to make an order on the overseers of a parish in another county where the two counties have a common lunatic asylum. It may be true that if such an effect be given to the 42nd section as would make no restriction necessary, the 43rd section would become unnecessary. That section may have been introduced into the act for abundant and unnecessary caution; but we do not think we should be justified in restraining the general words of the 42nd section; and if so, the justices had jurisdiction. Upon the whole, we think the order of sessions must be sustained." —Order confirmed.

Relief of Insane Persons.

An order on the removing parish is bad.

Reg. v. St. Andrew's, Worcester, 7 Jurist, 598. This was an order of removal and maintenance, whereby the settlement of J. Hughes, a lunatic, confined in a lunatic asylum at Droitwich, was adjudged to be in St. Andrew's, Worcester, and whereby the overseers of St. Andrew's were ordered to repay to the overseers of St. Peter's, a certain sum for the removal and past maintenance, &c. of the pauper, and to pay another sum for future maintenance.—Williams, J., delivered the judgment of the court: "The question in this case also depends on the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 50. It is not needful to enter into all the questions which were fairly raised by the notice of grounds of appeal, because we think that one of them is fatal. In the case just disposed of, we had occasion to advert to the different sections of the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, and in none of them is there any provision enabling the justices to reimburse the parish officers. The jurisdiction of the justices over this subject depends entirely upon the statute, and therefore their order, not being made in compliance with its provisions, cannot be supported."—Order quashed.

Lunatic returns.

A return of lunatics must be made out by the clerk of the guardians in the form prescribed by 5 & 6 Vic. c. 57. (See Appendix.)

IV. c. 40, s. 48, for paying the expenses of removing a pauper to a lunatic asylum, although the charter, granted to the borough under 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, confers criminal jurisdiction only.

I. Origin and Progress of Enactments respecting this Parochial Fund.

1. Origin and Progress of Enactments respecting this Parochial Fund.

The Revenue or Income out of which the Poor are to be relieved is either general or ordinary, arising from general rates, usually made twice or oftener in every year; or, extraordinary and casual, as in the instances of penalties given for numerous offences, half to be paid to the overseers for the use of the poor of the parish. Of late such penalties have in general been made payable in aid of the County Rate.

The ancient statutes prescribing compulsory maintenance.

It is curious to a contemplative person to investigate by what steps and degrees the compulsory maintenance became established in this kingdom. By a statute made in the 12 Ric. II., viz. c. 7, the poor were restrained from wandering abroad, and were required to abide in the towns where they were born, or in other places within the hundred; within which districts they were allowed to beg.—By 22 Hen. VIII. c. 12, the justices were to distribute themselves into several divisions, within which divisions respectively they might license persons to beg.—By 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25, the several hundreds, towns corporate, parishes, or hamlets, were required to sustain the poor with such charitable voluntary alms, as that none of them might of necessity be compelled to go openly in begging, on pain that every person making default should forfeit 20*s*. a month; and the churchwardens or other substantial inhabitants were to make collections for them with boxes on Sundays, and otherwise at their discretions; and the minister was to take all opportunities to exhort and stir up the people to be liberal and bountiful. By 1 Ed. VI. c. 3, houses were to be provided for them by the devotion of good people, and materials to set them on work; and the minister, after the Gospel every Sunday, was specially to exhort the parishioners to a liberal contribution.—By 5 & 6 Ed. VI. c. 2, the collectors of the poor on a certain Sunday in every year, immediately after divine service, were to take down in writing what every person was willing to give weekly for the ensuing year, and if any should be obstinate and refuse to give, the minister was gently to exhort him; if he still refused, the minister was to certify such refusal to the bishop of the diocese, and the bishop was to send for him to induce and persuade him by charitable ways and means, and so according to his discretion to take order for the reformation thereof.—By 5 Eliz. c. 3, if he stood out against the bishop's exhortation, the bishop was to certify the same to the justices in sessions, and bind him over to appear there; and the justices at the said sessions were again gently to move and persuade him, and finally, if he would not be persuaded, then they were to assess him what they thought reasonable towards the relief of the poor, and in case of refusal were to commit him till paid.—By 14 Eliz. c. 5, power was given to the justices to lay a general assessment, and this hath continued ever since, for the 43 Eliz. c. 2, only re-enacts former provisions, with very little alteration.

Advances of money, &c. under 57 G. 3, c. 34.

By 57 Geo. III. c. 34, intituled, "An Act to authorize the Issue of Exchequer Bills, and the Advance of Money out of the Consolidated Fund to a limited amount, for the carrying on of Public Works and Fisheries in the United Kingdom, and Employment of the Poor of Great Britain in manner therein mentioned." (a) See also Appendix.

Advance not to be made to parishes, unless application made with consent of majority in number, and three-fourths in value, of persons paying poor-rates; or where there is a select vestry, &c. then with consent of four-fifths of that body.

Sect. 29. "It is enacted that no such exchequer bills shall be advanced in aid of any parish in Great Britain unless the application for such advance shall be made with the consent of not less than the majority in number, and of three fourth parts in value, such value to be calculated and ascertained from the last rate made for the relief of the poor in such parish, of the persons assessed to and paying such rates; or where the poor rates of any parish shall be under the care and management of any select vestry or commissioners, governors of the poor, trustees, or other select body, then with the consent of not less than four-fifths of such select body, by whatever name the same may be called; such consent to be certified by some justice of the peace or magistrate acting as such in each parish, and one or more of the overseers of the poor of the parish or place in respect of which the application shall be made."

Principal sums of exchequer bills with interest to be repaid by instalments.

Sect. 35 enacts, "that the principal sums contained in the exchequer bills, which shall be advanced or lent by the said commissioners for the execution of this act in Great Britain, under the authority of this act, shall be repaid, without deduction or abatement, together with interest for the same, by instalments; that is to say, the principal sum in each and every exchequer bill shall be repaid to the cashier or cashiers of the Bank of England at their office, together with interest for the same at and after the rate of five pounds per centum per annum, by the space of fifteen days at least before the time when each such exchequer bill shall become payable according to the provisions of this act, such interest to be computed on the said principal sum from the date of such exchequer bill to the time of the payment thereof."

Regulating advances to parishes.

By 53 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 5, it is enacted, "that no advance shall be made under the provisions of 57 Geo. III. c. 34, for the use of any parish, township, or place in Great Britain, in which the amount of the money actually expended for the relief of the poor, in the year ending at Easter, 1817, or ending at the usual quarter-day immediately preceding Easter, 1817, shall not exceed by three-fourths the average annual amount of the money expended for the relief of the poor for the three years preceding Easter, 1816, or shall not exceed by one-half the amount so expended for the year ending Easter, 1816, anything in the said act of 57 Geo. III. c. 34, to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

Repayment of exchequer bills.

Sect. 6 enacts, "that the principal sums contained in the exchequer bills which shall be advanced or lent by the said commissioners for the execution of this act in Great Britain, under the authority of the recited act (57 Geo. III. c. 34), the payment whereof shall not be otherwise provided for pursuant to the said recited act, shall be repaid without deduction or abatement, together with interest for the same at and after the rate of five pounds per centum per annum, to the cashier or cashiers of the Bank of England, at their office, by the space of fifteen days at least before the time when each such exchequer bill shall become payable according to the provisions of this act; such interest to be computed on the said principal sum from the date of such exchequer bill to the time of payment thereof."

Commissioners under recited acts, when directed by the treasury, to advance money towards carrying into execution any act for completing works of general importance and utility.

By 1 Geo. IV. c. 60, and 3 Geo. IV. c. 86, the 57 Geo. III. c. 34, and c. 124, are continued and amended; and by 5 Geo. IV. c. 77, after reciting the above acts, it is enacted, "that it shall be lawful for the commissioners for the time being for the execution of 57 Geo. III. c. 34, and of the several other acts hereinbefore recited, whenever the said commissioners shall be directed so to do by any warrant under the hands of any three or more of the said commissioners of the treasury, and the said commissioners are (a) The overseer cannot borrow money for the general relief of the poor, but with a view to their better employment, the providing a workhouse for them, and encouraging emigration. hereby required to advance and lend any sum or sums of money toward the carrying into execution any act of parliament for making, completing, or maintaining any works of general public importance and utility, which shall be carried on under the direction of any commissioners appointed by authority of parliament, on such terms and conditions as shall from time to time be directed by the said commissioners of the treasury, or any three or more of them, anything in the said recited acts, or any of them, contained to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding: provided always, that the rate of interest payable on such loan or advance shall not be less than the current rate of interest which shall be payable on exchequer bills at the time of making such loan or advance."

1. Origin and Progress of Poor Rate.

Interest not to be less than the current rate payable on exchequer bills.

The 43 Eliz. c. 2, (a) s. 1, after enacting that certain persons shall be the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every parish, it enacts, that they, or the greater part of them, shall take order from time to time, by and with the consent of two or more justices of the peace in the same county, whereof one to be of the quorum, dwelling in or near the same parish or division where the same parish doth lie, to "raise weekly or otherwise, by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods in the said parish, in such competent sum and sums of money as they shall think fit, a convenient stock of flax, hemp, wool, thread, iron, and other necessary ware and stuff to set the poor on work; and also competent sums of money for and towards the necessary relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them, being poor, and not able to work, and also for the putting out of such children to be apprentices, to be gathered out of the same parish, according to the ability of the same parish, and to do and execute all other things as well for the disposing of the said stock, as otherwise concerning the premises, as to them shall seem convenient."

43 Eliz. c. 2, as to making a rate.

Who to be taxed towards relief of poor, and a convenient stock shall be provided to set the poor on work, &c.

The overseers of townships and vills have the like duty and power, under 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 21; and the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, 9, provides for towns corporate and parishes extending into two counties, &c.

II. Who are to make the Rate.

The Churchwardens and Overseers shall, &c.] It is said by C. J. Holt, that the overseers, with the confirmation of the justices, may order a sum of money to be levied for the relief of the poor, without the concurrence of the parish. (Tawney's case, 2 Ld. Raym. 1009.) The churchwardens and overseers are required by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, (supra,) to make the rate (Tawney's case, 2 Ld. Raym. 1009; 2 Salk. 531); and they may be indicted if they neglect to make such rate. And a mandamus will lie to compel overseers to make a rate (Rex v. Barnstaple, 1 Barnard. 137; 1 Bott, 85, Lidleston v. Exeter, 1 Bott, 80); and the rule for a mandamus to make a poor rate is peremptory in the first instance, for otherwise the poor might starve (Rex v. Fisher, Sayer, 160; R. v. Edgbaston, 1 N. & P. 20): but not to make an equal rate, (R. v. Canterbury, 4 Burr. 2290, 1 Bl. 667,) or to insert or omit any person or property, because it is to be presumed the overseers will do justice, and if they do not, there is a proper remedy by appeal to the sessions. (Rex v. Barnstaple, 1 Barnard. 137; 1 Bott, 85, 2 Stra. 1259.) And the overseers cannot charge for the

2. Overseers are to make the rate. (b.)

Concurrence of parish not necessary.

Mandamus will lie to compel the making a rate.

But not the making of an equal rate.

(a) The statute of Elizabeth was passed to enforce (what are called) duties of imperfect obligation. For it was a duty before that statute was made to relieve the poor and necessitous. And the provisions of that act were adapted to the enforcing of those duties in the only way in which they could be enforced, namely, by raising a fund from persons who are deemed competent to pay it. Per Lord Kenyon, C. J., 4 T. R. 775.

(b) The overseers were required to make rates even where guardians were appointed under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83. Gilbert's Act; and so now under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, they must still make rates; and by a recent statute are liable to severe penalties if they neglect to pay.

2. Who are to make the Rate.

One overseer may by mandamus, compel another to make a rate.

employment of a person to make a rate, although such employment was authorized by a parish vestry. (Rex v. Gwyer, p. 139.)

Where one of two overseers refused to concur in making a rate, the other may apply for a mandamus; the 1 W. 4. c. 21, s. 6, makes no alteration as to the parties applying for the writ only with regard to costs. Rex v. Gadsby, 1 N. & P. 572.

3. For what Purposes. (a)

3. For what purposes.

There are many purposes for which a poor rate may be made in addition to those mentioned in 43 Eliz. c. 2. (a) That statute provides for setting to work the children of those poor whose parents are not able to keep and maintain them: also, all persons, married and unmarried, having no means to maintain them, and use no ordinary and daily trade of life to get their living by; and for the putting out poor children apprentices.

It may now be professedly made for the express purpose of building a workhouse, employing the poor, paying officers, and repaying money borrowed for the purposes of the act, or for the emigration of paupers. See 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76.

The 59 Geo. III. c. 12, gave power to build poorhouses; aud, of course, impliedly gave power to defray the expense.

Relief and removal of paupers and vagrants.

The 18 Geo. III. c. 19, relates to re-payment to constables of the money expended by them in the relief and removal of poor persons, and of vagrants.

Expenses of litigating questions of settlement.

Rex v. Essex, 4 T. R. 595. It was said, per Ashhurst, J., to have been the constant practice to allow the expenses of litigating the questions of settlement consequent upon the removal of paupers, to be defrayed out of the parish stock; the legality of which had never been disputed. (b)

After overseers are out of office, a rate cannot be made to reimburse money laid out by them whilst in office; but an overseer may make a new rate for the relief of the poor, and out of that retain to pay himself.

Tawney's case, 2 Salk. 531; 2 Ld. Raym. 1009. Tawney, being overseer of the poor, laid out his money in the relief of the poor, and was turned out of his office by the justices before the end of the year; by which means he lost the opportunity of making a rate to reimburse himself. Upon this he applied for a mandamus to the overseers to make a rate to reimburse him.—By Holt, C. J. "We cannot order the parish or overseers by a mandamus to make a rate to reimburse an overseer, but only to raise money for the relief of the poor; nor can they make a rate otherwise. The act of parliament is expressly so, and must be pursued. An overseer is not bound to lay out money till he have it; if he do, he must make a new rate for the relief of the poor, and out of that he may retain to pay himself. Tawney should have done so; he trusted where he need not have done it. He hath not pursued the means the statute gave him, and we cannot relieve him."—And by the whole court. The mandamus lies not.

An overseer for several successive years, cannot, in the last year, make a rate to reimburse himself for the preceding years (c).

Rex v. Goodcheap, 6 T. R. 159. A person appointed an overseer for four successive years, did not make any rate in the three first years to reimburse himself what he expended in those three years, he cannot in the fourth year make a rate for that purpose; and Lord Kenyon said, "It was impossible to raise any doubt upon the question. Overseers ought not to

(a) As to reimbursing overseers see more particularly 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 20; 42 Geo. III. c. 74; 43 Geo. III. c. 110, s. 1, 2; 59 Geo. III. c. 12, ss. 8 to 16; 36 Geo. III. c. 10, s. 1; and 52 Geo. III. c. 73. See further, post, as to Overseers' Accounts.

(b) Quere. Whether the expenses of a valuation of the property of a parish which has been directed by a majority of the vestry, can be legally defrayed out of the poor rate? (See 1 Nol. P. L. 67, note 3.)

Semble, that if a select vestry so order under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, the expense may be defrayed out of poor rate. (Rex v. Micklefield, 1 Bott, P. L. 113.) A church rate to reimburse churchwarden is bad. (1 Burn, J., tit. "Churchwardens.") So as to a county rate. (1 Burn, J., tit. "County Rate," and see post, 106, note (a).)

(c) It is a general principle that a rate cannot be retrospective. It was so decided as to church rates. (Rex v. Dursley, 5 A. & E. 10.) As to a borough rate. (Wood v. Reed, 2 M. & W. 777; see also, Rex v. Maulden, ante, 129.)

include in their accounts charges for several years, but all the items of the accounts should be confined to that year when the accounts are directed by the act to be passed."

3. For what Purposes.

But now by 41 Geo. III. U. K. c. 23, s. 9, after reciting that "whereas it may have happened that the churchwardens and overseers of the poor have not been able to collect a sum sufficient for the relief and maintenance of the poor, but they or the guardians of the poor have advanced and expended considerable sums for that purpose;" it is enacted "that the churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, out of any money they shall collect in pursuance of any rate for the relief of the poor, may reimburse the preceding churchwardens and overseers or guardians such sums as they or any of them have heretofore advanced or expended for the relief or maintenance of the poor of such place, during the time that no rate or assessment for the relief thereof has been made, or during the time that any appeal has been depending which affected the whole of such rate or assessment, or upon hearing of which the whole might be quashed; and, in default of payment of such money so advanced and expended within fourteen days next after demand in writing, such preceding churchwardens and overseers or guardians, or any of them, may apply to the next general quarter or quarter sessions, giving due notice in writing of such application to the then churchwardens and overseers, or any two of them; and such court shall examine the parties and witnesses upon oath, and shall make an order upon the then churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, out of the money collected or to be collected by them, or any of them, in pursuance of any rate made for the relief of the poor, to pay such sum to the preceding churchwardens and overseers or guardians, or any of them, as the said court shall think fit: and such sums so ordered to be paid may be levied by distress, and by all such other ways and means as the poor rate may."

But now succeeding churchwardens and overseers are empowered to repay money expended by preceding churchwardens, &c. for the maintenance of the poor, while there was no rate; or during an appeal, and in default of such repayment, the quarter sessions, on application being to them, shall make an order for payment.

Distress, &c.

Rex v. Wavell, Dougl. 116. The rate was removed by certiorari, and the title was an assessment on the occupiers of lands and houses in the parish of Effingham, for the necessary relief of the poor, and towards payment of money borrowed for building and repairing the workhouse,—Willes, J. "Can we reject, as a surplusage, what is a material part of the title of the rate? If we cannot, is a rate good to repay money borrowed? Tawney's case, (ante, p. 105,) is in point. And as to an appeal against the overseer's accounts, is a parishioner obliged to pay money, and be turned round in that manner to get it back if levied without authority? The rate cannot be supported."—Buller, J. "This rate imports to be made for two purposes, and we are desired to consider it as only made for one. I conceive that a rate cannot be made for money borrowed, even though within the year. Tawney's case goes that length; for it is not confined to the mandamus." The rule for quashing was made absolute. (a) (See Rex v. Mayor of Gloucester, 5 T. R. 346.)

Rate cannot be made to repay money borrowed, though for building or repairing workhouses.

Title of rate material.

In Rex v. Glyde, 2 M. & Sel. 323, Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "We have no doubt on the face of the order, that the overseer has no title to a salary for any meritorious services, or for any services at all."

Nor can he be remunerated even by resolutions of vestry for making a poor rate, or making divisions of the same or copies for the collectors, or for payments to an accountant, or for making lists of defaulters, or for collecting the rates, though he employed another to do so under the authority of a vestry resolution. Rex v. Gwyer, 4 Nev. & M. 158; 2 Adol. & Ell. 216.

Overseers not entitled to remuneration for services, although ordered by a vestry.

But if a rate is merely intended for past purposes, but that does not appear on the face of the rate, the objection must be made to the accounts and not to the rate. (Rex v. Sillifant, 4 A. & E. 355.)

(a) This principle also prevails as to church rates, although the money to be reimbursed may have been laid out under an order of vestry. (See Lanchester v. Thompson, et al. 5 Madd. 64; Lanchester v. Tricker, 8 J. B. Moore, 20; 1 Bing. 201, S. C.; Lanchester v. Frewer, 2 J. B. Moore, 688; 2 Bing. 361, S. C.)

3. For what Purposes.

If the title is legal, the intention to misapply the money is no ground for quashing rate.

Expenses of indictment for assault on constable, not allowable out of poor-rate.

But where a local statute gave the overseers power to make a rate (inter alia) for the reasonable expenses of the overseers in the execution of their duty, a rate, purporting to be a rate "for raising the sum of 80*l.* as necessary to defray the reasonable expenses which they now, or hereafter may pay," is legal on the face of it, and cannot be quashed; and if the 80*l.* is improperly expended, then the appeal must be against the overseer's accounts. Rex v. Mayor of Gloucester, 5 T. R. 346.

Rex v. Bird, 2 B. & A. 522. The expenses, which are to be allowed a constable out of the parish rates, are those necessarily incurred by him on behalf of the parish, as relieving or conveying vagrants, &c., within 18 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 4; but the expenses of indicting a party for assaulting him in the execution of his duty, are not expenses so incurred, although the prosecution was directed by a magistrate. (See also Rex v. Seville, 5 B &. Ald. 180; ante, Vol. I. title Constable, s. 7.)

It has sometimes been the practice of coroners to require the overseers of the poor, in that character, and out of the poor rates, to prosecute parties charged with murder or manslaughter; but there is no legal ground on which that power has been assumed.

As to the appointment of an assistant overseer with a salary, and other paid officers, the subject has been already considered.

The enactments relative to labour rates in 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 96, and to lighting and watching rates, 11 Geo. IV. c. 27, s. 25, will be elsewhere considered.

4. For what Time a Poor Rate may be made.

4. For what time a poor rate may be made.

Rate may be prospective.

"Raise weekly or otherwise." Durrant v. Boyes, 6 T. R. 580. A poor rate may be made prospectively; and if it were made for six months, it would not (it seems) be bad on that account. Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, "Every person who is conversant in matters of this kind, knows the impossibility of foreseeing and providing for every expense that may arise; and therefore a rate may be made prospectively, not indeed wantonly, but such as is adapted to the probable exigencies of the parish."

A standing rate cannot be made by the justices.

Rex v. Audley, 2 Salk. 526; 1 Bott, 110, 272. A rate was agreed on in 1665, by the inhabitants of Audley, which had been followed ever since till the last year, when a new rate was made. On appeal to the sessions, the new rate was quashed, and the old one ordered to stand. By Holt, C. J., "The old rate, however just at first, may be unequal now; and therefore the justices cannot make a standing rate."

As to the amount of the rate, that in general must depend on the necessities of the poor; but by some local acts it was the practice to limit it to a specific sum. (a)

Concurrent rates are bad.

Reg. v. Fordham, 3 P. & D. 96; 11 A. & E. 73. The case stated that a rate was made on the 3rd July, 1838, duly published and allowed, and partially collected. Several persons refused to pay, and were summoned before the magistrates, and warrants of distress granted, but not acted upon, in consequence of the solicitor for the overseers considering the rate to be void for defects on the face of it. On this account they made another rate on the 21st August, 1838. An appeal was entered against both rates, and upon a case granted on this and other points (see post), Lord Denman said, "The first rate was in existence when the second was made. It was argued, but not I think with confidence, that concurrent rates might on general principles be allowed. I think not: a rate-payer cannot be called on to pay a second quota for the same period."—The other Judges concurred.

(a) A joint rate for various purposes in respect of some of which property included therein was not rateable, is altogether bad; and semble, a rate is bad that is antedated and made for a period antecedent to the date. (Douglas v. Chalk, 2 D. C. 76, M. C.)

5. On whom the Rate to be made.

5. On whom the Rate to be made.

By the 43 Eliz. c. 2, the rate is directed to be made "By taxation (a) of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods in the said parish."

This was the only general law on this subject, prior to the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 29. It was indeed suggested that the parochial assessment act had altered the law of rating inhabitants, inasmuch as it prescribed certain forms not adapted to the assessment of inhabitants; but in Reg. v. Lumsdaine, 2 P. & D. 219; 10 A. & E. 157; and Hodges, Rep., it was decided that the law was not altered in that respect. This was an appeal against a rate, for the poor of Wimborne Minster. Rate confirmed. Case:—The rate was in the proper form. No stock in trade was rated. There was considerable stock in trade, yielding profit, in the parish, at the time when the rate was made. The parish contains 12,000 acres, rateable to the relief of the poor. In 1833 stock in trade not having been included in a poor-rate, made on the 3rd day of May, an appeal was entered against it on that ground, when the rate was quashed, and a new rate was made on the 28th February, 1834, in which stock in trade was assessed. From that time stock in trade continued to be regularly rated down to June, 1835. Stock in trade had not been rated therein from the year 1796 until the rate of February, 1834, and there was no evidence of stock in trade having been rated in the parish previously to 1796. Stock in trade has not been assessed in the said parish since the month of June, 1835.—The question for the consideration of this court is, whether stock in trade, yielding profit in the said parish, ought or ought not to have been assessed in the said rate. After the argument against such rate, and without calling on the counsel on the other side, Lord Denman, C. J., said, "It is exceedingly probable that it was the intention of the legislature to repeal, to some extent, the statute of the 43 Elizabeth; but no such intention is carried into effect, and the court expresses this opinion at the earliest possible time, in order that another statute may be passed, if any such alteration is intended. All the observations which have been addressed to us, fall short of maintaining the proposition contended for. The object of the statute is to provide for an uniform mode of rating for the relief of the poor; but nothing is said about introducing a new principle of rating. The statute directs that a rate shall be made, upon an estimate of the net annual value of the several hereditaments rated thereunto; the word 'hereditaments' being liable to much observation, as to its meaning. The second section directs that every rate shall contain an account of every particular set forth in the form given in the schedule; and upon looking at the column which contains the description of the property rated, the examples given consist of property, which comes under the class of hereditaments only. But the former part of that section enacts, that the particulars in the schedule shall be given 'in addition to any other particular which the form of making out such rate shall require to be set forth.' It is contended that the statute amounts to a declaration, that personal property shall not be rated; on the contrary, it expressly avoids doing so. The decisions on the statute of Elizabeth clearly establish, that personal property is rateable. These decisions could only be got rid of, by words of positive enactment, and as the statute contains no such positive words, the old law must be taken to prevail and continue. This court cannot, and will not, do by implication, that which ought to be done by an express act of the legislature. This rule must, therefore, be made absolute, to quash the rate."—Littledale, J. "The 43rd

Stock in trade, yielding profit, being rateable to the relief of the poor, under 43 Eliz., is not exempted by the (Parochial Assessment Act) 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96.

(a) The poor rate is a tax. An exemption, therefore, from all taxes exempts from the poor rate. (Mitchell v. Fordham, 6 B. & C. 274.) And a covenant to pay all taxes would include a poor rate, although it was decided (Theed v. Starkey, 8 Mod. 314) that all taxes on the land did not include the poor rate, that being a rate on the occupier in respect of land.

5. On whom the Rate to be made.

of Elizabeth embraces two classes of contributors to the poor's rate. First, 'every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other,' which includes all the inhabitants within the parish; and secondly, 'every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods, within the parish.' The rateability of personal property depends upon the first part of this section, and so far as the decisions have hitherto gone, stock in trade, and ships, are the only kinds of personal property in respect of which inhabitants have been held to be rateable. Then comes the 6th and 7th of W. 4, c. 96, which probably contemplated that personal property should no longer be included in the rate. It recites that it is desirable to establish one uniform mode of rating, but its provisions are confined to the mode of rating hereditaments. It is evidently not a declaratory act, and the only way in which it can affect the rateability of personal property, is by contending that, so far, it amounts to a repeal of that statute. But that argument cannot be maintained. It merely contains a provision as to rating a certain description of property, but does not amount to a repeal of the statute of Elizabeth."—Patteson, J. "I am entirely of the same opinion. It is clear that under the statute of Elizabeth, personal property is rateable, provided it be visible and profitable. That was decided by Lord Ellenborough, in Rex v. Ambleside, 16 East, 308. Then as to the 6th and 7th of W. 4. c. 76, I agree that it is not a declaratory act, to the effect that personal property shall not be liable to contribute to the rate, nor does it repeal the statute of Elizabeth. Indeed I do not believe that the legislature contemplated, in the slightest degree, that it should have any such effect. The object of the statute was to establish one uniform mode of rating, and it does not affect the rateability of personal property. When the statute was passed, it was well known by the decision in Rex v. Joddrell, 1 B. & Ad. 403, how the law stood."—Coleridge, J. "I am of the same opinion. I do not see any intention expressed by the legislature, to repeal the provisions of the statute of Elizabeth. That personal property is rateable under that statute, if it be visible and profitable, cannot be doubted. Under these circumstances, if the legislature had intended to release this species of property from contributing to the rate, it might have been done by introducing two or three lines into the statute, to express that intention. We cannot therefore do that which the legislature has abstained from doing. The silence of the statute as to stock in trade, is quite consistent with the supposition, that it was only intended to provide for an uniform mode of rating one species of rateable property."

Stock in trade not to be rated.

Since that decision, however, a temporary act was passed on the 10th August, 1840, by which it was enacted, that from and after the passing of that act (3 & 4 Vic., c. 89), "it shall not be lawful for the overseers of any parish, township, or village to tax any inhabitant thereof, or such inhabitant in respect of his ability derived from the profits of stock in trade, or any other property for or towards the relief of the poor; provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall in anywise affect the liability of any parson or vicar, or of any occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods, to be taxed under the provisions of the said acts (43 Eliz. c. 2; 13 & 14 C. 2, c. 12), for and towards the relief of the poor." The act to be in force till 31st Dec. 1841.—It has been continued, but not permanently, by 6 & 7 Vic. c. 48.

The cases hereafter set out, are all decided on the statute of Elizabeth.

"Such sum as they think fit."

The statute of 43 Eliz. gives a power "to rate in such a sum as they shall think fit." This does not import that they have a power to rate arbitrarily, but to rate the occupier according to the value of his occupation, and inhabitant according to his visible personal property. Tindal, C. J. 9 Bing. 595.

Who an inhabitant.

The words "inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other," include all those who possess property not coming within the several species of it described in the next following part of the same clause of the act.

Who are rateable as Inhabitants.

WHO ARE RATEABLE AS INHABITANTS.

Holledge's case, 2 Roll. Rep. 238. The lessee of a stall in a market town, who came there weekly to the market to sell his wares, was not rateable to the repairs of the church; and that if a man take up his lodging for a week in a town, he shall not be so charged or to such like taxes.

Lodger or stall-keeper as regards church rates.

Persons carrying on a trade in, but residing out of a parish, are not rateable as inhabitants.

Rex v. North Curry, 4 Barn. & Cres. 953; 7 D. & R. 424. The appellants, Stuckey and Co. were partners in trade, all residing in the parish of Langport, and carried on a considerable branch of their business in coals, culm, deals, and salt, in North Curry, by means of a foreman and other servants. The foreman and his family resided there in a house on part of the premises on which the trade was carried on, belonging to the appellants, for which they were assessed, as proprietors and occupiers, in the rate appealed against, at 1*l.* 2*s.*, and they were also assessed for stock in trade 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Neither of the appellants ever slept in North Curry, but they came there for the purpose of inspecting the foreman's accounts, and to see how the business was going on. On such occasions the acting partner used a small parlour in the foreman's house as a counting-room, which the foreman, in the absence of the appellants, used when he had company. There were no sleeping conveniences kept for the appellants in the foreman's house, nor in any other part of the parish. The stock was received and sold by the foreman on the premises, and on every Friday the proceeds, with the accounts of the week, were sent to the partners at Langport, and returned, after inspection by them, to the foreman on the succeeding Monday. Accounts were also made up monthly, and sent to the partners for their inspection. The only ground of appeal relied upon was, that the appellants were not liable to be rated for their stock in trade, they not being inhabitants of North Curry. Bayley, J.—"If the question raised in this case were res integra, the argument addressed to us would deserve great consideration. But there have been cases in which it has been held that a party (not being a parson or vicar), to be rateable to the relief of the poor must either be an inhabitant or occupier of lands within the parish; and I need hardly observe, that in this branch of the law certainty is very desirable. If the appellants in this case were liable to be rated, it must be because they come within the description of the persons upon whom the liability is imposed by the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. It has been insisted, that Stuckey and his partners are persons liable to be rated either as inhabitants or as persons coming within the meaning of the words 'and other.' In the numerous cases, however, which have come before the courts on the rateability of tolls, it has never been suggested that persons not coming within the description of the words 'inhabitants or occupiers' were liable to be rated under the words 'and other.' In Rex v. Nicholson (12 East, 342), Lord Ellenborough, after stating the words of the act, says 'that tolls do not come within any one description of occupancy described by the statute, they are not lands nor houses, &c. If, therefore, the owner be taxable for them at all, it must be as an inhabitant of the parish out of which they arise.' Lord Ellenborough, therefore, must have considered the words 'and other,' not to have carried the description of the persons liable to be rated further than the word 'inhabitants' did, assuming that to be the true construction of the statute; then the question in this case is, whether Stuckey and his partners were inhabitants within the meaning of the statute. That word may have a very extensive sense, so as to include in it all persons possessed of property in the place. Such a construction has been put upon that word in the statute of bridges, the riot act, and the black act; but in those statutes the word 'inhabitants' was the only word used as descriptive of the persons liable to be charged. From the nature of the subject-matter to which it was applied, it was considered as necessarily including in it all persons having property in the place to be taxed. It has been held, accordingly, that a person occupying land in a parish, but living out of it, is compellable to receive a parish apprentice, although the statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2, says that none but inhabitants and occupiers shall be bound to receive the same. But in this statute several words are used as description of the persons to be taxed, viz. 'every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and every occupier of lands.' In Rex v. Nicholson, the court were of opinion that the word 'inhabitant' was not to be taken in the extensive sense which had been applied to it in the construction of the statute of bridges, but in a confined sense, as descriptive only of a resident within the parish." Le Blanc, J. said, "That the word 'inhabitant' was used as well as occupiers, and that he considered that by the former was meant a person who was resident in the place, for one might occupy without being resident, and the statute meant to include both. It is also stated in Nolan's Poor Laws, 3rd edit. 72, that personal property cannot be rated unless the proprietor reside in the parish. Then the question is, what is the meaning of the word 'resides?' I take it that that word, where there is nothing to show that it is used in a more extensive sense, denotes the place where an individual eats, drinks, and sleeps, or where his family or his servants eat, drink, and sleep; and if that be so, there is no ground for saying that Stuckey or his partners had a residence in the place in question. I think that according to the former decisions, the word 'inhabitants' in the 43 Eliz. c. 2, must be confined to resiants; and therefore, inasmuch as the appellants were not resiants within the parish, they were not liable to be rated in respect of their personal property."—Holroyd, J. "It seems to me, that consistently with the construction put upon the words of the statute of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, in several cases we must hold that the appellants in the court below were not rateable. If that construction had not already been put upon the statute, the argument in favour of the rate would be entitled to attention; but without overturning the cases where it has been held that a non-resident proprietor of tolls is not rateable, we cannot hold that the parties mentioned in this case are rateable either as coming within the word 'inhabitants,' or the words 'and other.' It seems to me that the latter words must mean 'other inhabitants.' The legislature never could intend to rate persons who were neither inhabitants nor occupiers of property within the parish; and unless inhabitants means inhabitant resiant, the subsequent word 'occupier' will have no effect whatever. On that ground, in Rex v. Nicholson, it was held that a party was not liable to be rated for tolls unless he was an inhabitant resiant. In the course of the argument, Lord Ellenborough says, 'The great difficulty is to bring the case within the words of the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, conferring the authority. The party rated must be either an inhabitant of the parish, or he must be an occupier of one or other of the descriptions of property mentioned in the statute." And in another place he asks 'whether the counsel were aware of any case where the word inhabitant in the statute of Elizabeth had been held to mean any other than resident?' And afterwards in giving judgment, Lord Ellenborough says expressly that there is no case in which the word 'inhabitant' in that statute has been held to mean any other than a resident within the parish. Le Blanc, J., also seems to have considered it clearly necessary that a party must be either a resident in the place, or an occupier of real property, in order to make him rateable; and Bayley, J., says, 'In a statute which mentions inhabitant as well as occupier, inhabitant must meant resident, otherwise it would mean the same as occupier.' In Williams v. Jones, (12 East, 346), it was held, on the same grounds, that a non-resident proprietor was not rateable for tolls of a ferry. The construction which it is contended ought to be put upon the words 'and other,' would have applied to those cases as well as to this; and if that be the right construction, these cases have been improperly decided. I think that according to the construction already put upon this statute, the words 'and other' in this clause of the statute must mean 'and other inhabitants,' and that being so, then, for the reasons already given, Stuckey and his partners were not rateable."

Meaning of "inhabitant."

"Resident."

Who are rateable as Inhabitants.

See ante, Rex v. Pounder, and Rex v. Adlard, as to the meaning of the word "inhabitant," when a personal trust and when a pecuniary charge is intended.

A non-resident partner is not rateable, although one of the firm is resident.

Rex v. Fryer, 4 B. & C. 961; 7 D. & R. 426. W. Fryer, J. Gosse, and R. Pack, appealed against a rate made for the parish of St. James, Poole, whereby they were assessed for certain ships, for exports and imports, and cooper's stock. Fryer, Gosse, and Pack were partners as merchants, and were interested in equal thirds in the partnership stock and effects, and the vessels belonging thereto. The partnership business was carried on at Poole and Newfoundland. At Poole they had a counting-house and storehouses, and a clerk used the counting-house and kept the key, but did not sleep there. Fryer also carried on the business of a banker, with third persons, in the parish of Winborne Minster, six miles from Poole, and his dwelling-house was at Winborne. The banking partnership had also a counting-house and some other rooms and a stable in Poole, and a clerk of the banking partnership lived on those premises. The furniture in the rooms belonged to him, but the furniture in the counting-house belonged to the banking firm. None of the partners in the banking firm resided in Poole. Pack resided at Newfoundland. The rate was made upon the whole partnership interest in the exports and imports, in the cooper's stock, and in each of the ships, and not upon the share of Gosse only. Scarlett said, "that the rate being upon the partners in respect of personal property, they were rateable only as inhabitants, and, according to the authorities, it was impossible to contend that two of them were inhabitants, inasmuch as they were not resiant within the parish. He said he would not therefore argue the case, and the rate was sent back to be amended, by striking out the names of the appellants."

A resident partner is rateable for his share only.

Rex v. Gosse, 9 D. & R. 759; 7 B. & C. 60. One of several partners resident in a parish could not be rated for more than his own share of the partnership personal property. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "It is clear that the rate must be amended. By 43 Eliz. c. 2, inhabitants are to be rated according to their ability. If this rate were to stand, Gosse would be rated according to the ability of himself and others. It is said that there will be difficulty in ascertaining the share to which any partner may be entitled: but where that is the case, the rate may easily be imposed in respect of the whole, and the party may come and discharge himself by proving the extent of his interest. Rule absolute for amending the rate.

Personal estate.

Whatever difficulties in practice may attend the rating of inhabitants in respect of their personal estate, it was the settled law under the statute of Elizabeth, that an inhabitant was rateable for his stock in trade, of which he made a profit within the parish, whether there was a custom in the parish to that effect or not; and therefore some of the following cases were disregarded as to the custom. See Nightingale v. Marshall, 2 B. & C. 318.

A farmer is not rateable for his stock.

Q. v. Barking, 2 Ld. Raym. 1280. Upon quashing several orders made relating to the poor-rates, the matter in difference was referred by K. B. to Lord C. J. Holt; but the parties, not satisfied with his opinion, signified their consent in writing to submit this question to the opinion of the judges of the K. B.: to wit, whether a farmer for his stock shall not be chargeable and taxable to the poor-rate, as well as a tradesman for his stock in trade? And the other three judges were of opinion that a farmer for his stock is not taxable, contrary to the opinion of Holt, C. J. Whereupon the following rule of court was made: "Upon mature deliberation, it is considered by the court that a farmer is not taxable to the poor-rate for his stock; and that a tradesman is taxable for his stock in trade." [Or, as it is expressed in the record, Quod firmarius, anglicè, a farmer, non erit onerabilis et taxabilis ad ratus pauperum pro peculiis, anglicè, stock; et quod artifex, anglicè, a tradesman, est onerabilis et taxabilis pro peculiis, anglicè, stock, in arte, anglicè, trade.]

Stock in trade of tradesmen, &c. rateable.

Rex v. Witney, 5 Burr. 2634; 2 Black, 709. The manufacturers and traders within the parish of Witney had been assessed to the land-tax for their stock in trade, but never before to the poor-rate for such stock. In support of the rate, Q. v. Barking, (supra,) was cited. But the court were not satisfied with the authority of that case. Lord Mansfield, C. J., expressly called it a strange note. They observed, that the opinion of three of the judges was only said to be that a farmer for his stock was not taxable, contrary to the opinion of Holt, C. J. But it doth not appear that a question was directly put to them, whether a tradesman was taxable to the poor for his stock in trade? The court, however, gave no explicit opinion upon the merits of the present case, though they seemed very far from allowing that a tradesman is rateable to the poor for his stock in trade. But here, the order of sessions is clearly wrong upon the face of it; because they ought not to have quashed the whole rate, but to have added those persons and that property which it was thought were illegally omitted. Order quashed.

As to rateability of stock in trade.

Rex v. Ringwood, Cowp. 326. The sessions quashed a rate, and stated that three persons were possessed as co-partners of stock in the trade of brewers and maltsters, in the parish, to the value of 4000*l.*, for no part of which was any of them assessed; that the partners were inhabitants of the parish. It did not appear that stock in trade had ever before been rated in this parish, therefore they adjudged the rate to be quashed. Lord Mansfield said, "I have no doubt what is to be done with it, as the authority of Rex v. Witney (supra,) is precisely in point. I think the justices would not have done very wrong, if they had acquiesced in the practice which has obtained ever since the statute of 43 Eliz., of not rating this species of property. The Rex v. Witney was determined upon this single ground, that the justices in session should not have quashed the whole rate, but should have amended it by inserting the particular persons and that property which was omitted, and which they thought rateable. So here, the justices at sessions should have amended the rate, if they thought this property rateable; and then on attempting to do it, they would have discovered the wisdom of conforming to the practice, which they expressly state in the case, of not rating it. If they had tried to amend it, how would they have rated this stock? Are the hops, and the malt, and the boiler, to be rated at so much for each? Or is the trader to be rated for the gross sum which his whole stock would sell for? If the justices had considered, they would have found out the sense of not rating it at all; especially when it appears that mankind have, as it were, with one universal consent, refrained from rating it; the difficulties attending it are too great, and so the justices would have found them." Then, after adverting to some of the cases, his lordship added, "They talk of visible property; what is visible property? I do not know what is meant by it. If any visible thing should be determined to come under that description, in that case a lease for years, a watch in a man's pocket would be rateable. Visible property is something local in the place where a man inhabits; but that does not decide what a man's personal property is: consider how many tradesmen depend upon ostensible property only." Order of sessions quashed.

Stock in trade may be rated, according to usage.

Sed quære.

Rex v. Hill, Cowp. 613. The appellant Hill was a clothier, and an inhabitant of the parish of Bradford. He was charged to the poor rate in respect of his stock in trade in the parish. The sessions confirmed the rate. Lord Mansfield, C. J. asked, "What usage heretofore had been in this place with respect to rating stock in trade?" Unto which it was answered, that the usage was waived, and that the counsel at the sessions had agreed to bring the general question before the court. Lord Mansfield said, they had no right to do so, and thought it ought to be sent back to the sessions to state the usage. Afterwards, the case being sent back, and the sessions returning, that it had been the usage heretofore in the parish of Bradford to rate persons for their stock in trade, the court ordered the rate to stand.

Stock in Trade and Ships.

Rated in Bridgewater.

Rex v. Rodd, Cald. 147; 1 Bott, 178. Rodd was rated in Bridgewater four shillings in respect of his stock in trade, above what he was charged for his house and shops, and other real property. The sessions confirmed the rate, and stated specially, That within the said borough it had been usual, ever since the existence of rates for the relief of the poor, to assess the inhabitants of the said borough for and in respect of their personal property or stock in trade; and amongst them, such as have been of the same trade and of similar circumstances with the appellant. And it was admitted that it was not possible to distinguish this from Rex v. Hill. By the court, rate affirmed.

Personal property is rateable, and the bare possession of it is evidence from which the justices may draw the conclusion, that the possessor is rateable.

Rex v. Dursley, 6 T. R. 53. J. Harris appealed against a rate for the parish of Dursley, upon the ground that Messrs. Tippots were not rated for their goods, stock in trade, and personal effects: and the court being of opinion that stock in trade and personal property ought to have been rated, quashed the rate. The usage was against the rule. The case stated that "it was not proved that any profit was made from the stock, or that it belonged to them, except from its being in their possession." By Lord Kenyon, C. J. "There is no doubt but that personal property is rateable; but the difficulty in this case is to know for what these persons should have been rated. They appeared, indeed, in the possession of stock in trade, some to the amount of 100*l.*, others 50*l.*, but the sessions have not stated whether or not this property belonged to the several persons whom the appellant wished to include in the rate, or, if it did, whether or not it produced profit, or was not liable to incumbrances equal to the value of the property itself. The bare possession of personal property, is, to be sure, evidence from which the justices may draw the conclusion that the possessor should be rated; but here the justices, after stating the possession, have raised a doubt respecting other facts, which they should have inquired into and determined upon. They have raised a mist which we cannot dispel. The facts are not sufficiently disclosed to enable us to draw the conclusion that these persons ought to be rated. Order of sessions quashed.

The sessions must find that the stock in trade is not only visible property, but productive.

Rex v. Macdonald, 12 East, 324. See case (post.) One ground of appeal was, that certain stock in trade was not rated. The case stated, among other things, that several persons named were inhabitants of Manchester, and possessed of visible stocks in trade, and were personally liable to be assessed, if by law such property was liable, but they were not rated, nor was any one rated in Manchester in respect of their personal property, although personal property was universally rated in that township down to 1796, and occasionally collected up to that time, but this merely at nominal prices, having no relation to the actual value, and from thence rated (but not collected) to 1807; and from 1807 it had not been rated. The appellants gave evidence of the amount of the clear surplus of stock in trade, or other personal property, as to the several persons, and called two witnesses to give this proof as to two of the persons, but the justices were not satisfied from the evidence that there was any sum of surplus by which they could amend the rate. Lord Ellenborough, "As to the omission of rating stock in trade. In order to include particular individuals in the rate, a case must be made out in evidence against those individuals; here there was an attempt to do it by the appellants, but they failed in satisfying the court below on these facts. We have no concern with the conclusion of fact, and I do not say I should have come to the same conclusion; but the justices have found only certain inhabitants were possessed at the time of visible stock in trade within the township, and were personally liable to be assessed to the poor's rate in respect thereof, if by law such property be liable to be rated. Now visible property in the place, such as stock in trade, merely as being visible is not liable to be rated; but to make it rateable, it must be also productive: but the justices have found that it was not productive, or, what is the same in effect, that it was not proved to be so to their satisfaction. That finding concludes the question."

Stock in Trade and Ships.

If personal estate be rateable, it must be local visible property within the parish.

Rex v. Andover, Cowp. 550. The overseers made a new rate, in which they omitted to rate tradesmen for their stock which had been formerly rated in that parish. Other inhabitants of the parish appealed. The sessions adjudged, "that Mr. J. Wakefield was a proprietor of stock in trade as draper in the parish of Andover, to the amount of 300*l.*, and that the profits of that trade are 15*l.* a-year; and that he ought to be rated, in respect of such stock and profits, 7*l.* each rate." And there was the like adjudication as to other tradesmen. And the court ordered the rate to be amended, by putting into it a rate on the said several tradesmen in respect of such their stock and profits. It was objected, that this order on the face of it was bad, as it did not appear that the persons whose names were added had notice of the appeal. The court held this to be a fatal objection; and therefore the order of sessions was quashed. Lord Mansfield, C. J., said "It is a very different question, whether personal estate is to be rated to the extent contended for, (a) or not to be rated at all. It would make the poor-laws very oppressive, if a man were to be taxed to the extent of his whole personal estate and income. In that case every man who has money in the funds would be liable; lawyers for their fees, soldiers for their pay and the like. But where men are occupiers of houses, and have stock in trade, whether such stock in trade may be taken into consideration, is a very different question. Some personal estates may be rateable. But it must be local visible property within the parish. It would be material to state what has been the custom of rating. If the usage should be to take in stock in trade, there would be a very good right to support it. Let them, therefore, try it on the special circumstances of the case." Mr. J. Aston said, that if upon the general question it should turn out to be the law that personal property is rateable, it must be then rated, though it was never rated before.

The order for amendment should state when the parties had notice of the appeal.

Usage.

The court will not alter the conclusion drawn by the sessions from the evidence stated.

Rex v. Darlington, 6 T. R. 468. G. Allan appealed because seven persons were not rated for their stock in trade. Rate quashed. Case:—It did not appear whether stock in trade had or had not been rated in D. prior to 1745; from 1746 to 1752, and again from 1788 to 1794 it had been rated; in August, 1794, a rate was made, which continued in force the remainder of the year, which was not appealed against, in which the above seven persons were rated for their stock in trade as yielding certain profits (stating them), and which the appellants contended was an admission that to that time those seven persons possessed stock in trade producing the profits there stated. This rate was paid by some of the traders, but not by others; to enforce payment from whom no step had been taken. The appellants then proved that those seven persons, when the rate was made in January, 1795, kept shops in Darlington, and that each possessed a visible stock in trade there, and appeared to carry on business to the same extent as in 1794. The circumstances of the ability of those seven persons, or that they respectively made profit of their stock in trade, or that it was exclusive of their debts, or that it was a clear residue after debts paid, did not appear otherwise than as above stated. Lord Kenyon, C. J., "The Rex v. Dursley (ante, 147,) has been particularly pressed upon us as a decision of our own; but the present case is clearly distinguishable from that. There the sessions had forborne to draw any conclusion from the facts proved before them, and left a mass of evidence for our consideration, but so incomplete, that we could not say upon the facts stated whether the parties ought or ought not to have been rated; whereas here the justices have drawn the conclusion. They have indeed added, that the stock was not productive 'otherwise than as thereinbefore stated.' What is stated before is, that these persons had large visible stock in trade; that they were rated in the preceding year for that stock; that they submitted to the rate—for whether paid or not at the time is immaterial, no appeal having been made against the rate. Then, their circumstances not having (a) Mr. Burrough contended that every inhabitant was rateable according to his actual ability, and in a most learned and elaborate argument reviewed the whole common and statute law on the subject of the early relief of the poor. See also Mr. Bott's argument in Rex v. Hill.

Stock in Trade and Ships.

been altered, the question, whether all this was not primâ facie evidence for the justices to proceed upon,—and whether, as this evidence was not opposed by evidence on the other side, it was not sufficient to enable them to draw the conclusion which they have drawn. Undoubtedly it was strong primâ facie evidence against the persons rated; and they should have discharged themselves in such a case by evidence. I feel indeed the severity of making persons in trade disclose their circumstances. But this is not a singular case: persons appointed sheriffs in some corporations being sometimes obliged to disclose their situations in order to excuse themselves from serving the office. In this case there was some evidence before the justices in support of the rate; it was competent to them to decide on the weight of it; they have decided, and we cannot now say that the conclusion they drew was certainly wrong. With regard to the other question, this was a case in which the sessions could not alter the rate, because, by the addition of these seven persons, the proportion of every other person would have been altered, therefore they were bound to quash the rate." The other judges concurred. Grose, J. "There is no doubt but that generally speaking stock in trade is rateable." Order of sessions confirmed.

But a rate may now be amended, see 41 G. III. c. 23, post.

Goods sent to be worked are not stock of workmen.

Rex v. Sherborne, 8 East, 537. The appellants were silk-throwsters, occupying certain buildings in Sherborne, in which persons were employed by them to clean, spin, and throw silk sent them in a raw state from London for that purpose. The silk, after being so improved, was sent back, the appellants charging a certain sum for every pound returned, by which they make a profit after paying wages and every expense. They had always some silk in their possession. The rate was imposed in respect of the profits derived from the silk as stock. The sessions thought the appellants were not rateable; and K. B. decided at once that it was impossible "to call the silk the stock in trade of the appellants, who were employed to work it up. It was nothing like stock in the sense in which it had always been understood."

On an appeal against a rate, on the ground that A. is not rated for his stock in trade, the sessions ought to amend the rate, and not quash it. Stock in trade is rateable to the poor, notwithstanding it has never been rated, unless there be some circumstances to take it out of the general rule.

Rex v. Ambleside, 16 East, 380. Appeal against a poor-rate, because W. W., and other persons named in the rate, were not assessed in respect of their stock in trade. The rate was made in respect of real property only, and no stock in trade or other personal property was included in it. The sessions quashed the rate. The question intended to be submitted was, whether, if stock in trade produce a profit, the usage can vary its rateability? Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "Is there not another question, whether the rate ought not to have been amended, instead of being quashed? As to the rateability of stock in trade, that has been settled in Rex v. Darlington, 6 T. R. 468 (ante, 115), if it be ascertained to be profitable. It is then an objection applicable to one person, and the justices should have amended the rate, and not quashed it. The 41 Geo. III., U. K. c. 23 (post), was passed for the very purpose of enabling them so to do, in order to prevent the inconvenience of the parish being without funds for the maintenance of its poor in the meantime. We say, therefore, that this rate was not properly quashed, but ought to have been amended. If there are any circumstances to take it out of the general rule, as stated in Rex v. Darlington, they should be stated: if there are none such, the property is rateable. Rex v. White, (infra, 150), is also to the same effect." Order of sessions quashed.

Ships are stock in trade at their port.

A ship is stock in trade at her principal port (Rex v. Jones, 8 East, 451; Rex v. Liverpool, 8 East, 455; Rex v. Collinson, ibid.); whether such ship be within the parish at the time of making the rate or not. (Rex v. Howard, 8 East, 455; Rex v. Shepherd, 1 B. & A. 109, post.) An inhabitant is not rateable for the profits of a ship, unless the home of the ship is within the parish; nor can the owner of a ship be rated in the port in which the ship is registered, unless he is an inhabitant of such place. Rex v. Collinson.

In respect of what Personal Property an Inhabitant is not rateable.

Stock vested in the public funds

Rex v. St. John's, Maddermarket, Norwich, 6 East, 182. The rate was made by virtue of a local statute (10 Anne, c. 6), which enabled the overseers, &c. "to assess a certain sum upon the inhabitants, &c., and on all persons having and using stocks and personal estates in the said parish, or having money out at interest. Money out at interest, as well without as within the said city and county of Norwich, of the respective inhabitants within the same, had been constantly assessed to the poor's rates. The appellant was possessed of money vested in the public funds, or on government security, and then standing in her name in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England in the 5 per cent. bank annuities. And the question was as to the rateability of this stock. Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Money out at interest, however the lender may stipulate not to call for the principal for a given period, is still a loan of money, with forbearance for a certain time. It implies that the principal is to be repaid at some time or other, when the lender will be entitled to receive it as money, and not a substitute for the principal in a mere annuity. But with respect to stock, the payment of the principal can never be compelled. All that the government engage for is a perpetual annuity, redeemable at their own will and pleasure. Then can we say that stock is 'money out at interest?' Money out at interest must mean that which is capable of being recalled at some time or other; money which may or may not be out at interest, and is only rateable when so used. Is that at all applicable to the funds, where the principal is sunk in an annuity, and cannot be recalled, though in their stock parliament have reserved a power of redemption? If this then be not rateable under the local act, neither is it so under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, (the only other statute by which it could be rateable), not being local visible property within the parish. It is therefore not rateable under either statute." Lawrence, J. "If ability alone were the criterion of rating, all persons would be rateable in respect of their property, whether locally and visibly situated within the parish or not; but it has been determined again and again, that a person can only be rated for local visible property with the parish. The appellant was therefore not rateable under the general law; and for the reasons stated by my brothers, I am of opinion that she was not rateable for her stock as for money out at interest."

Is not rateable, as "money out at interest," under a local act.

Nor is it within statute of Eliz.

Salary not rateable

Rex v. Shalfleet, 4 Burr. 2011. The appellant inhabited a tenement at S. for superintending the saltworks there, for which he received a salary of 40*l. per ann.* from the government, and was rated for this salary. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "We are all of opinion that this is not such a species of property as can be rated to the relief of the poor, as personal estate within the parish."

Nor fees of an attorney.

Rex v. Startifant, 7 T. R. 60. Defendant was assessed in respect of his profits and fees of his profession as an attorney, according to the same usage which had prevailed since 1732. And the court, without hearing any argument, said that there was no doubt in the case, and quashed the rate.

An inhabitant not rateable for money, for salary, for household furniture, but he may be for ships and stock in trade.

Rex v. White, 4 T. R. 771. S. White was rated in 13,500*l.* for his personal property, consisting of ships employed in the Newfoundland trade from Poole, and moneys vested on real securities on lands lying out of the parish. A. White was assessed for her personal property within the parish in 1000*l.*, such personal property consisting of principal money to that amount. J. Lander was rated for his personal property in 200*l.*: he was collector of the customs at the port of Poole, and had no personal property except his salary payable as collector. T. Langharne was assessed for his personal property in 100*l.*: he was a captain in his Majesty's navy, and had no other personal property but his pay, which was paid to his agent in London: he had household goods and furniture in the parish. W. Corben was rated for his personal property in 100*l.*: he was clerk to a merchant, then an inhabitant of the parish, and had no personal property except his pay as clerk, and which he received in the parish. R. Daw was rated for his personal property in 100*l.*: he was master of a merchant-vessel trading from Poole to other parts, and had no personal property but his pay, which he earned as such master of a vessel, and which he received in the parish. W. Stansmore was rated for his personal property in 300*l.*, such personal property consisting of stock in trade as a shopkeeper. Lord Kenyon, C. J.

"This is a question of great difficulty, and of vast importance to the public. The statute of Elizabeth was passed to enforce (what are called) duties of imperfect obligation; for it was a duty, before that statute was made, to relieve the poor and necessitous; and the provisions of that act were adapted to the enforcing of those duties in the only way in which they could be enforced, namely, by raising a fund from those persons who are deemed competent to pay it: and in the case in Bulstrode, (ante, 110,) it was said that the rate should be on persons in respect of visible property locally situated within the parish. Then apply that rule to these cases. First, as to the ships: I think that they are rateable; this parish is their home, and must be so considered for the purposes of the register act. With regard to the money lent on real securities, I think that it cannot be rated, for it is stated that the money was lent by persons out of this parish on landed securities elsewhere: this, therefore, is not personal property in the parish, and I am not prepared to obviate the difficulty of such a person residing in two parishes. In the act of parliament which imposes a tax on horses and servants, the legislature have guarded against this difficulty by directing the person liable to the duties to give an account to the collector of the number for which he pays in any other parish; but there is no such provision for this case. I have doubted a great deal in the course of the argument on the case of the person rated for 1000*l.* in specie, but the inclination of my opinion is, that she is rateable for this, because it is stated to be property within the parish, and it may be productive if the owner choose. For the same reason I think that the household furniture is not rateable, because it produces nothing: the party might as well have been taxed for his clothes: for a house, indeed, the occupier must be taxed, because the legislature have said so in express terms. The case of the stock in trade is admitted to be rateable; but the cases of the salaries have been long at rest; those are not the subject of a rate." Buller, J. "I concur with my lord in all the points except that relative to the 1000*l.*, for which I think the owner is not rateable; the reason for which it was admitted that household furniture is not rateable, namely, because it does not produce any profit, must also govern this: it is stated that the owner has it in hard money, and therefore we must take it, upon this state of the case, that it does not produce profit. In the next place, I am of opinion that money is not rateable within this act of parliament. The legislature could not intend that inquiry should be made as to every guinea which a man has in his pocket. If the rate be confined to visible property yielding profit in the parish, there will be no difficulty in adhering to that rule; but it will be dangerous in the extreme to extend it farther, and to look into every man's bureau to see what money he has there. But at all events I think that this person cannot be rated, for the reason first given." Grose, J. "I have no difficulty upon the question respecting the ships; they are rateable, like stock in trade. But the party cannot be rated for the money at interest: and as to the 1000*l.* not at interest, I have had great doubts in my mind. But after consideration, I agree with my brother Buller, that the legislature did not intend to rate money. The act of parliament has enumerated all the different species of property which should be the subject of a rate, but has omitted money. Besides which, considering how much this statute has been at different times discussed, and that it has never been held that money is rateable under it, I am satisfied that this is the true construction of the act; for though, generally speaking, usage contrary to an act of parliament cannot bind us in construing it, the not rating money shows what has been the opinion of the profession upon this subject." Lord Kenyon, C. J., then said, "That he thought there was great weight in the reasons urged by his brethren against rating money; that he had himself expressed great doubts of his own opinion, and that he was therefore glad that part of the rate would be quashed by the opinion of the court." And on a subsequent day his lordship mentioned an expression of Yates, J., upon the subject of rating personal property in a case in Hil. 1769, which was not taken notice of by Sir J. Burrow in his report of it. "If personal property be rateable, it is not to be done at random, and to leave the party rated to get off as he can; but the officer making the rate must be able to support what he has done by evidence; and no personal property can be rated but the clear liquidated surplus after paying all his debts." The court ordered the rate to be confirmed as to the ships and stock in trade, and amended as to the other points.

2. Who are Occupiers.

Who an occupier.

The occupier intended, is every person occupying that which produces profit, whether to himself or to the person under whom he holds.

Occupiers residing in another parish are rateable.

Jeffrey's case, 5 Co. 66. W. J. had and occupied or received rent for thirty acres of land in H., but was himself an inhabitant of C., in the same county, and never did inhabit in H. He was assessed to the church rate of H. at so much per acre for his land there. And upon application to K. B. for a prohibition to stay proceedings against J. in the spiritual court for payment of the assessment, it was resolved, that although the house he dwelt in was in another parish, yet as he had lands in H. in his proper possession and manurance, he was in law a parishioner of H. That by manuring lands in H. he was by that resident upon it, and was therefore a parishioner of H., as to this purpose. But when there is a farmer of the same lands, the lessor shall not be charged for them in respect of his rent; and see Burn's Eccl. Law, 8th edit. by Tyrwhitt, vol. i. p. 350, n. (9).

Mode of occupation.

The land may be occupied by pipes for gas, water, &c. (Rex v. Brighton Gas Company, post); or by the enjoyment of an exclusive licence in the land (Rex v. Chelsea Water Works Company, and Rex v. Trent and Mersey Company, post); but the owner of a mere easement, as of a right of navigation or ferry, who cannot maintain trespass, is not a rateable occupier (Rex v. Thomas, Rex v. Nicolson, post.) As to the occupiers of commons, see post.

A body corporate is rateable as the masters and fellows of a college.

Rex v. Gardner, Cowp. 79. The master and fellows of Catherine Hall, Cambridge, purchased several houses, and pulled them down, and converted part of the ground on which the said houses had stood into an area, and planted the same with trees for ornament. The parish assessed them for the same to the poor rate. The questions were, whether the master and fellows being a body corporate, were liable to be rated, and whether the ground, as it was in its converted state, could be rated. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The question is, whether in law a corporation may be considered as occupiers or inhabitants? By the statute of Eliz. all lands and all real property are rateable to the poor, and must have occupiers and inhabitants, in respect of taxation; therefore, if a man have no tenant, and be seised of lands in fee, he is said to occupy them himself, or by his bailiff or agent. No case hath been instanced to show that a corporation is exempted from this tax: and I can find no authority in law which says they cannot be rated. And the authorities which have been cited tend to prove that corporations are rateable both as inhabitants and as occupiers; if they are liable in respect of the repairs of bridges and of churches, they are equally so by the statute of Elizabeth in respect of the poor. As to the objection that this area yields no profit, and therefore ought not to be rated, the answer is, that the value is in the judgment of the assessors; and if the college think themselves over-rated, they have their remedy by appeal."

An ornamental area is rateable.

Mr. J. Aston. "I have no idea but that the corporation may be occupiers; and as to the remedy of levying a duty upon a corporation, the books all agree that it can be levied, though they differ in the mode. Sheppard, in his Treatise upon Corporations, says, 'If a sum of money be to be levied upon a corporation, it may be levied upon the mayor or chief magistrate, or upon any person being a member of the corporation.' But in the case of the city of London, concerning the duty of water-bailage, (1 Ventr. 351,) it is different, and is thus: 'Note: it was said that for a duty or charge upon a corporation, every particular member thereof is not liable; but process ought to go in their public capacity.' And this is the right law.

2. Who are Occupiers.

In the case of Thursfield v. Jones, (Skin. 27,) the corporation were cited not by their proper names, but in their public capacity; and the court said 'If the company had neither land nor goods, there was no way to make them appear; but if they stood out, they must lie by the heels in their natural capacity.' Therefore, the idea that a corporation is not liable to be rated, or amenable by process in respect of a rate, is not well founded. Besides, by the act of 17 Geo. II. c. 38, the remedy of distress is extended beyond the particular parish into other precincts, and even into other counties. So that their property is answerable, though they cannot personally be punished." The other two justices concurred.

So also by a local act.

Cortis v. The Kent Water Works Company, 7 B. & C. 314. By a local act for the relief of the poor, certain commissioners were enabled to make rates upon all and every person or persons who held, occupied, or possessed land in the parish; it was held that a corporation was liable to be rated, although by a clause, giving an appeal to the quarter sessions to any party aggrieved, such party was bound to enter into a recognizance.

Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 453. It was admitted that a corporate body was rateable.

If the owner of a house occupy a part thereof only, but his servants (a) occupy other parts, and no one reside in the house but a poor person, permitted to do so out of charity, the owner is rateable as occupying the whole.

Rex v. St. Mary the Less, Durham, 4 T. R. 477. Upon an appeal for being rated for the whole instead of a part of a house, the sessions amended the rate, and also stated, that the appellant, a prebendary, purchased the premises and repaired them, but neither he nor any other person resided therein, except as hereafter mentioned, but he kept the key. In one of the rooms the appellant kept a lathe for his amusement, and had sometimes a fire in that room, and three chairs and a table; and in another room he kept corn for his horse; and he also occupied the garden, worth 40*s.* a-year, and the gardener sometimes put his flower-pots, shrubs, &c., and some of his working tools, into another part of the dwelling-house, where other lumber was also put, but no person had ever slept or lodged in the house, nor had any furniture been kept there (except as above). The appellant, out of charity, had permitted a poor man and his wife to live rent-free in the kitchen, between which and the rest of the house the door communicating was stopped up. The stable had not been, for upwards of two years, used for any purpose; previously he had used it as a dog-kennel. By the court: "As this gentleman occupied the garden and part of the house, his servants other parts, and a poor man another part, but those occupations were not distinct from his own, he ought therefore to be rated for the whole, for it would be attended with great inconvenience to have to inquire into each particular case what rooms of a house the owner occupied before he could be rated."

Assistant occupying shop in the absence of master, makes master rateable for the whole house.

In Rex v. Aberystwith, 10 East, 354, the appellant, being surgeon of a militia regiment, was occasionally absent from home, and left an assistant in a part of his house: his wife and daughter also were absent, and the assistant had only the use of the shop, the remainder of the house being completely parted off from it. The garden was taken care of by a person paid by the appellant, and the person with whom the key of the house was left permitted a friend of the appellant's and his servants to lodge there. The house was always ready for the appellant's return. The court decided that such person was rateable for the whole house, for that he must be taken to have been, under these circumstances, the occupier of the whole house.

Meeting house of which no profit is made is not rateable.

Rex v. Woodward, 5 T. R. 79. The appellants were rated for a Quaker's meeting-house, the basement story of which is divided into many small rooms, one of which is occupied by a person called the door-keeper, whose business it is to attend the door when necessary, and keep the meeting-house clean, for which he has a small salary. The remaining (a) As to the occupation of a master by his servant, see Rex v. Tynemouth, post; and Rex v. Morgan, 2 Adol. & El. 618. In this latter case, a landlord was rated for the farm which his tenant had quitted. He did not occupy the premises in any other manner than by putting a man into the farm house to take care of it. The court thought the justices were right in refusing a warrant of distress.

2. Who are Occupiers.

apartments are either not occupied, or are appropriated to the use of poor persons maintained by the Quakers. The meeting-house is solely appropriated to religious and charitable purposes. The trustees, the persons rated, do not receive any rent for the same. No pecuniary advantage whatever is made of the meeting-house. The court said it was impossible to support this rate on the trustees, who had no interest in the premises; and that there was no occupier at present, nor any profit made of it.

A private building used as a chapel (a) is rateable, if a profit be made of it.

Robson v. Hyde, Cald. 310; 1 Bott, 181. The person rated was the lessee of a chapel and vestry-room demised to him to be always used as a chapel for the service of the Church of England, and by contract never to be used for any other purpose, but not consecrated. It is, if a profit be made of it by letting out the pews or otherwise, rateable to the poor. But if it were absolutely given to the public, it might be a strong ground for saying that it was not rateable in his hands, at least out of whom his property had passed, and by whom nothing is reserved.

The trustees of a Methodist chapel receiving money annually for the rent of the pews, are rateable for the profits made of the building, though in fact they expend the whole of what they receive in making disbursements for repairs, &c., and to attendants in the chapel, and in paying the salaries of the preachers (a).

Rex v. Agar, 14 East, 256. In 1804, the appellants purchased a piece of ground, upon which, by voluntary contributions, they erected a chapel. The premises were conveyed to them, upon trust, that they should let the pews in the chapel under such payments as they might think fit, and upon other trusts; the consideration for the purchase of the ground, and the expense of erecting the chapel, were raised partly by voluntary donations and partly by sums borrowed by the appellants. The current expenses in supporting the chapel during the year 1810, were 247*l.* 7*s.*, and the pew rents for that year amounted to 221*l.* 4*s.*, which were applied towards the discharge of the insurance, of the rent and taxes of two houses occupied by the two Methodist preachers, of the chapel cleaners, of the salary and board allowed to two Methodist preachers, and of the salary for conducting the singing in the chapel; these expenses amounting to 247*l.* 7*s.* Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "The question is, whether the trustees are rateable? In what situation do they stand to the property? In 1804 they purchased the ground on which they afterwards erected the chapel; they are therefore the owners of the property. If they had gratuitously admitted persons into their chapel, and provided preachers for the congregation, without receiving anything, they would have come within Rex v. Woodward. What similitude then does this bear to Waldo's case (post, 173), who gratuitously devoted his property to the education and maintenance of paupers, but derived no profit to himself? Here profit is made of the property to the full by the trustees. If it were absolutely necessary that all the sums stated in the account of expenses should be expended, it should have been expressly found in the case that they were all necessarily expended in the carrying on the business of the chapel. The trustees may go on increasing their expenditure in this manner as their profits increase. I admit that it is not found that any of the items were fraudulently swelled for the purpose of this question; but it is not enough in these cases to show that the expenses laid out in any particular year absorbed the profits of that year; for the benefit of such expenses may be derived in future years, as is often the case with improvements of farms. If valuable lands in the neighbourhood of a town be covered with buildings in one year, the expenses of that year would probably exceed its profits, but the land would not cease to be valuable and rateable on that account. Whether these which are stated were necessary expenses or not, I cannot take upon me to say from the case, but it should at least have been found that they were all necessary, to produce the render of the rent received. This is not like the cases where persons have been held not to be rateable for property, as not being in the occupation of it; for these appellants are the original proprietors of the land on which they have (a) In Rex v. Liverpool, post, Lord Tenterden, referring to this case, said, "If there had been no intervention of trustees, and the minister had received the pew-rents, he would have been rateable in respect of them." But as to churches and chapels, see now 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 30, post. Title "Exemption."

2. Who are Occupiers.

erected a chapel by voluntary subscription, under no restriction as to the profits to be derived from it, and in the actual receipt of rents, which they have applied in manner stated." Grose, J. "The first question is, whether there is anything rateable in this case? and here is clearly rateable property; for there is land, and a building which produces profit. But it is said that it does not produce profit sufficient to warrant a rate on these defendants in respect of it. But that depends on the manner in which they choose to apply the proceeds. It does in fact produce profit, and they dispose of it as they please afterwards. How then does this differ from the case of other buildings which produce profit? If this be not rateable on account of the subsequent application of the profits by the trustees to the benefit of others, why should any estate which a man holds in trust be rateable? Then, 2dly, the trustees who receive the profits are the occupiers of the property, and therefore they are liable to be rated for it." Le Blanc, J. "The subject-matter of this rate is within the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, which directs the occupiers of lands and houses to be rated. The appellants purchased the lands and erected a chapel, and now let the seats and receive rents for them: they are therefore the occupiers of the building. Then the only question is, whether they are liable to be rated for it on the ground that it is not valuable property? It is let out on an annual rent. But it is objected, that though they receive profit for it in the first instance, they afterwards dispose of the whole on the establishment, in paying the salaries of the ministers, and in defraying other expenses of attendants and repairs. I agree that this is in substance a rate on the ministers, for if they had let out the pews and received the rents, they would only have received the surplus profit after payment of all the necessary expenses of the chapel; but the pews are let out by those who are in effect the trustees for the ministers, for they pay over to them so much as remains after defraying the expenses. The trustees, therefore, must be considered as the occupiers, because the property is in them, and they let out the pews, and they are therefore rateable for the profits in the same manner as the ministers themselves would be if these latter let out the pews." Bayley, J. "The property itself is rateable, and the trustees are the proper persons to be rated for it. It is a house, and the stat. of Eliz. says that occupiers of houses are rateable. It produces profit, for certain sums are annually paid into the hands of the persons rated by those who rent the pews. Then it is objected, that part of the money so received which is applied to the salaries of the preachers, is referable to them and not to the house; and that if there were no preachers, there would be no pew-rents received: I agree that the money so received is partly referable to the preachers, but a part is also referable to the house itself, in respect to the superior accommodation afforded by it to those who attend the preacher: for such large sums would not be paid to hear them in the open air. There is no hardship in saying that the trustees shall pay the rate, for they will stop in transitu so much as they pay for this purpose; and the ministers are not the proper persons on whom to impose the rate on the building in respect of their salaries. The trustees are not under any obligation to make the payments to the extent stated: they have paid the money in fact; but they were under no obligation to do so at all events. This, therefore, being property which in its nature is rateable, and profit being in fact made of it, and that profit passing in the first instance through the hands of the trustees, I see no doubt but they are rateable for it." Order and rate confirmed.

Where a profit is made of a building occupied by servants and lunatics, the person in receipt of the rent is rateable.

Rex v. St. Giles's, York, 3 Bar. & Adol. 573. The appellants were rated as the trustees of a lunatic asylum, which had been purchased by voluntary subscriptions, and the land and buildings were conveyed to the trustees. It was originally designed for lunatics, being parish paupers or members of indigent families; but the finances of the institution being inadequate to the maintenance of that description of persons only, a limited number of affluent patients were afterwards admitted, at rates of payment in proportion to their abilities, with a view of providing a surplus towards the support of the most necessitous. The asylum is now large and flourishing. The trustees receive yearly payments from 100*l.* to 20*l.*, or weekly payments from three guineas to 6*s.* Sixty-two patients pay 6*s.* per week; nearly the whole of these are parish paupers. 300*l.* per annum, arising from stock bequeathed to trustees in maintenance of lunatic parish paupers, paid to the asylum out of the Lupton fund. From 1825 to 1830, inclusive, the donations amounted only to 249*l.* The balance in the hands of the trustees in 1825 was 1579*l.*; and in 1830, it had increased to 2572*l.* The institution had also made purchases and erected buildings out of the moneys accumulated in their hands during this period, to the amount of 1000*l.*; so that the accumulation during the five years was about 2000*l.* All benefactors to this institution of 20*l.* or upwards at one time, as well as certain public functionaries for the time being, are governors, who exercise the entire control over the asylum and its funds. A committee of governors is appointed every quarter at a general meeting, and to them is delegated the power of auditing the accounts, contracting with tradesmen for provisions, hiring and discharging servants, determining what sums are to be paid by patients, and what persons are to be admitted, discharging patients, and otherwise giving such orders and directions as they think requisite. The paid officers of the institution receive salaries amounting to 986*l.* a year. The apothecary resides in the asylum, and has two furnished rooms to his separate use, in addition to his salary, which would be greater without these rooms. The house-servant and matron have no exclusive apartments except bed-rooms. The attendants, domestic servants and lunatics are the only other inmates of the house. The trustees do not derive any personal benefit from the institution. The asylum is situate in the respondent parish, and several persons, in consequence of being employed about it, have gained settlements in and become chargeable to the said parish. The trustees appealed on two grounds, first, that the asylum was not rateable; and secondly, that the trustees were not persons liable to be assessed. C. a. v. Lord Tenderden, C. J. "Upon these facts it seems to us impossible to say that this building does not produce a profit by means of the entertainment of those persons who are able to pay for their reception; and if any profit be made, the application of it when made is immaterial as to the question of rateability. Then supposing the building to be rateable, the next question is, who are the occupiers to be rated? Not the servants, for they cannot be considered as occupiers, and certainly not the unhappy lunatics received into the building. Then the property being subject to rate, the trustees, who are in the actual receipt of the profits, must be the persons rateable. There are no persons who can be rateable but the owners, and these are the owners. The case is not distinguishable from Rex v. Agar," (ante, 154.)

2. Who are Occupiers.

The trustees of a charitable institution, into which no child was admitted who did not contribute 12*l.* annually, the average annual cost being about 20*l.*, are liable to be rated. An occupation may be beneficial which is not gainful on a balance of profit and loss.

Reg. v. Sterry, 4 Jurist, 1158; 12 A. & E. 84; 4 P. & D. 122. The appellant was assessed, as representative of the managing committee of the Friends' School, for a house, exclusive of the two wings occupied by the scholars, garden, and premises in Park-lane, Croydon. Rate confirmed. Case:—"The Friends' School was instituted in 1702, by voluntary subscriptions amongst the members of the Society of Friends in London, for maintaining, educating, and employing the children of the poor of that society, and of other persons not in membership. A considerable fund was raised at the time when the establishment was first instituted, which has since from time to time been increased by bequests, donations, and voluntary subscriptions, to 30,000*l.* and upwards; and this fund has been invested in stock and landed property, in the names of trustees, in trust for the institution. The establishment is under the direction of the committee of management of the quarterly meeting of the Society of Friends in London and Middlesex. In 1823, a house and premises in Croydon were purchased by and conveyed to the trustees, and additional buildings were erected thereon as to adapt these to the accommodation of 150 children; and to defray the expenditure thus incurred, a considerable sum was raised by voluntary contributions from members of the Society of

2. Who are Occupiers.

Friends in various parts of the country, and from other persons not members of the society. In 1825 the establishment was removed from Islington to the said house and premises, where it has since been carried on. At the time of such purchase, in 1823, the said house and premises were assessed to the poor-rate at a rental of 60*l.* per annum, and the society were, after they took possession, assessed to the same amount, and paid the rate thereon for some time, and afterwards, on a rental of 100*l.* per annum, down to the year 1835, when the assessment was raised to 140*l.* per annum. The general management of the establishment is intrusted to a committee of twenty-four men and twelve women Friends, who are appointed by the quarterly and monthly meetings of Friends in London and Middlesex. Some of the committee go out of office every other year by rotation, and such members as cease to belong to the meeting by which they were appointed, or do not attend the committee for the space of one year, are disqualified, and the vacancies so occasioned are filled up by new appointments. The committee meet at the school once in every quarter of a year; but they appoint a sub-committee who meet there once a month, and, in the interval, the management of the establishment is placed under the care of the superintendant and mistress of the family, who reside upon the premises. None of the committee or sub-committee receive any emolument or salary; but the superintendant and mistress of the family, appointed by the committee, and liable to be discharged by them at a summary notice, are paid an annual salary. The cash of the institution is kept at a banking-house approved of by the committee, in the name of the treasurer, who is nominated by the committee, and, if approved of, appointed by the quarterly meeting of the Society in London and Middlesex, and he becomes a member of the committee by virtue of his office: but the treasurer does not reside upon the premises, nor does he receive any remuneration whatever. The children received into the establishment are nominated by agents appointed by the quarterly and monthly meetings before mentioned, and are admitted if approved of by the committee. No child is eligible if its parents are able to defray the expenses of its education elsewhere. The number of children maintained and educated since the removal of the school to Croydon, has varied from 130 to 150; and at the time of the assessment there were eighty boys and seventy girls, of whom nearly thirty were the children of persons not members of the Society of Friends. The average expense of maintaining and educating each child is upwards of 20*l.* per annum. The parents and friends of each child, if of ability, pay the sum of 12*l.* per annum; but, in a great number of cases, in consequence of their inability to raise this amount, it is collected by friends, or by contributions from the meetings where they reside; and no child is admitted on the establishment without the annual contribution of 12*l.* The difference between the actual expenditure in respect of the education and maintenance of the children, and the sum thus paid by the parents or friends, is made up from the annual income derived from the interest of the stock, the rents of the landed property before mentioned, and constant annual contributions; and if these are insufficient, by extra collections from members of the society and other persons. Any surplus remaining after payment of the expenses, is treated as part of the fund for the support of the institution, and is appropriated solely to that object. The house, which is rated, contains an apartment for the superintendant, another for the matron, a kitchen for the use of the establishment, a room in which the committee and sub-committee hold their meetings, and rooms for domestic servants; but the matron, superintendant, servants, and committee have no other accommodation than is essentially requisite for the discharge of their duties connected with the school. The garden and other premises are cultivated, and used only for the children, viz., for the growth of vegetables and fruit, consumed in the household, no private advantage being derived therefrom by any officer or servant of the establishment. No other person than the children, the servants, matron, and superintendant, resides upon the premises. The question is, whether the house, garden, and premises,

2. Who are Occupiers.

not including the two wings, are rateable to the relief of the poor." Judgment.—Lord Denman delivered the judgment. "This was a rate made upon the appellants (a) in respect of a house, garden, and premises in the parish of Croydon, exclusive of two wings of the house actually occupied by the scholars of the institution, which is there carried on, and two questions are made, whether there is any such beneficial occupation of the premises as will make the occupier rateable in respect thereof, and also who, if any, is such rateable occupier. The institution is in the main charitable; first taking its origin, and since for the most part maintained, by donations and subscriptions; it is devoted to the maintenance and education of children, afforded to them in a great proportion gratuitously; the trustees, managing committee and subscribers, receive no pecuniary benefit, and the servants of the institution no more than may be considered as mere wages for their services, and so far as regards the premises in question, they are found to have no other accommodation from them "than is essentially requisite for the discharge of their duties connected with the school." The premises were purchased by the society and conveyed to their trustees in 1823; at that time the occupiers were assessed to the poor-rate, and the society has continued to be so down to the present time. They have added to the buildings from the charitable funds before alluded to, and they cultivate the garden, and whatever is not built upon, devoting the produce to the use of the scholars and the household. These children are admitted on the following terms—the average expense of maintaining and educating each is estimated at 20*l.* per annum; no child is admitted whose parents are considered able to defray the expenses of its education elsewhere; nor any, whose parents or friends will not contribute annually 12*l.* of the 20*l.*, which is expected to be the cost of maintaining and educating the child. Upon these facts we are to determine the questions before stated; and no one can review the numerous decisions which cases somewhat like the present have occasioned, without regretting that the court was ever induced to depart from the simple test, which the subject matter of occupation would in every case have afforded. Whether the occupation was in respect of private, or public, or charitable purposes, it would have been, we think, wiser to have disregarded; and, wherever the subject-matter was found productive to any one, to have rated the actual occupant in respect of that produce. The court, however, would be bound by the authorities, for nothing is so important in this branch of the law as uniformity and certainty; but it will not be necessary to overrule any decision in order to support the rate in this case. There is clearly a rateable subject-matter, that is, a subject, the occupation of which, under ordinary circumstances, would make the occupier rateable. If these premises were to be let by the society, and every shilling of the rent devoted to the same purposes, as at present, in some other place, the tenant would be rateable on the amount of the rent paid, or the clear annual value of the occupation. But even in the hands of the society there is a circumstance connected with the occupation which takes it out of those cases of occupation for charitable purposes, which have been considered not rateable as not being beneficial. That circumstance is the payment of 12*l.* per annum, by or on behalf of each scholar; a sum, indeed, not adequate to the expense, and, in a popular sense, not making occupation of the premises beneficial, that is, gainful; but still it is a revenue which the building produces, and actual gain on a balance of profit and loss is not needful. It is enough if a revenue be produced. With regard to the occupiers, there is no difficulty in determining that the trustees must be considered as such. They are the owners of real property which is not demised to any one. The committee, from time to time, use certain parts of the building; the matrons and servants of the establishment, other parts at all times. In all these cases the occupation is by the permission of the trustees, and, in point of law, must be considered as theirs. This case very much resembles that of R. v. St. Giles', York, p. 157; and R. v. The Mayor of York, (6 Adol. & Ell. 419), in all respects bears a very close resemblance, so strong, indeed, as hardly to be substantially distinguishable. Upon the whole, we are of opinion, that the sessions were right, and that their judgment must be affirmed."

(a) It was agreed, that if any rate was payable, the trustees should be the persons rated. 4 P. & D. 125, n.

2. Who are Occupiers.

The General Cemetery Company are rateable for their cemetery and for their vaults, the exclusive right to which had been sold.

Reg. v. Kensington, 4 P. & D. 327; 12 A. & E. 824. The General Cemetery Company were rated as occupiers of lands and buildings at 2000*l.*, the sessions reduced the amount to 444*l.* 18*s.* Case:—The Company, by stat. 2 & 3 W. IV., c. cx., are empowered to purchase land and to lay out and inclose a cemetery, and to erect a chapel for the reception of the dead before interment, and for the purpose of performing the burial service according to the rites of the Established Church, and also such porches, colonnades, and catacombs and vaults for private and public burials, and other buildings, for such purposes as they might think proper. The capital requisite is directed to be raised by transferable shares, and the profits divided among the shareholders. By the 43rd sect., the Company are empowered to sell and dispose of the exclusive right of interment, either in perpetuity or for a limited period, in any of the vaults, catacombs, &c., and places of burial which may be made by the Company within the cemetery, and also the right of making any vault, catacomb, &c., or place of burial within the said cemetery, with the exclusive right of interment therein, either in perpetuity or for a limited period, and also the right and privilege of single interment in any of the vaults, &c. constructed by the Company, or in the open ground, and also the right and privilege of erecting and placing any monument or cenotaph in the said cemetery, or any tablet or monumental inscription on or against the walls of the chapel, or other place appropriated by the Company for them, and also the right and privilege of placing any gravestone, or slab of stone or marble or other material, or footstones or headstones, upon or to any grave in the cemetery. By s. 45 the conveyance of the exclusive right of burial, &c. in all such vaults, and of the right and privilege of erecting and making of any family vaults, &c., with exclusive right of burial or interment therein, either in perpetuity or for a limited period, and of the right and privilege of erecting of any monuments or cenotaphs, shall be under the common seal of the Company. A form of conveyance is given by the act, and it is declared that every such conveyance so made shall be good and sufficient both at law and in equity, without words of inheritance, limitation, or representation, to vest the exclusive right of burial or interment in the catacomb or vault described therein, or to be erected or made in pursuance thereof, in the person purchasing the same, and their personal representatives, legatees and assigns, in perpetuity or for the period agreed upon, without any faculty whatever, subject to the payment of such fees as may be by the rules of the Company payable upon the interment of any corpse in such vault or cemetery, and subject also to such rules as shall be made by the Company for the better regulation of the said cemetery and the vaults and catacombs thereof. By the 44th sect. the Company is bound to keep the cemetery and the chapel, and the several buildings therein, and the external walls and fences thereof, and all other parts of the same, in complete repair. Under this act, the Company purchased land and erected the buildings for which they are rated. They have prepared the greater portion of the ground for the purposes of a cemetery, in which interments take place as in common burial-grounds. They have also made catacombs and vaults, which are wholly unproductive until disposed of under the act; but many are annually disposed of in perpetuity, according to the form of the conveyance given by the statute, and for the uses therein set forth. Certain portions of the grounds are also annually disposed of by the statutable conveyance for family graves; the purchasers of the catacombs and vaults have had the keys of such catacombs delivered to them after closing them up as directed by the 43rd section, and they have done all necessary repairs, the Company never exercising any act of ownership in respect of such vaults, after such sales. But the Company, at each subsequent interment in the family vaults, thus sold, charge various fees for the services of the minister, clerk, sexton, &c. The rate in question was founded upon the principle that the Company are liable to be rated for the produce of the ground so sold or disposed of for family graves, and for the catacombs and vaults so sold or disposed of during each year for the purpose of burial, under the statute, after deducting therefrom all the expenses of building the catacombs and vaults, and family graves, and all other expenses attendant on preparing them for use, and also to be rated upon all the fees paid for the service of the clergyman, clerk, sexton, gravedigger, bell-ringer, &c. (deducting therefrom the stipends paid by the Company to them, and all other necessary expenses upon such interments), and likewise upon all fees due upon common interments where no rights in perpetuity or for a term is granted, and upon the herbage growing in the cemetery. The appellants contended that the Company were not rateable in respect of the produce of the family graves, catacombs, and vaults, sold or disposed of as aforesaid during each year, but only upon the fees paid upon all burials therein, and upon common interments (deducting the aforesaid stipends and necessary expenses) in addition to the herbage as before mentioned. If the court should be of opinion that the Company are rateable for the sums received by them in respect of the sales for family graves and of the catacombs and vaults, then the rate is to be confirmed. But if the court should be of opinion that the Company are only liable to be rated in respect of the aforesaid fees and herbage, then the rate is to stand as reduced to 444*l.* 18*s.* Lord Denman. "The single question is, whether the Company are occupiers. The Company have to give effect to the act, and for that purpose a general power of superintendence and control is devolved on them. The 44th section obliges them to repair. I think they are the occupiers, and liable to be rated." Littledale, J. "The Company may grant certain privileges in perpetuity, but the Company have to keep the cemetery in repair, and the grantees of the privileges cannot enter the cemetery whenever they please. The Company are occupiers, and make a profit by sale of the privileges." Williams, J. "There is abundant proof of occupation by the Company when Rex v. Agar (a), Rex v. The Mayor of York (b), and Rex v. Tewkesbury (c), are referred to. This is an à fortiori case. It is a fallacy to suppose that in this case the Company sell parcels of land. The power to sell is as to surplus land only; as to other land, nothing is sold but the right of sepulture. As soon as it is settled that they are occupiers, it requires no argument to show that they are beneficial occupiers." Coleridge, J. "I am of the same opinion. Whether the profit is annual or not is immaterial to the question of beneficial occupation. Some of the facts in this case, if taken alone, without reference to the statute, might lead to the conclusion that the grantees are occupiers, as they have the keys and the exclusive use of the sub-soil. But these facts must be considered with reference to the act. The Company have only power to sell such land as may not be wanted for the purposes of the act. The form grant, with respect to other land, is not of so much land, but of certain rights in that land, the Company remaining in possession." Rate affirmed.

2. Who are Occupiers.

Trustees of a lunatic hospital appropriated to the poor are not rateable, having no profit or occupation; nor a servant having no exclusive apartment (d).

Rex v. St. Luke's Hospital, 2 Burr. 1053. Certain lands were demised to lessees for the purpose of erecting an hospital for lunatics: twenty-nine houses standing upon these lands were pulled down, and the hospital erected, and divided into cells for the lunatics, offices for their sustentation, &c., and apartments for the servants who were hired to attend them; and was supported by voluntary contributions; and J. M., one of those who were rated, was the principal hired servant, living in the hospital, and the trustees who were rated had no benefit from it nor any occupation thereof. Lord Mansfield. "Cases of this kind depend upon the peculiar nature of the respective hospitals: each stands upon its own distinct circumstances; therefore no general consequences will arise from the determination of this peculiar case. The land-tax differs from the poor's tax. The landlord who receives the rent, is to pay the land-tax: but the poor's tax is payable by the occupiers; therefore the rating hospital lands to the land-tax is not applicable to the present question. The occupier ought to be rated, regularly, by name; but in the present instance it is no more than a mere defect in form. The fault in form here arises from the essence of the thing, for if they cannot fix upon some particular person who may be rated as occupier of this building, it follows as a necessary consequence 'that no rate can at all be made upon it.' As to the argument that has been urged in support of the order, 'that a proprietor of lands or houses cannot, by his own private voluntary act, discharge such his property from payments legally due to other persons from and out of it,' it does not hold true in fact; for this rate, payable to the parish, as well as several other payments arising from property and chargeable upon it, do and must depend upon the will of the proprietor. The owner of a house may, if he pleases, pull it quite down and convert it into a loft; the owner of lands may, if he pleases, suffer them to lie barren and unoccupied: tithes and the right of them vary, according to the different species of the produce of the land; yet the land-owner may sow it or plant it or use it in the manner he likes best, or even not at all, if he so chooses. The material question in this case is, 'WHO can be named and charged as the occupier?' There are only three sorts of persons that occur to me; if they can find any others who may be properly charged as occupiers, such other persons will not be included in or affected by the evidence which we now give. The only persons that I can think of are, 1st. The five lessees; 2ndly. The servants attending this charity; and 3rdly. The poor mad persons who are the objects of it. First, As to the lessees. Mere NOMINAL trustees cannot be esteemed occupiers, or rated as such; besides, these lessees are plainly excluded, by a special proviso inserted in the lease, from converting the building to any other than this specifical use; and the lease is to determine and become void, if they do. They are so far, therefore, from being occupiers of it, that they are merely nominal—mere instruments of conveyance, and have no more interest in the thing than the crier of the court of Common Pleas has when he is named as the last voucher in a common recovery. Secondly. As to the servants attending this charity. They are not in a like situation with the officers of Chelsea Hospital, and of the other charitable foundations mentioned at the bar, where there are large distinct apartments appropriated to the use of the respective officers, wherein they and their families reside. Those officers are not charged as servants of such hospitals, or as inhabitants and occupiers of the ordinary rooms and lodgings therein, but as having separate and distinct apartments which are considered as dwelling-houses. The cases that have been considered by the judges relating to the window-tax are uniform in rating officers of hospitals for their distinct apartments; but in this hospital there are neither any such officers or any such apartments as were in those cases determined to be rateable. Thirdly, as to the poor miserable wretches who are the unhappy objects of this charity. It would be too gross to conceive them to be proper persons to be rated to the relief of the parish. And if no person can be found who is rateable to this tax, it follows by necessary consequence, 'that there can be no rate at all.'"

(d) By 9 Geo. IV. c. 40, land purchased for a county lunatic asylum shall not be rated at a higher value than the land was at the time of the rate. See post, "Proportion."

2. Who are Occupiers.

Land-tax no guide for poor-rate.

Rex v. St. Bartholomew, 4 Burr. 2435. The mayor and commonalty of London, as the governors of Bartholomew Hospital, were rated to the poor. Lord Mansfield. "The poor-rate must be charged upon the occupiers. In the case of St. Luke's Hospital, and in that of Chelsea Hospital, the officers were rateable as occupiers. Here the corporation are not de facto the occupiers. The poor are occupiers; but they are not rateable."

Neither the governors of an hospital, or the poor persons, can be rated;

Rex v. Gardner, Cowp. 79. The Master and Fellows of Catherine Hall were rated for a house erected for the butler, and for a house erected for the porter. These houses were respectively inhabited by the porter and or the servants.

butler, and their families. The butler's house had no communication with the college but through the porter's house. There was an entrance for the society to come into the college after the gates were shut. Both houses were without the college. The butler and porter had the entire use of their respective houses, without the college intermeddling therewith, and took in lodgers and boarders. The sessions confirmed the rate, and it was admitted that the rate ought to have been made upon the butler and porter personally, and not upon the college, and the Court quashed the order of sessions.

Royal palaces in the occupation of the royal family are not rateable, but servants occupying house and land belonging to the crown are rateable.

Rex v. Matthews, Cald. 1; 1 Bott, 170. Matthews was rated for a keeper's lodge in Windsor Park and two acres of land, which he occupied as keeper. He appealed against the rate, and the case stated that the king was rated for his Mews in New Windsor, and for his Mews in St. Martin's, Westminster. A variety of other cases are here mentioned, in which the servants of the crown had been rated for property belonging to their offices. Lord Mansfield. "The question is, whether this property is rateable? The royal palaces are not liable, nor have they ever been rated. As to the Mews in St. Martin's parish, that part of it only is rated which was taken in of late years, and was before that time ground belonging to some adjacent parish. It is clear that when a servant occupies house and land belonging to the crown, whether he pays for the same by rent or by service, it can make no difference as to his being rated: he is equally liable."

A beneficial occupier of the king's lands, whether by gift or for wages, is rateable for the same.

Lord Bute v. Grindall, 1 T. R. 338. On a special verdict it appeared that Lord Bute was ranger of New Park, Richmond, and had the custody of the houses, lodges, &c.; and for the better execution of his office, his Majesty granted to him the herbage and pannage of the park, with other privileges: some part of the park is inclosed land, some part meadow, and some arable land sown with corn and clover in the ordinary course of husbandry: the meadow has been always mowed, and the hay made by persons paid by the king, who found the seed: sixty-six loads of hay have been always carried by the king's waggons into the park for the deer, and the overplus stacked up for the king's horses, and the ranger's horses; when the arable land was sown with corn, the ranger found the seed; and when with clover, the king found the seed; and was manured, ploughed, and sown by the king's servants and horses, and reaped by the ranger, and sold for his benefit, and the king had no part; the straw was used for thatching the hayricks, and by the king's cart-horses: the profits arising to the ranger from the said lands are worth 100*l.* a-year; but the herbage and pannage of the park have yielded no profit to the ranger. Lord Mansfield. "The question is, whether the plaintiff is rateable at all? Not for how much or in what proportion. It is clear he is not rateable for the herbage and pannage, because they yield no profit; but there is a parcel of land inclosed which he sows, and afterwards reaps the corn from, and the profits arising to the ranger from the said lands amount to 100*l.* a-year: therefore he is occupier; and quo nomine occupier can make no difference whether by gift or for wages." Buller, J. "It is immaterial what interest the occupier has in the lands, whether he holds as tenant at will or at any other tenure: it is not necessary to inquire into the occupier's title."

Tenant at will is rateable.

The comptroller of Chelsea college is rateable for his apartments.

Ayre v. Smallpiece, 1 Bott, 154. The comptroller of Chelsea College, residing in the college, was rated to the poor, for apartments occupied distinctly and separately to his own use.

In Hampton Court Palace private individuals who occupy apartments not annexed to any office under the crown, or in discharge of any service to the crown, are liable to the poor-rate.

Reg. v. Ponsonby, 1 G. & D. 713. The defendants were assessed for apartments in Hampton Court Palace. Appeal dismissed. Case:—Hampton Court Palace was built by Wolsey in 1514, and presented by him to Henry VIII. in 1525; ever since it has constituted part of the royal demesnes appurtenant to the crown of England. After the decease of that monarch, the palace continued to be a place of occasional residence of the sovereigns of England until some time in the tenth year of King George II., who was the last sovereign who personally occupied it; from which time, and up to the present date, the palace has ceased to be a place of the actual personal residence of the crown. The palace contains a suite of rooms called "the state apartments," which contain a collection of pictures, the property of the crown, to which the public, under certain regulations, are permitted to have access; a room, called by the name of "the board of green cloth," and a gallery, which the public are not permitted to enter, and which are used as a depository for lumber. For the last sixty years the state apartments have not been used for any other purpose, and are not included in the present assessment. A guard of honour is always on duty at the palace, and divine service is regularly performed therein by a chaplain appointed and paid by the crown. The palace, as well as the gardens which surround it, are maintained and kept in order by the crown, and the produce of the gardens (which gardens are not assessed) is applied to her Majesty's use. Sentinels are posted at the various entrances, and those entrances are opened and closed at the pleasure of the crown. The housekeeper of the palace (who is the only officer of the royal establishment resident in the palace) formerly employed servants to show the pictures, and received a fee or gratuity for such view as a perquisite of office. Upon the decease of Lady Emily Montague, the late housekeeper, the state apartments were thrown open for the gratuitous admission and view of the public, under the superintendence of persons in the dress of police constables, but appointed and paid by the crown. There are several other apartments in the palace which are in the occupation of private individuals. Some consist of spacious drawing-rooms, dining-rooms, bed-rooms, servants' rooms, kitchens, and other domestic offices, suitable for the residence and accommodation of persons with considerable household establishments, and are now and always have been occupied by persons of rank and distinction, and others are occupied by persons of respectable station. One of the parties included in the rate appealed against is a Mr. Grundy, the husband of the housekeeper of the palace, appointed and paid by the crown, who, as such housekeeper, and for the proper performance of her duty, resides (with her husband and children) in the part of the palace set apart for her use, and in respect of which her husband is rated. (a) With this exception, and that of some other persons similarly situated, the several suites of apartments occupied by private individuals are not enjoyed by them as appurtenant or annexed to any office under the crown, but are occupied by virtue of a written grant or warrant, made by the lord chamberlain of her Majesty's household, in the following form:—"These are to require you to deliver or cause to be delivered unto —— the keys and possession of the following lodgings in her Majesty's palace of Hampton Court, viz., [here follows a list of the apartments, together with a description of their situation in the palace,] which lodgings are to be inhabited by —— or some part of —— family, a part of every year, or they will be considered vacant and disposed of accordingly; and, when the family are absent from Hampton Court, it is expected that one of their servants should be left in their lodgings, or that the keys thereof be left with you or the housekeeper for the time being: and for so doing this shall be your warrant. ———, lord chamberlain. To ———, housekeeper of her Majesty's palace of Hampton Court." In some cases the names of two or more individuals (members of the same family) have been included in one warrant. The occupiers of these suites of apartments provide at their own expense any kind of household furniture and fixtures requisite for the furnishing and fitting up of such apartments. Previously to occupiers taking possession of the apartments, such repairs as may be considered by the officers of the crown as necessary to be done to such apartments, are done at the expense of the crown; but in some instances, where the repairs desired for the accommodation of such occupiers have been of such a nature as to require a considerable outlay, such repairs have been effected at the joint expense of the crown and occupier; but all alterations or additional works required by the occupiers are done at their own expense, and in some instances such additional works and alterations have amounted to 1000*l.* and upwards. Afterwards the occupiers are bound, at their own expense, to do whatever internal works, alterations and repairs may be found necessary for keeping up and preserving the apartments in a proper and tenantable condition, or which they may consider essential to their greater convenience and enjoyment; but no works, alterations and repairs are done except under the directions of the officers of her Majesty's Office of Woods, &c., and the government contracting tradesmen are employed and paid by the occupiers of the apartments. A periodical survey is made of the apartments every second year by the officers of the crown, and a report made of the repairs necessary for placing them respectively in tenantable repair; and notices (of which the following are copies) are given by the crown to the occupiers, to have such repairs done, which are done by them accordingly:—" Office of Woods. In pursuance of her Majesty's command, signified to the chief commissioner of her Majesty's Woods, &c., an inspection of the several apartments at Hampton Court Palace, held by grace and favour of her Majesty, will take place in the ensuing summer, and in the summer of every succeeding second year, of which due notice will be given to each of the several occupiers, who after such survey and inspection will be required to execute whatever internal works and repairs may be found necessary for keeping up and preserving the apartments in a proper and tenantable condition. Duncannon. A. Milne. Cha. Gore."—" Office of Woods. Referring to the notice of 20 March last, addressed to you by this board, I beg to inform you that a survey has been made of the present state of the interior of the apartments you occupy by the grace and favour of the sovereign in Hampton Court Palace, and the repairs, &c. (according to the statement on the other side) are reported as necessary for placing your apartments in tenantable repair. I am, on behalf of the commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, &c., to request that you will, at your earliest convenience, give directions for executing the works enumerated, which must be done under the directions of the officers of this board. (Signed) A. Milne. The apartments require a general repair, painting, whitewashing," &c. (or as the case may be, varying according to circumstances.) The number of families now occupying such suites of apartments in the palace may be taken to amount to from 60 to 70, and the number of servants in their employment may be computed on an average at between 150 and 200. Instances exist in which the holders of warrants for such apartments derive considerable pecuniary emolument to themselves by accommodating other persons with the use of the same, in consideration of sums of money paid in gross; and also by way of yearly rent; and instances have occurred where others have derived emolument by taking in inmates or lodgers to board and lodge, or only to lodge, with them in such apartments, and others by carrying on or exercising their several trades or professions therein; but none of these acts have been done with the sanction or privity of the crown. Many apartments occupied by private individuals communicate with the state apartments, and the doors of communication are kept locked during such occupation; but if, in the general care of the palace, the housekeeper finds it necessary to open these doors, she exercises the power of doing so, and of passing through the apartments which are so occupied. Some of the apartments have exclusive outward entrances, opening upon the public high road and barge walk. The parishioners of Hampton, feeling themselves peculiarly aggrieved by the increased charges on the parish funds, arising from the relief of poor persons who followed the court, and by workmen then engaged in the alterations making at the palace, petitioned William and Mary for redress, when their Majesties were pleased to grant to them an annuity of 50*l.*, payable out of the receipts of the Exchequer, by writ of privy seal, of which the following is a copy:—" October, 1694. Anno Regis et Reginæ Gulielmi et Mariæ sexto. Poore of the towne of Hampton. Penson. A warrant under the Exchequer to pay out of monies (not appropriated to particular uses by act of parliament) to the churchwardens of the parish of Hampton for the time being a penson of fiftie pounds yearly during their Majesty's pleasure, for the support of the poore of that towne, at four quarterly payments, to commence from Michaelmas last, and to be distributed by the said churchwardens as the vicar of the said parish and the under housekeeper of their Majesties royal palace of Hampton Court shall direct. Subscribed by Sir John Nicholas, by warrant under his Majesty's royal sign manual; countersigned by the lords commissioners of the treasury." This pension has from time to time varied in its amount, by reason of the land-tax and other taxes attaching on it. For some years immediately following the time of the grant, it was received by the under housekeeper of the palace, and distributed by him at his discretion. It has for many years last past been received by the churchwardens, and applied by them in aid of the funds created and established by and with the other charitable donations given generally by the donors to the use of the poor of the said parish of Hampton. Lord Denman. "I agree with the sessions that the appellants are occupiers, and that they are rateable. I also agree with what has been suggested in argument, that the question referred to us is very much a question of fact. We may take it either that the sessions have formed their own opinion on the fact of occupation, and that they ask us whether there was any evidence to warrant their conclusion, or that they refer the whole matter to us. I think they had before them sufficient evidence that the appellants had each separate occupation; and, if I had been called upon as a juryman to pronounce upon the same evidence, I should have come to the same conclusion. It is clear that Hampton Court was once a royal residence, and equally clear that it has ceased to be so. Some of the cases as to rateable occupation are stronger than the present, particularly that of Lord Bute v. Grindall, (a) in which there was a joint occupation and possession, as it were, on the part of the crown, with Lord Bute, who was, notwithstanding, held rateable. In this case it is many years since the crown has taken possession. Certain apartments in the palace are kept for the public use, and the palace is guarded by sentinels; but these circumstances do not constitute personal occupation on the part of the crown. The delivery of the keys by the housekeeper does not vary the case, and is quite consistent with the notion that the appellants have an independent occupation; though at the same time it is a strong fact to show that the crown exercises a sort of paramount control and superintendence over all the apartments. The Attorney-General put it ingeniously whether, as the crown occupied part of the palace, the crown, if not exempt from rateability, would not be rateable for the whole palace; and the case of a gentleman going abroad, and leaving his house for the use of a friend, and asked whether the friend would be rateable. The same answer may be given to both the cases put; the party allowed to occupy would be rateable. Two or three cases in the opposite direction come near this. In Rex v. St. Mary the Less, Durham, (b) the appellant, who had a lathe in the house in question, and never resided there himself, but out of charity allowed a poor person to occupy the kitchen, was held to occupy by his lathe, and to be rateable for the whole house. But that case is not directly applicable, for it was not there held that the occupier of the kitchen was not rateable for his portion of the house: if he had been rated for the kitchen, and if it had been held that he ought not to have been, that case would then have been applicable. In the present case we have no doubt that the appellants have a beneficial and exclusive occupation, and that they are rateable." Patteson, J. "I had no doubt until the Attorney-General put it that, supposing the prerogative of the crown not to exempt it from rateability altogether, the crown would be rateable for the whole palace, because it is the owner of the whole, and occupies a part. But, upon consideration, I think that is not a sound argument. A person may be assessed to the poor-rate for part of a house; for the statute of Elizabeth, in directing the taxation of occupiers of houses, does not mean the occupiers of entire houses merely. Accordingly in Ayr v. Smallpeace (c), the comptroller of Chelsea College was held rateable for apartments, and in Rex v. St. Mary the Less, Durham, which has been commented on by my lord, it was not denied that the owner of the house was rateable for so much of the house as was occupied by himself. In a case of burglary

(a) It was agreed that the husband of the housekeeper was not rateable, and that the case should be argued with reference to the other persons included in the rate.

2. Who are Occupiers.

2. Who are Occupiers.

the question would be very different. A question might certainly arise in burglary, whether the apartments occupied by the appellants are their dwelling-houses; for in the case of Williams, (a) where the lodgings of Sir H. Hungate, at Whitehall, had been broken into, it was thought the indictment should be for breaking the king's mansion-house, called Whitehall. The king, however, then resided at Whitehall, so that it was certainly his dwelling-house. So in Rex v. Peyton, (b) which was an indictment for stealing in the dwelling-house of Mr. Bunbury, it appeared that the house in question was the Invalid Office, at Chelsea, that the ground-floor was used for the office of the Paymaster-General, and the whole of the upper part occupied by Mr. Bunbury, but that government paid the rent and taxes for the whole house. It was there held that the charge for stealing in the dwelling-house of Mr. Bunbury could not be sustained. But cases on the question of how the proprietorship of a dwelling-house should be laid in an indictment for burglary do not apply to establish the proposition, that different persons may not be charged to the poor, as occupiers of different parts of a house. The question here is, whether the appellants have not an exclusive occupation of the apartments for which they are rated. When they enter upon their occupation the keys of their apartments are delivered to them; they are to be inhabited by the family a part of every year, and when the family are absent a servant must be left in the occupation, or the keys delivered to the housekeeper. It is quite clear to me that the warrant assigns to each occupier the exclusive occupation of his apartments. The housekeeper may certainly enter them, if she thinks proper to do so, for the general care and superintendence of the palace, but that is merely a condition annexed to the holding, or is a reservation, which does not render the occupation otherwise than exclusive for the purposes of rating. Lord Bute's case is much stronger than the present, for the crown there had a joint occupation with him; as to the arable land, when it was sown with corn, Lord Bute furnished the seed, and, when it was sown with rye-grass or clover, the crown furnished the seed, and in either case the crown always furnished the labour necessary for cultivation." Williams, J. "I am of the same opinion. No doubt was raised as to one part of the case—it was not denied that the occupation is beneficial. Even if the appellants had been servants of the crown, for which supposition there is no pretence, it is clear from Rex v. Terrott (c) that any occupation, ultra that which is necessary to the performance of the service, would be considered a beneficial occupation, and would be the subject of rateability. With respect to the quantity of interest which the appellants have in their apartments, it is immaterial whether they have a permanent occupation or not; even if it be conceded, and it is a large concession, that their occupation was not permanent, they are still rateable. In Rex v. The Chelsea Waterworks Company, it was argued that there was no certain permanent or exclusive occupation. The court decided at once that the company were rateable in respect of the pipes laid down in the Green Park, and in respect of the reservoir, as to which part of the case the court took time to deliberate. Lord Denman, C. J., in delivering its judgment, observed, 'We are of opinion that the warrant gave to the company as much interest in the space where their reservoirs are made, as in that where their pipes are laid. It is impossible to distinguish the one from the other. Their interest, indeed, in the former is expressly, in the latter by implication, at will only; but a tenant at will is, until the will be determined, an occupier of the land.' 'They appear to us to have the exclusive right in a portion of the soil in both cases, though for a limited purpose only.' Conceding, therefore, that the appellants in this case were not permanent occupiers, there still remains the beneficial occupation of rateable property. Is then the palace to be deemed a place of royal residence? If it is, there is an end of the question. But no presumption of such a fact arises upon this case; but rather of the contrary. The housekeeper is the only servant of the crown who occupies any part of the palace, and she has the power of entering certain apartments, besides the state apartments, for the purpose of taking care of the palace. But her power of so entering them has merely the effect of diminishing the quantity of the interest enjoyed by the appellants, and they are not the less occupiers. Lord Bute's case is quite ad idem with the present case, or rather the present is an à fortiori case. It is quite right to concede that the housekeeper is not rateable."

(a) 1 Hale, P. C. 522.

(b) 1 Leach, 324.

(c) P. 167.

2. Who are Occupiers.

A master gunner appointed by the crown, and stated to be occupier of the king's battery-house, is rateable.

Rex v. Hurdis, 3 T. R. 497. The appellant objected to the rate because one Wood, gunner of the king's fort and battery at S., who was a servant to his Majesty, and not in his own right the occupier of the dwelling-house thereto belonging, and who therefore ought not to have been charged in the rate, was charged as the occupier of the battery-house. Wood was a gunner at the fort of S. The fort and battery-house are the property of the crown, and a master gunner is an officer appointed by the crown, and removable at pleasure. Wood being so employed, occupied the whole of the house, except one room; the furniture belonging to him. The inhabitants of the parish paying to the poor-rate have a right to vote in the election of members of parliament. Lord Kenyon. "I do not feel that my opinion upon this subject militates against any decided case, but I shall determine upon the ground of positive law, as it is laid down in the 43 Eliz., which subjects every occupier of lands, houses, &c., to be rated. Now it is expressly stated in the case, that Wood was the occupier of the battery-house; and though perhaps it might have been contended below that he was not the occupier, in the legal sense of the word, yet the finding of the sessions precludes that question here. It is not, however, a general position, that a servant of the crown occupying a house in respect of his office is not rateable for it. I was always rated for the house I had as Master of the Rolls. Soldiers, indeed, cannot be said to be the occupiers of their barracks, in the legal sense of the word; they are no more than mere servants. Therefore Wood was properly rated."

Soldiers are not occupiers in the legal sense of the word.

Stables rated by order of the crown for the use of a regiment, are not rateable, where the lessee himself does not occupy them on his own particular account.

Lord Amherst v. Lord Somers, 2 T. R. 372. By warrant under the king's sign-manual, a lease was entered into by Lord R. Bertie for himself and for the colonel of the said horse, for the stables, with one A., by which certain buildings were covenanted by A. to be built by him as stables, &c., for the use of a troop of the horse guards. Lord Amherst succeeded Lord R. Bertie, and had possession given him of the stables, &c., and the buildings were used always for the purposes of the troop, and never in any manner for the private benefit of Lord Amherst. The rent was paid by stoppages from the pay of the troop. By Ashhurst, J. "It is admitted that neither the possessions of the crown, nor of the public, are liable to be rated to the poor; and as this property falls within one or the other of these descriptions, it is not rateable to the poor." And by Buller, J. "In this case the plaintiff did not contract as general lessee, but merely for the benefit of the public, by order of the crown; and he made no use whatever of the stables. Therefore he cannot be considered as the occupier."

Officers supplied with accommodation not strictly necessary are rateable.

Rex v. Terrott, 3 East, 506. The appellant was an artillery officer, and had his quarters at a building fitted up at the expense of the crown. There were several apartments beyond what were necessary for the regimental business, and he resided in them with his family; the usual barrack furniture was provided by the crown. He was rated in respect of these apartments. By Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The principle of the subject is, that if the party have the use of the building, or other subject of the rate, as a mere servant of the crown, or of any public body, or in any other respect for the mere exercise of public duty therein, and have no beneficial occupation of or emolument resulting from it in any personal and private respect, then he is not rateable. The property of the crown in the beneficial occupation of a subject, whether he be a civil or a military officer of the crown, is equally rateable. But if the use of, or residence upon, the property, be either as the servant of the crown, and for public purposes only, or as a mere public officer or servant, such as the trustees of a meeting-house, the servants at St. Luke's, the Masters in Chancery in respect of their public offices, in all such cases, the parties having the use of the property merely for such purposes are not rateable; because the occupation is throughout that of the public, and of which public occupation the individuals are only the means and instruments. I am not aware that private soldiers have any accommodation in barracks beyond what are required for sleeping, eating, and the like; but if their barracks should supply them with any accommodation of a beneficial and valuable, and not strictly of a necessary nature, the analogy between the two cases would afford perhaps a ground for including them in the rate rather than for excluding an occupier of the present description from it." Rate confirmed.

The servant of a brewery occupying a house which he took of a third person, but for which the brewers paid the rent, is liable to be rated.

Reg v. Wall Lynn, 3 N. & P. 411, 8 A. & E. 379. This was an appeal against a rate for Sheffield. Rate confirmed. Case:—C. Eyre and H. Rawson are the proprietors of a brewery in Sheffield, and the appellant, Wall Lynn, is their servant and head brewer. From 1828, down to February, 1833, the appellant resided in a house situate in the brewery yard, under an agreement, dated the 1st of November, 1828, made between him and the said Hannah Rawson, and a copy of which is annexed to this case. In February, 1833, the health of the appellant being impaired, he removed from the house in the brewery yard to one with a garden attached to it, at Farm Bank, a quarter or half a mile from it, belonging to one E. W. Drury, who, upon the trial of the appeal, stated that he made the agreement with the appellant, and saw no one else upon the matter, and that the rent was 35*l.* per annum, but that he considered Rawson and Co. as his tenants. Upon the sale of the said house and garden by Drury to one George Rodgers, the same tenancy was continued. When the appellant removed from the house in the brewery yard to the house at Farm Bank, the furniture, which belonged to the proprietors of the brewery, was then removed to the house at Farm Bank, and another servant of Rawson and Co. was then put by them into the occupation of that house in the brewery yard, which up to that time had been occupied by the appellant. The appellant's salary was at the same time increased; the rent and rates were paid by Rawson and Co. at the brewery. The assessment for window duty for the house at Farm Bank was regularly made in the name of the appellant, from the time of his entering upon the house down to the trial of this appeal, and paid at the brewery without any objection to the form of assessment. The appellant had also been assessed to the poor's rate in every rate since his entry upon the house and garden at Farm Bank, in respect of those premises. An objection was made to the last rate but two before that appealed against, on the ground that Rawson and Co., and not the appellant, ought to have been rated, but the two last rates had been made in the same name as before, and they had been paid without objection. In 1833, the appellant was summoned for the payment of the registration shilling, under the provisions of the Reform Act, which he paid, together with the costs of the summons. In 1832 and 1833, when the name of the said appellant was inserted in the list of voters for the election of members of parliament for the borough of Sheffield, as the occupier of the house at Farm Bank, the appellant objected to his name being inserted in the list: no formal objection, however, had been made according to the Reform Act, and the name of the appellant remained upon the register. In 1834, the name of the appellant was again inserted in the list of borough voters; a regular objection was made to his name being inserted there, which was disallowed by the revising barrister, after hearing evidence on the subject, and the appellant's name was retained. At the election for borough members in January, 1836, the appellant tendered his vote, and on being asked whether he voted for the house in Shrewsbury Road, Farm Bank, replied that he did, and voted accordingly. The appellant, on the appeal, insisted that he lived in the house at Farm Bank as a servant only, and was not liable to be rated to the relief of the poor, but that Rawson and Co. ought to have been rated. Upon the appeal, Rawson and Co. appeared by counsel, and contended that they were the parties liable to be rated, and that the appellant occupied the premises as their servant only. The sessions decided that the appellant was liable to be rated as the occupier. By the agreement of 1st of November, 1828, after an undertaking by Wall Lynn to serve Rawson and her copartner in the capacity of a clerk and brewer, Rawson promised to pay

2. Who are Occupiers.

Lynn 150*l.* yearly, and to permit him to occupy and enjoy the house adjoining the buildings and brewery, as and for the place of his residence, free and clear of all rent, rates, and taxes; Bicks, another clerk in the said brewery, being also provided with board and lodging in the house, if required by Rawson, Bicks also paying the expenses of his board; which salary and house accommodation were to be in full satisfaction and compensation for all other perquisites of every description, and for any expenses incurred by him in the business. If either party should be desirous of determining the service, such party was to give three months' notice in writing. Lord Denman. "The case does not involve any doubtful doctrine. The appellant rents and occupies a house, and is rated to all the burdens consequent on such occupation. None of the cases cited come into question, for in all of them the tenement occupied was the property of the master. It would hardly be contended that the payment of rent and taxes by a master for a house occupied by his servant makes the occupation auxiliary to the service. The cases cited where the occupation has been held to bear this character, are the cases of a butler occupying a pantry, a coachman the offices, and similar cases, between which and the present there is no analogy." Littledale, J. "Wall Lynn was, without any doubt, in law the tenant of the person from whom he took the house. The house was also occupied by him as absolute owner, for his employers had no right whatever to put any one in, or any authority over his occupation. The mere payment of rent by them gave them no control over it, any more than any other gratuity to him which they might be pleased to allow." Patteson, J. "Our decision in this case does not touch any of the other cases on the subject. The appellant here is the actual tenant of the house, and his employers had nothing whatever to do with it. By the agreement they were to give him a house near the brewery, but if he left it they were under no obligation to find him another house." Williams, J. "In Rex v. Field, the matron of the Philanthropic Society had no distinct apartment in the house, except a bed-chamber; her services were required there at any moment, and she was dismissable on a month's notice." Order confirmed.

Premises in the parish of A., taken by the overseers of B., and used by them in the employment of the poor of B., are rateable to the relief of the poor of A.

The Governor of the Poor of Bristol v. Wait, 6 N. & M. 383; 5 A. & E. 1. Replevin.—Avowry by the defendants, as overseers of St. Philip and St. Jacob, Gloucester, under a distress for poor-rates made on the plaintiffs as occupiers of certain premises in the parish. The plaintiffs had taken certain premises out of the limits of the city of Bristol, and situate in St. Philip and St. Jacob, for the purpose of putting out their poor, either simply to lodge them, or to employ them, at their discretion. In some parts of the premises the poor had been employed in the manufacture of lace, which was a losing concern, and in other parts the poor had been merely lodged. One question was, whether the occupation contemplated by the act of 43 Eliz. was profitable; and if it was, whether that question could be raised in the court. Lord Denman, C. J., said, "We are quite clearly of opinion that the question, whether the occupier actually made a profit, cannot be raised;" and afterwards Lord Denman C. J., delivered the judgment. "The material question is, whether the goods had been properly taken under a distress for a poor-rate; or, in other words, whether the plaintiffs were the occupiers of rateable property. It appeared that the plaintiffs (being governors of the poor of the city of Bristol) had taken certain property out of the limits of the city and within the parish of St. Philip and St. Jacob, for the purpose of putting out their poor, either simply to lodge them, or to employ them, at their discretion. In some part of the property (houses and buildings) the poor had been employed in a manufacture which was stated to have been a losing concern, and in other parts they had been merely lodged. This property would have been rateable unless the kind of occupation in this particular case exempted it. It therefore became a question, whether the managers of the poor (whether governors, as in this instance, or overseers ordinarily) renting rateable property out of the limits of their district, city, parish, township, or place, are exempt from rateability, because such property is applied solely to the purpose of disposing of their own poor, with which, upon the statement already made, the place in which the property is situated has no concern. Upon this question we were referred to and pressed by the cases well known, and so often referred to, of property held merely for public purposes, as stables taken by the colonel of a regiment for the use of that regiment, Lord Amherst v. Lord Sommers; (a) of property devoted to charitable purposes, as apartments held by the matron of the Philanthropic Society, merely to superintend the children, Rex v. Field, 5 T. R. 587; or the like in the case of the superintendant of St. Luke's, Rex v. St. Luke's Hospital, (b) in each of which instances there was no occupation beyond the public purpose in the former, and the charitable in the latter; with respect to which cases it is enough to say, that we agree fully and without hesitation to the principle and authority of them all; observing at the same time, that as soon as any independent occupation for private advantage is discoverable, rateability immediately attaches. The case of the commanding officer of barracks, Rex v. Terrott, (c) furnishes a full illustration and confirmation of the latter remark. The absence of 'beneficial occupation' was also much insisted upon, and it was contended that that is the true criterion to ascertain whether property be rateable or not. It is not to be denied that this phrase 'beneficial occupation' has been in frequent use, and, generally speaking, it serves tolerably well to convey rather a popular notion than to give a certain rule for deciding the question of rateability in every instance; because, if by 'beneficial' be meant profitable, or any thing like it, the expression is obviously fallacious. And upon this point all discussion is superfluous, because the case of an unprofitable and losing occupation (expressly so found) of a coal mine, has been held not a case of exemption from rateability,—a coal mine, by the words of the statute of Elizabeth, being subject to a rate. Without affecting the precision of an exact definition, it would probably be nearer the truth to say, that the presumptive liability arising from occupation is to be explained away in each case. Why is the coachman living in apartments by permission of his master not rateable, according to Lord Kenyon in the case of Rex v. Field? It is his master's occupation. Why were not the matron and the superintendant, in the cases above referred to, rateable for the apartments they occupied? Because, as they had no more than was necessary to carry into effect the object of the establishment in each instance, to rate them would in reality be to rate the charity children in the one case and the lunatics in the other. It cannot be said that no benefit is derived. By the occupation of the portion of the building in each of the cases alluded to, the expense of a house or lodging elsewhere is saved. But, moreover, the question here does not arise upon a rate imposed by the managers of the poor of Bristol, upon premises occupied by their own poor within their own city. On the contrary, the rate in question was imposed by foreign overseers upon property situated in their own parish, and which, in the hands of an ordinary individual, would clearly be rateable to the relief of their poor. How does it concern the overseers and rate-payers of the parish of St. Philip and St. Jacob, in what manner any person or persons manage the property taken and held in that parish? Suppose the governors of the poor of Bristol to have taken 100 acres of land, and to have brought such of their paupers as were capable of labour from a poor-house in Bristol, to employ them upon the land, as a beneficial mode, according to their opinion, of disposing of the poor:—suppose also that the return, whatever it might be, was applied solely towards the maintenance of the poor who had laboured upon the farm, or of those who were unfit for labour and had been left behind,—how can this constitute a better claim to exemption from rateability in the parish where the property lies than a losing occupation, which it is quite certain does not affect the question of liability? The same rule must of course apply to every species of property. We are, therefore, upon the whole of opinion that the buildings so held by the plaintiffs were rateable, and that a verdict be entered for the defendants."

2. Who are Occupiers.

2. Who are Occupiers.

Reg. v. Wallingford Union 2 P. & D. 226. This was an appeal against a rate for the parish of St. Mary the More. Rate confirmed. Case:—The respondent parish is part of the Wallingford Union formed under the provisions of the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, and the appellants are the guardians. The property in respect of which they are rated consists of the workhouse of the union, together with two acres of ground used as a garden to the workhouse, and adjoining the same, but not being a distinct property. Previous to the formation of the said union the respondent parish, together with the parishes of St. Peter and St. Leonard, in the borough of Wallingford, were jointly possessed of a workhouse for the reception of paupers of the three united parishes, on the site of which the said union workhouse has been erected. After the formation of the Wallingford Union the old union of the united parishes was declared void by the Poor Law Commissioners, and the old workhouse belonging to the three united parishes was, with the concurrence of the commissioners, and in pursuance of the statutes relating thereto, sold to the guardians of the Wallingford Union. A piece of ground containing about two acres, adjacent to the workhouse, was also purchased by the guardians for 190*l.* 10*s.*, and conveyed to them. The union workhouse was erected partly on the ground belonging to the old workhouse, and partly on a portion of the two acres, by the said guardians, at the cost of 5150*l.* The old workhouse was not rated to the poor, but the two acres were so rated before the union, but the produce thereof is now applied to the maintenance of the pauper inmates. The union workhouse is situate in the respondent parish, and is applied solely to the reception and maintenance of the poor of the union, including therein as well poor persons falling sick or otherwise becoming destitute in the union, although not settled therein, as the settled inhabitants of the union. In addition to the apartments occupied by poor persons and appropriated solely to their use, the building contains apartments occupied by the master and matron; but such apartments are necessary for the purposes of the union to carry on the work of, and to superintend the paupers. The workhouse also contains a board-room, where the guardians meet once in every week to transact the business of the union, and which board-room is used solely for that purpose. The workhouse contains a mill affixed to the freehold, whereat the pauper inmates are employed to grind flour for hire, but only four men can work at the said mill at a time; and all the money so earned is solely applied in discharge of the expenses of the workhouse and the maintenance of the paupers. A piece of garden ground is attached to the workhouse, and cultivated by the paupers who are inmates of the house, but the produce of the garden is consumed by the pauper inmates. The occupiers are described in the rate as "Board of Guardians of Wallingford Union." The name of the owner is described in the said rate, viz. "Parishes comprising the Union." The premises intended to be rated are described in the rate, viz. "Union Workhouse, Board Room, Officers' Apartments, Yard, Garden, and Premises." The question for the court is, whether the union workhouse or any of the premises were liable to be rated. Lord Denman, C. J. delivered the judgment: "The question is, whether a workhouse, situate in one of many parishes which have been formed into a union is rateable, in the hands of the guardians, towards the relief of the poor of the parish in which it is. To show that it is not so rateable the class of cases was referred to in which the court has held property exempt from rating by reason of its being wholly unproductive to the occupiers, commencing with the Salter's Load Sluice case, (a) and ending with the late decision in favour of the corporation of Liverpool. The great leading principle of these cases I take to be this—that when that person who must be deemed the actual occupier is merely a trustee for others, and is prevented by the law from deriving any benefit whatever from the occupation, that person cannot be considered as the occupier for the purpose of being rated: the act of Elizabeth plainly supposing both control over the property and the power of enjoying it. Thus in the Salter's Load Sluice case, where tolls were to be applied for the several purposes of the act, and for no other whatever, Lord Kenyon said, 'Here is property which is the subject of the rate, but no occupier of it.' The Liverpool case (a) may be considered as the same with that just cited, which it expressly follows, and the Weaver Navigation case, (b) in the same volume, agrees with them entirely. Rex v. Sculcoates (c) fully acknowledges the principle, on which also we lately decided; Reg. v. Beverley Gas Works, (d) and the very important case of Reg. v. The Corporation of Liverpool. (e) Under the circumstances which appeared on all these occasions, there is no impropriety in saying that the public was the occupier, made such by act of parliament, and receiving by the same authority all the profits of the property, while those who would otherwise have been the occupiers are in the situation of public servants, receivers, and managers for the public benefit, without any interest of their own. So it was argued here—the workhouse is hired by the guardians under authority of the late statute for the public purpose of maintaining the poor, and with no private advantage to the occupiers. But though the maintenance of the poor be a public purpose, the maintenance of the poor of this particular district is a burden on that district alone. The occupation is not beneficial to the guardians individually, but the most advantageous mode of relieving their poor is an advantage to that body. We decided accordingly, in The Governors of the Poor of Bristol v. Wait, which can only be distinguished from the case before us by the local situation of this property, which is within one of the parishes composing the union. But one parish is not more a separate body from another than the parish of St. Mary the More in Wallingford is from the union which annexes it to twenty-eight other parishes. It is not necessary to make any observation on the intermediate cases of property voluntarily appropriated to religious and charitable purposes. We decide on the ground that this property, not being devoted to a public purpose, and being beneficially occupied, is subject to the poor-rate." Order of sessions confirmed.

(a) P. 175.

2. Who are Occupiers.

The treasurer of the London Missionary Society is not rateable for the house taken by the society, no person deriving any profit from the occupation.

Reg. v. Wilson, 4 P. & D. 130; 12 A & E. 94. The appellant was assessed in St. Botolph. Rate confirmed. Case:—The rate was made under the authority of an act, 35 Geo. III. c. 61, which by the 16th section enacted, that the rector, churchwardens, overseers of the poor, and inhabitants of the said parish, shall make such rate for the relief of the poor, upon every person who shall inhabit, hold, occupy, possess or enjoy any land, house, shop, warehouse, coachhouse, stable, cellar, vault, or any other building, tenement, or hereditaments within the said parish, and on every other person who by law is liable to be assessed towards the relief of the poor, as they shall think necessary and proper to be rated. The appellant, at the time when he was assessed to the said poor-rate, was and still is the honorary treasurer of the London Missionary Society, which was founded entirely for religious and charitable purposes, and is wholly supported by voluntary and charitable contributions. The premises, in respect of which the society are assessed, are situate in the parish of St. Botolph, and consist of a building erected at the expense of the society, and by them occupied merely for conducting the affairs of the institution, under an agreement for a building lease from the corporation of London. (a) The building comprises various apartments, namely, a board-room, in which the board of management and subscribers to the society are accustomed to assemble, a secretary's room, a museum, several clerks' offices, and several store-rooms, in which various articles intended for exportation in furtherance of the society's objects are deposited. No person has ever slept upon any part of the premises. The clerks and officers of the establishment attend during a portion of the day only, and leave the premises in the evening, locking them up and taking the keys away with them. The appellant attends on the premises about one day in a week, for a few hours only, in his capacity of treasurer, and for the purpose of superintending the society's affairs, which are there carried on by the society's clerks. He receives no remuneration from the society, but on the contrary contributes largely to their funds, nor does he or any other person connected with the society derive any pecuniary profits or personal emolument in any way from their occupation of the premises; the clerks, who receive salaries, being mere servants of the society, who are paid as such for their daily services performed on the premises. Neither the appellant nor any other person connected with the society, and occupying their premises as above described, was at the time the said poor-rate was made, or now is, resident within the parish of St. Botolph, or possessed of or in any manner interested in any property situate within that parish, except as above mentioned. Lord Denman. "There were two cases (a) argued during the present term, in which the defendant was rated to the poor, and to a rate raised under a local act for certain purposes connected with the church, in respect to the occupation of a house devoted entirely to charitable and religious purposes, that is, to the uses of the London Missionary Society. It was argued that, though the sessions had found that general fact, the charity being evidently all administered in foreign parts, was not such as our law could recognise. But, supposing this to be so, we think this appellant is protected from liability to a poor-rate by the authority of those decisions which require it to be imposed on the beneficial occupier. Here is neither benefit nor occupation, according to the language of those cases, and particularly the case of Rex v. Waldo, which has frequently been recognised, and is in its circumstances extremely like the present. The order of sessions must therefore be quashed.

(a) A copy of which was annexed. See it at length, 12 A. & E. 96.

2. Who are Occupiers.

A person who builds an almshouse is not rateable, if no profit be made of it.

Rex v. S. Waldo, 1 Bott, 182; Cald. 338. Mr. Waldo, about six years before, pulled down a house, for which he was rated to the poor at eight guineas a year, and built on the same spot a new one, in which ten poor girls were educated, maintained, and brought up on his charity; he provided a woman to superintend and instruct them. She and the ten girls were the only inhabitants, and the house was solely appropriated for this purpose; Mr. W. was rated for this house. Lord Mansfield, C. J., after some angry expressions, said, "Mr. W. makes no profit of this building; and it is sufficient that this is so in fact, and the profit is in fact here applied to public and charitable uses."

Poor persons under a charitable trust occupying almshouses and land, are rateable.

Rex v. Munday, 1 East, 583. The appellants were poor persons appointed under a charitable deed to certain almshouses and privileges therein mentioned. In 7 Eliz. Lord Rich founded a corporation in Felsted, called Chaplains, Parochians, and Wardens of Felsted, and granted to them a messuage, twenty acres of land, and four acres of wood in the parish. He appointed the messuage to be used for an almshouse for poor and infirm persons, to be placed there by him and his heirs for life, subject to removal for misbehaviour. They were to occupy the almshouse, and such lodgings therein as the patron should appoint, and to have the kitchen, cellars, barns, &c., and all profits and commodities to the said house belonging. And the said chaplain, &c., were to permit them to have and occupy and use the land and wood, and to take fuel from it, and to lop the trees, and fence the wood. He also gave six good kine to be kept on the land for their relief, of which they were to sell one yearly and bring up one calf. At the time of the rate the poor persons were the occupiers of the messuage and the land and wood, and they paid for making the hay and cutting their wood, and disposed of the same for their own use. They kept six cows, reared one calf annually, and sold one cow, and the other calves and the milk they disposed of at their pleasure. Previous to their appointment, they were not parishioners of Felsted. The premises were not rated before, and the visitor frequently granted them additional relief. Lord

(a) The other rate stands upon different ground. It is made under an act for extinguishing tithes in St. Botolph. That act gives the rector a regular stipend in lieu of tithes; and for raising that sum directs that the vestry shall once a-year make a rate upon all persons inhabitants and occupiers of land, tenements, or hereditaments and premises within the parish, except the rector. The defendant in this case represents the London Missionary Society, who are unquestionably the occupiers of premises within the parish, and come directly within the words and meaning of the act in question. The cases respecting beneficial occupation with regard to poor-rates do not apply to this act.

2. Who are Occupiers.

Kenyon. "The words of the 43 Eliz. are general. There is no exception made of hospital or other lands devoted to charitable purposes; and, in comparing that statute with the land-tax acts, it seems that where the legislature intended to exempt property of this description, they have done so in the latter by express words. The property comes within the description of rateable property, and the only question is, whether these persons can be said to be occupiers of it for their own benefit. They plough, sow, reap, and have every sort of occupation in fact which any other person can have, and all this for their own benefit. If this be not an occupation under the statute, I do not know how far the exemption claimed may extend. Surely the smallness of the benefit cannot constitute an exemption. Suppose an hospital endowed with lands for a certain number of persons who have a provision there; at first, perhaps, it might have afforded a small pittance to each member. Shall it be said that they were not rateable then, and would only become so when the revenues increased?—where is the line to be drawn? But supposing that at times it afforded an income of 70 or 80 pounds a year to each individual: shall it be said that they are not bound to contribute anything because they derive that benefit from a charitable institution? Then it is said, that cases have decided that property of this kind is not rateable, because no occupier could be found; but no case has decided that where persons are found in the actual occupation, and having a beneficial enjoyment of it, they are not within the statute."

The master of a free school is rateable.

Rex v. Catt, 6 T. R. 332. This was an appeal against the rate, on account of the omission of Rev. T. Dyce. Rate confirmed. Case:—Mr. Dyce occupied a house and garden of the value of 10*l.*, which he held as master of a free school in the parish, by the appointment of the minister and inhabitants of the parish, under an indenture of the 2nd September, 1662, by which the house, &c. were assigned for the habitation of the master, and for the use of him and his family, freely, without payment of any rent for the same, together with two and a half acres of pasture land, called Willard's Charity in the same parish; and also certain rent-charges on lands in different parishes, for the teaching of ten boys, sons of the meaner inhabitants of the parish. Dyce became the master in 1775. No rates have ever been paid for the house and garden. Dyce let the pasture for which the occupiers are rated. In support of the rate, Rex v. Waldo, and Rex v. Scott, 3 T. R. 606, were cited. In limitation an exemption in a private statute of lands given for charitable purposes, free from all public taxes, &c. was held to extend to the poor-rate. Lord Kenyon said, "To the authority of the cases cited I subscribe my assent. They proceeded on the grounds that there was no occupier. In Rex v. Waldo, (ante,) the rate was held to be bad, because there was no occupier; the poor children who were placed there for education could not be considered as occupiers, neither could the women-servants who superintended them. That case could not be distinguished from that of St. Luke's Hospital, where the rate was also quashed, because there was no beneficial occupier. But when a case arises where a person is found to be the beneficial occupier of a house, he must be rated, though the house be appropriated to charitable purposes. As long as Richmond Park continued in the hands of the king, it was not rateable; but when the ranger made profits of it, and beneficially occupied it, it was held to be rateable in his hands. So, if this person had been put in merely to look after the pupils, and had not occupied the house, he would not have been rateable; but it appears that he is the beneficial occupier of this house and garden. By the old land-tax act, certain property given for charitable purposes is exempted from that tax; but there is no such exemption in the acts respecting the relief of the poor. If the argument against the rate were to prevail, I do not know how far it might be extended. Those lands that are appropriated for the establishment of the religion of the country are in one sense of the word lands given for charitable purposes; but parsonage-houses, glebe lands, &c., are rateable as the lands of the occupier. It is properly admitted that there cannot be a prescription against a poor-rate. If every individual in the parish had agreed not to take advantage of the omission of this person from the rate, perhaps no one could afterwards have objected to it; but that is not the case. The persons who made the rate seem to have acted honourably as far as respected themselves; but if there be any individual in the parish who objects to the omission of the defendant, the objection must prevail. This is not like Rex v. Scott, where it was held that the master of the school was exempted under an act of parliament, by which the legislature has a right to bind every person; for this defendant was appointed by deed, and only those who are parties to a deed are bound by it." The other judges concurred. Order quashed.

Property in hands of the king not rateable.

No prescription against poor-rate.

2. Who are Occupiers.

Poor widows occupying almshouses are rateable.

Rex v. Green, 9 B. & C. 203; 4 Man. & R. 164, S. C. An appeal against a poor-rate confirmed. Case:—The Merchant Tailors Company are patrons of a charitable establishment for the relief of the widows of poor freemen of the company. About three years ago, the company purchased land in the parish of Lee, whereon they erected almshouses for such poor widows. The appellants are poor women resident in the almshouses as alms-women and objects of the charitable establishment, and pay no rent for the same, and are removable at pleasure. The almshouses were erected at the sole expense of the company, upon the freehold property of the company. Before the purchase of the land the same was rated on the occupier at the rate of 2*l.* 5*s.* per annum. The question was, whether the appellants were liable to be rated? Bayley, J. "I have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that this property is rateable. The 43 Eliz. c. 2, enacts, 'that the rate shall be imposed upon every occupier of lands, houses, &c.' It has been made a question in several cases, whether a person residing in a house used for charitable purposes is liable to contribute to the relief of the poor. In Rex v. Catt, (a) it was decided that the master of a free school was rateable;" and, after referring to that case, at length added, "In Rex v. Munday, (b) the objects of a charitable foundation, in the actual occupation of an almshouse, were held to be rateable. That case is not distinguished from the present in point of principle. There they were rated for the almshouse and lands in the sum of 2*l.* 5*s.*, and the court held that they were rateable for the house and lands; they must, therefore, have been considered as occupying that house rent-free. It is true, that in this case the objects of the charity are described as poor persons, but there is no distinction in the statute between poor persons and others. If they are occupiers of property from which they derive a benefit, they are rateable. Mr. Nolan, p.188, after stating the authorities upon this subject, says 'The distinction, therefore, as to where charities are rateable, and where they are not so, seems to depend upon this: whether there is anybody who can be rated as beneficial occupier.' There was therefore no ground for the appeal." Littledale and Parke, J., concurred. Order confirmed.

(a) P. 174.

(b) P. 173.

Where profits are applicable to public purposes they are not rateable.

Rex v. Commissioners of Salter's Load Sluice, 4 T. R. 730. (a) The defendants were commissioners for improving the navigation of the Neve, and certain tolls were payable at Salter's Sluice from the persons carrying goods there. They were assessed for the tolls of the sluice, which, by the act, were "to be applied for the several purposes of the said act, and for no other whatever." Per Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is not sufficient to point out property within the parish, but there must also be some person in the beneficial occupation of it. I say person, because corporations may unquestionably be rated, though it was once thrown out, by Yates, J., that they could not. Now, in the present case there is property which is the subject of a rate, but there is no occupier of it. The trustees have a bare naked trust, not coupled with any interest. If any interest resulted either to the commissioners or owners of adjoining land, after the public purposes of the act were answered, these tolls might have been rated; but all the money collected under the act must be expended for the purposes of the act; and, therefore, upon the ground upon which the court proceeded in Rex v. St. Luke's Hospital, namely, that there were no occupier, these commissioners are not liable to be rated. This case is distinguishable from the others, on the ground that the commissioners are mere trustees to superintend the execution of this act, without any personal advantage. In the Hull case owners of shares received great profits. In the Hampton Court case there was a surplus value belonging to the Corporation of London, which was rateable on their lands."

Dock dues, if expended pursuant to the act, entirely in making and keeping the docks, &c., in repair, are not rateable.

Rex v. Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61; 9 D. & R. 780, S.C. This was a rate on the trustees of the docks of Liverpool. Case:—The dock estates within the parish of Liverpool are vested in the mayor, aldermen, bailiffs, and common council of Liverpool, as trustees of the docks and harbour of Liverpool, by virtue of several acts of parliament, (viz. 8 Anne, c. 12, 3 Geo. I. and 11 Geo. II. c. 32, 2 Geo. III. c. 86, 25 Geo. III. c. 15, 39 Geo. III. c. 59, and 51 Geo. III. c. 143, all of which, excepting the second, are public acts,) and consist of a large quantity of land, to the extent of 100 acres. Part of those estates was granted voluntarily by the corporation of Liverpool, part was sold by that body to the trustees for a pecuniary consideration, and other parts have been purchased by the trustees from private individuals, according to the powers given to them by the said acts. Before the construction of the present works part of the land was waste, both above and below high-water mark, but other parts consisted of lands and buildings in the occupation of individuals who were rated. The dock estates at present consist of several wet docks, in which vessels may be constantly afloat, dry basins, that is to say, dry at low water, wharfs, piers, slips, cranes, weighing machines, offices, and yards for storing goods, and other conveniences requisite to form a complete dock; and the trustees are authorised by these acts to receive large sums, under the name of dock-rates and duties, for the accommodation of vessels in the docks. The trustees manage the dock estates by their servants and agents, who receive and account to them for the dues and profits; and no part of the estates and premises above assessed is let off to other persons. By 8 Anne the dues were to be applied to the building the docks, &c., and to the securing, preserving, and maintaining the dock and harbour, and to no other use or purpose whatever. These dues are now regulated by the 51 Geo. III., which enacts that they shall be applied, among other things, to the discharge of the present bond debt of 114,705*l.*, and the debt of 67,406*l.* owing by the trustess to the corporation for the purchase of the land, and the surplus to the maintenance of the harbour. The duties have been applied as the act directs, and the trustees derive no private advantage or emolument from the execution of the trusts. The engine-house is used for the purpose of keeping a fire-engine, which the trustees have provided out of the public funds for the security of the shipping, as empowered by the statute, and no rent is charged to or paid by any one for the same. Of the different offices enumerated in the schedule some are for the accommodation of the dock-masters and gate-men at the various docks, as places of shelter, and merely for the despatch of public business; others are occupied by the collector of the dock-rates, the harbour-master, and other public officers of the trustees, solely for the purposes of the dock business. No rent is charged to them for the use of these offices, and no part of them is occupied as a residence by any one. The two yards mentioned in the schedule are hired by the trustees at an annual rent, as a place necessary for the deposit of the various articles used in the erection and maintenance of the docks, and from the occupation of which they derive no personal benefit. Lord Tenterden. "It seems to me that there is no solid ground for the distinction which has been taken as to those parts of the property rated, which are rented by the dock company; for if there be no beneficial occupation, it can make no difference whether the occupier be the owner or not. As to the main question, Rex v. The Commissioners of Salter's Load Sluice is decisive. There the tolls were by act of parliament directed to be applied 'to the purposes of the act, and to and for no other use or purpose whatsoever.' The statute under which the dock-rates in question are levied does not indeed contain an express direction that the rates shall be applied to the purposes specified, and no other; but it directs that certain burdens shall be discharged, and that then the rates shall be lowered; and, therefore, any application of those rates to other purposes not specified would be a direct violation of the statute. Nothing of that kind is suggested, and, therefore, there is not, in reality, any difference between this case and the former. The principle of not rating property of which no person has a beneficial occupation, is not confined to canals or docks, or property of that nature. A quakers' meeting-house, if the pews are not let, is not rateable, as was decided in Rex v. Woodward (ante; as to Chapels, &c. see 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 30, post); and the same would be applicable to a chapel with the rites of the Church of England, or to a dissenting meeting-house. On the other hand, it was held in Rex v. Agar (ante), that when the pews of such a meeting-house were let, the trustees were rateable in respect of the rents, although not received to their own use, but for the benefit of the minister. Here the trustees were not occupiers in the ordinary sense of the word, and no profit was received for the use of any person. It is said that the docks were made by the corporation of Liverpool, in order to improve their private property; if such an effect is produced, that property will be rateable for the improved value." Bayley and Littledale, Js., concurred.

The Justices of the county are not rateable for the assize hall and other public buildings used by the judges of assize and justices at sessions.

Reg. v. Just. Worcestershire, 3 P. & D. 8; 11 A. & E. 57. In an appeal by the justices of the county, to the quarter sessions of the county, against a poor-rate, the rate was confirmed. Case:—For years prior to 1804, a mansion-house, with some land in St. Nicholas, Worcester, had been rated. The mansion-house and land had been purchased in 1834, on behalf of the county of Worcester, for county purposes. The house had been taken down, under a local act for erecting a county hall and courts of justice, and also for providing accommodation for his Majesty's justices of assize. A county hall and courts and judges' lodgings, had been erected upon the land in 1837. By this act the justices were authorised to purchase land, and erect thereon a county hall, courts of justice, offices, and lodgings for the justices of assize, and also to furnish the same. And by the said act, the buildings, furniture, &c. were vested in "the justices of the peace for the county of Worcester for the time being," upon trust, to permit courts to be holden therein, and for the accommodation of the justices of assize; purposes for which the same might respectively be designed. The justices were empowered to bring actions and prosecute indictments in respect of these buildings and furniture in the name of the clerk of the peace. The building was to be supported and furnished by the county, and the magistrates were authorised to appoint a person to take care of it at a salary. They were allowed to let the building when not used for county purposes, and to take from the sheriff such a sum for the use of the judges' lodging at each assize, as had theretofore been allowed or should thereafter be allowed by or out of the exchequer to the sheriff for providing such lodgings. The county hall and courts are under one roof. The courts are used at the county assizes and sessions for the trial of causes, prisoners, appeals, &c. There are also within the same building a grand jury room, a room for the clerk of indictments, two rooms for holding the county records, with other rooms for the accommodation of the judges, magistrates, and counsel at the assizes and sessions. The hall is used for county meetings, and is also occasionally used as a ball-room, and is at the command of the county for county meetings, either of business or pleasure, for which it may be required, such as the nomination of knights of the shire to serve in parliament, elections of county coroners, and for taking the poll at any election, &c. At the back of the courts, under a separate roof, but communicating with the courts by covered passages, is a house called the Judges' Lodgings, erected under the powers of the said act, for the use of the judges and their suite during the assizes, and the magistrates during the sessions, and containing many sleeping and other apartments employed for the purposes aforesaid by the judges and magistrates. The whole of the buildings and furniture have been paid for out of the county rates. A quantity of plate and wine, the former paid for by the county, and the latter by subscription amongst the magistrates, is kept in this part of the building; the plate is used by the judges at the assizes, and the magistrates at sessions. The wine is exclusively for the use of the magistrates at the sessions' dinners. They also furnish themselves with their own provisions, but nothing is paid by them to the county for the use of the house and furniture. The judges' lodgings are at all times occupied by and are under the care of a man and his wife, who are called the hall-keeper and the housekeeper, who are paid a salary, and have the care of the whole building, both courts and lodgings; they have no child, and have no accommodation beyond what is necessary to enable them to discharge the duties of their stations. The house has not yet been let, nor is such letting contemplated, but the county treasurer has received from the sheriff 140*l.* for the use of the lodgings by the judges during the assizes of 1838, and the same yearly sum, or whatever the sum may be, which is allowed the sheriff by the Court of Exchequer, will be demanded in future. There are nine bedrooms in the house, besides servants' apartments, and at the sessions these nine bedrooms are occupied by the magistrates, those having the preference who give previous notice to the hall-keeper. Prior to the house being built, the magistrates who attended the quarter sessions always slept at inns at their own expense. The whole of the premises were rated in the following form:—"The justices of the peace for the county of Worcester, for the time being, for judges' lodgings situate in Foregate-street; gross estimate rental 140*l.*, rateable value 119*l.*, amount of rate 2*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*" Lord Denman, C. J. "I am of opinion that this property is not rateable; the justices at large cannot be said to have any beneficial interest in it, and what is done by a few of them for their own convenience cannot make a rate valid on the whole body, who only hold the premises for public purposes." Patteson, J. "It is only by the local act that these justices possess anything like a corporate character. Their duties are prescribed to them in that statute in express terms, and these buildings are appropriated to certain specified purposes. If these individual justices choose to use the building for their own private convenience, how can it be said that this makes the whole body liable?" Williams, J. "The question has been well put on both sides. It is said, on the one hand, that the justices enjoy a beneficial interest in the premises ultrà the public uses to which the building is dedicated; on the other, that no benefit accrues to the justices at large, but only to a few individuals of the body. The latter proposition is clearly made out, and therefore it disposes of the case." Coleridge, J. "The legal estate in these premises is in the justices of the county, but the beneficial occupation is only in those justices who subscribe to the wine fund and attend at the sessions. It is impossible, therefore, to hold that the whole body are rateable." Order of sessions quashed.

The governor of a house of correction not rateable, nor the matrons and turnkeys, nor the justices.

Reg. v. Shepherd, 4 P. & D. 534; 1 Q. B. 170. On appeal by E. Shepherd, keeper of the house of correction at Wakefield, against a poor-rate, the sessions amended the rate, by substituting the West Riding justices in the place of John Tolson and of all persons named in the rate, as occupiers of houses, &c. within the said house of correction, except E. Shepherd, and in all other respects confirmed the rate. The magistrates of the West Riding were assessed in the rate as occupiers of a corn-mill, tread-mill rooms, work rooms, and warehouse, which are within and form part of the house of correction. The tread-mill, which is of 7½ horse-power, is annexed to the corn-mill, and both have been erected and are maintained for the purpose of employing the prisoners, and corn is ground there by them; part of it is ground there for hire, and produces 5*l.* or 10*l.* per year in money, but the greater part is ground for the use of the jail, and is consumed within it. In like manner the work-rooms and warehouses are used exclusively for the prisoners to work in. They make clothing there, and do all the blacksmith's work, joiner's work, bricklayer's work, and washing required for the jail. They also pick wool and oakum there for hire, and the women wash and sew for hire. The money earned amounts to about 480*l.* a year, and is paid over to the treasurer of the Riding, and goes in diminution of the expenses of the establishment. The expenditure over and above these earnings amounts to 5000*l.* a year, or thereabouts. There are within the jail from time to time prisoners from the boroughs of Leeds and Doncaster. These boroughs, having no convenient prison of their own, pay the magistrates for the maintenance of their respective prisoners. The boroughs are respectively charged with the cost price of such maintenance, and the earnings of their respective prisoners are deducted from the amount the boroughs would otherwise have to pay for it. E. Shepherd is the governor of the house, and the house and garden for which he is assessed are within and parcel of the house of correction. The house consists of ten apartments, nine of which are in the occupation of Mr. Shepherd, the tenth is used as a committee-room for the magistrates. The house is in the centre of the jail, and built on the panopticon principle, so as to be suitable for the occupation of the governor: as such, he is obliged by the rules to live always within the walls, and the accommodation provided for him is such only as and no more than is necessary for his convenient accommodation. The garden is rather more than half an acre in extent; it contains fruit, flowers, and a greenhouse, and is chiefly used, the magistrates permitting it, by the governor; but it is not specially appropriated to his use, the object of such an area being the health of the prisoners, to which it is not only conducive but essential. This garden was used by the jailer solely as a pleasure-garden for his family. The several other persons, whose names are struck out, and in whose stead the magistrates of the West Riding are substituted, are matrons and turnkeys of the prison. By the rules of the prison these persons are obliged always to sleep within its walls, and it is absolutely necessary for the safety and good conduct of the establishment, that they should do so. They occupy dwellings within the walls, and distinct from those of the governor. The accommodation they enjoy is provided for them by the Riding, and is no more than is necessary and convenient for the purposes for which they are placed there. The questions are, whether Shepherd, as such governor, was liable to be rated; whether the other persons, whose names were inserted in the rate as it originally stood, but struck out by the sessions, were liable to be rated; and whether the magistrates are liable to be rated for the corn-mill, tread-wheel rooms and ten-horse power, work-rooms, warehouses, porter's lodge, dwelling houses, and other premises, or any part thereof. Lord Denman, C. J. "I think these persons are clearly not rateable. They are compelled to reside in the jail; it is their duty to do so, and it is found by the case that the accommodation provided is not greater than is necessary to enable them to reside and perform the duties for which they are placed there." Littledale and Patteson, Js., concurred. Coleridge, J. "This case is very different from that of The Governors of the Bristol Poor v. Wait," (5 A. & E. 1.)

2. Who are Occupiers.

When the surplus tolls of a navigation were directed by statute to be expended in repairing public bridges and highways, it was held that they were not rateable to the poor.

Rex v. The River Weaver Navigation, 7 B. & C. 70; 9 D. & R. 788, S. C. Rate in Moulton upon the trustees of the river Weaver Navigation confirmed. Case:—By 7 Geo. I., for making the river Weaver navigable, it was enacted, that after the work shall be finished, and the charges paid, the clear produce of the rates and duties shall be employed towards repairing the public bridges within the county of Chester, and such other public charges upon the county as the justices at quarter sessions shall direct. If any surplus remained, it should be expended in repairing certain highways. The tonnage rates upon the Weaver are not charged by the mile, but one shilling per ton is charged upon the whole line of river; and a vessel navigating the whole, or any part of the said navigation, is subject to the same charge. This tonnage is paid quarterly at the Navigation Office at Northwich, which is a distinct township from Moulton. The annual accounts are regularly audited by the clerk of the peace, and filed at the sessions, when the balance, arising from the rates above the necessary charges for the maintenance of the navigation, is by direction of the magistrates paid to the county treasurer, for the general purposes of the county, and to none others. Bayley, J., said, "We think that as there is not any clause in the statutes set out, which vests the soil of the river Weaver in the trustees, they cannot be rateable to the relief of the poor in respect of the tolls." It was then suggested that the trustees were rated in several parishes through which the river Weaver runs, and that in some of them they might be considered as the occupiers of land; it was therefore important to have the opinion of the court as to their liability to be rated under such circumstances. Upon this point the court deferred their judgment until Rex v. Liverpool (ante, 127), had been decided, upon which occasion Bayley, J., said, " The principle of this decision is applicable to this case. There the surplus tolls remaining over and above the expenses of supporting the navigation were to be applied to the repairing and maintaining of bridges and highways. Those were public purposes; and as no part of the moneys received could be applied to private purposes, those moneys were not rateable in the hands of the trustees. The order confirming the rate must therefore be quashed upon this ground, as well as that which was mentioned by the court at the time of the argument."

2. Who are Occupiers.

Same point.

Reg. v. Beverley Gas Company, 6 A. & E. 645; 1 N. & P. 646. Paving commissioners authorised to erect gas-works, and let out and grant lights, were directed to apply the surplus of their rents to the public purposes of the acts. They are not rateable.

The Members of the Royal Academy are not rateable for the National Gallery.

Reg. v. Shee, 7 Jurist, 811. The origin and constitution of the Royal Academy, as well as the rights of the academicians and the public, are fully set forth in the case; but enough is stated in the judgment for the point of law involved in decision. Lord Denman. " This was an appeal against an assessment for the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Martin, duly made on the president, freemen, and other members of the Royal Academy of Arts, in respect of a portion of the National Gallery, used for the purposes of that society. The question of rateability will depend on the nature and character of that property, and the purposes for which it is used; and that independently of the local act, because, though that act contains some more general words than the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, it may, we think, be considered as coming within the earlier statute or neither. The principles upon which the rateability of any person or persons occupying any portion of the property of the crown or the public depend, are now well understood; the only difficulty is in applying the law to the circumstances of each case. R. v. Terrott, (p. 167,) has settled this branch of the law. There a lieutenant-colonel was rated in respect of apartments allotted to him in barracks, stated to be the property of the crown; and this court thought properly rated for what he occupied beyond what was necessary for the discharge of his public duty. Lord Ellenborough there says, ' The principle to be collected from all the cases on this subject is, that, if the party rated have the use of the building, or other subject of the rate as a mere servant of the crown, or of any public body, or in any other respect for the mere exercise of public duty therein, and have no beneficial occupation of or emolument resulting from it in any personal and private respect, then he is not rateable.' R. v. Ponsonby, (p. 162,) which lately came before us, was decided in conformity with this view of the law; the residence was not distinguishable from that in the chambers of an inn of court, or in any street or square. In the present case there is no beneficial occupation in the shape of actual residence on the premises rated, or any part of them, by the appellants, to assimilate this case to R. v. Terrott. If, therefore, this is the property of the crown or of the public, and is used for public purposes, it must come within the principle of exemption laid down by Lord Ellenborough as above cited. Now this society, which is not a corporation, was instituted by his Majesty Geo. III, in 1768, to promote instruction in painting, sculpture, and architecture; the place of meeting was formerly in part of the royal palace of Somerset House. The present place is the property of the crown. The officers are appointed by the sovereign, or elected by the society, subject to the approval of the sovereign, and hold their places during his pleasure. The treasurer is appointed by the queen, and his accounts are finally submitted to the keeper of the privy purse. The king formerly supplied the deficiency in the funds of the society, and now, if there should be any deficiency, the society must probably fall to the ground if not supported by the bounty of the crown. The society has no lease of the premises, but the crown might resume possession at any time. There is no beneficial occupation by actual residence of the members, and no beneficial occupation at all apart from the purposes of the institution; the appellants may therefore well be considered as agents of the crown for furthering the object for which the property of the crown is employed, that object being merely national and public. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the order of sessions confirming the rate must be quashed."

Reg. v. Blackfriars' Bridge Company, 1 P. & D. 603; 9 A. & E. 828. Case:—The Company of Proprietors of Blackfriars' Bridge appealed against a poor's rate for the township of Salford, upon the ground, that they were not beneficial occupiers. By an act passed in 1817, for building a bridge across the Irwell, from the township of Salford to the township of Manchester, and reciting, that it would be of great utility, not only to the numerous inhabitants of Manchester, but to the public, if the old bridge were taken down and another bridge erected in lieu thereof, for the passage of horses, carriages, &c.; certain persons were incorporated by the name of "The Company of Proprietors of the Blackfriars' Bridge;" and they were empowered to raise and contribute among themselves any sum not exceeding 17,700*l.*, to be divided into shares of 50*l.* each: and if that should be insufficient, they might raise 12,000*l.*, either by fresh contributions amongst themselves, or by mortgage of the bridge, or by granting annuities out of the tolls: the tolls to be applied, in the first place, in discharging the expenses of obtaining the act, and carrying the same into execution, and of keeping the bridge in repair; and, in the next place, in paying to the mortgagees and annuitants the interest and annuities, &c.; and the surplus thereof should be divided amongst the proprietors in proportion to their shares, viz., the proprietors to receive out of the tolls 5*l.* per cent. interest upon the sum paid upon the respective shares, the interest to commence from the time of payment of such sum, or of the instalments; and when the bridge should be opened for the passage of horses, &c., the proprietors should, instead of such interest, receive a dividend upon their shares out of the tolls, but not exceeding 7*l.* 10*s.* per annum; and when such surplus should be more than sufficient to pay such dividend of 7*l.* 10*s.* per annum, the excess was to be applied in discharge of the principal sum paid by the proprietors rateably, until the 17,700*l.* should have been paid off, and from thenceforth the proprietors should cease to receive any further share of the tolls, and the tolls should be accumulated to pay off the mortgages, and to form a fund for the repairs of the bridge, and then the tolls should wholly cease. The Company purchased land for making the bridge, raised among themselves 17,700*l.*, and borrowed on mortgage 12,000*l.* They did not grant any annuities. These sums were not sufficient for the building and completing the bridge, &c., and they incurred a further debt, a balance of which debt, viz. 3225*l.*, still remains unpaid. The bridge was opened to the public about 1822. The tolls received by the Company have been by them applied, after defraying the necessary expenses incidental to the undertaking, in paying and keeping down the interest of the mortgages, and in the liquidation of the debt, as aforesaid. No surplus has hitherto existed, after making such payment for a dividend, and none has been declared; and the Company have not yet received any dividend or interest upon the subscribed sum of 17,700*l.*, or any part thereof. The tolls are let in the current year for 1500*l.*, and in the preceding year were let for 1130*l.* During the argument, Coleridge, J., asked, "Do not the Company stand in the position of a mortgagor in possession, who still has a beneficial interest in the estate, although a great part of the proceeds goes towards paying off the interest?" Littledale, J., observed: "Suppose a public-spirited individual with a large capital should determine to build a bridge for the benefit of the public, and should obtain an act like the present to enable him to take tolls until his capital were repaid, would not he have a beneficial interest in the property?" He afterwards added, "I cannot distinguish this case from the one which I have just put, where an individual should build a bridge at his own expense, and get an act drawn like the present, enabling him to take tolls to reimburse himself.

A local act of parliament recited that it would be of great utility to the public to build a bridge, and empowered a company to raise a capital sum amongst themselves by shares, and to borrow a further sum, by mortgage or annuity, for the building thereof, and authorised tolls to be taken, and enacted that the tolls should be applied first in discharging the expenses of the act and paying the mortgagees their interest, and that the surplus should be divided among the proprietors, not exceeding 7½ per cent. on their shares. The excess arising from the tolls beyond the dividend was to be applied in paying off the capital advanced by the proprietors: afterwards to pay off the mortgage debt, afterwards to form a fund for the repairs of the bridge, and then the tolls to cease altogether. The Company raised money by shares and mortgage to build a public bridge. The tolls, amounting to 1500*l.* a year, were applied in discharging the debt and the interest. This debt had not been wholly discharged, and no dividend to the proprietors of shares had ever been made. The Company were rateable having a beneficial interest in the tolls till their capital was paid off. See Rex v. Exminster, post.

2. Who are Occupiers.

Here is land, on which by an act of parliament tolls are allowed to be taken, and therefore, primâ facie, there is a beneficial occupation. But it is said that no profit is made, as the tolls pay only a fair interest on the money laid out. That, however, is exactly what might be contemplated by an individual in the case supposed; he might be perfectly satisfied with a fair interest arising out of the tolls. It is immaterial whether profit is realised. Here it is enacted that, after the opening of the bridge, the proprietors shall receive a dividend not exceeding 7½ per cent. on their shares. But it is contended that there will be a time when that will cease, as on the paying off the capital of the Company, no more tolls are to be taken. But both in the case of the private individual which I have supposed, and of the Company, there is clearly a beneficial interest up to that time, and that whether it be a gaining or a losing concern. It seems to me, therefore, that the land produces a profit which is rateable, and that the defendants have not got rid of their liability, by showing, as in Rex v. Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61, that it is applied to public purposes only." Williams, J.—"The application of the profits in this case distinguishes it from those in which it has been held, that property of this kind is not rateable. In Rex v. Salter's Load Sluice, 4 T. R. 730, which is the foundation of all the subsequent cases, it was found that by no possibility could the profits ever be diverted from purposes strictly public. That also was eminently the case in Rex v. Liverpool, for there the act of parliament expressed the purposes for which the dock dues were to be used. That case was followed in terms by Rex v. River Weaver, 7 B. & C. 70, n. The late case of Reg. v. The Mayor of Liverpool, 1 P. & D. 334, has been alluded to, where the rateability of borough property was under discussion; but the decision there went entirely upon the same principle, that property cujuscumque generis was to be rated, except that which was entirely devoted to public purposes." Coleridge, J. "This is a clear case. There is in the first instance a rateable property producing profits. The question is, whether there is a beneficial occupation or not; but that must be determined by inquiring whether the profits are applied to public purposes only, or whether there are any private interests mixed up with the general scope of the act." Order of sessions confirmed.

Corporation property of a borough within the Municipal Corporation Act, the rents and profits of which are received by the treasurer of the borough was not rateable to the poor. See now 4 & 5 V. c. 4, post.

Reg. v. The Mayor of Liverpool, 1 P. & D. 334. On an appeal against a rate for the borough of Liverpool, in the nature of a borough rate, the sessions confirmed the rate. Case:—The several properties rated are the revenue of the municipal corporation of the borough of Liverpool, collected by their officers, who are paid by salaries, and by them paid over to the treasurer of the borough, to the account of the borough fund. Prior to the passing of the Municipal Corporation Act, these properties were rated to the relief of the poor, which rating was always acquiesced in; and these properties are now rateable to the poor, unless they are exempt under the new circumstances enacted by that act. Lord Denman, C. J., delivered the judgment. "This was an appeal against a rate made for the relief of the poor of the parish of Liverpool, upon certain properties which are the revenue of the municipal corporation of the borough of Liverpool, and which, before the passing of the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), were rated to the relief of the poor, and as the case states, are still liable to be so, unless they are exempted by the operation of that act. This question, which now comes before us for the first time, depends upon the construction of the 92d section, and the effect to be properly attributed thereto. By that section it is enacted, that 'the rents and profits of all hereditaments, and the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds of all moneys, dues, chattels, and valuable securities, belonging or payable to any body corporate, named in conjunction with the said borough in the said schedules (A and B), or to any member or officer thereof in his corporate capacity, and every fine or penalty for any offence against this act (the application of which has not been already provided for), shall be paid to the treasurer of such borough, and all the moneys which he shall so receive shall be carried by him to the account of a fund, to be called The Borough Fund.' Such is the description of that which is to constitute the fund; and upon the language of it, and more particularly upon the meaning of the word 'profits,' much criticism was employed in the course of the argument. We, however, attribute little importance to those remarks; first, because the particular meaning which may have been attached to it in the instruments to which reference was made, probably depended entirely upon the context; and, further, we are perfectly satisfied that the language is used in its ordinary and popular sense, and that the meaning is, that the whole income of the corporation, from whatever sources arising, shall constitute 'the borough fund.' Then comes the direction as to the uses and purposes for which the fund is to be applied; and it is declared that the same, subject to the payment of the debts owing by the corporation at the time when the act passed, or of so much as the council (i. e. the new council) should think it expedient to redeem, and to the interest of such debt, was to be applied to the payment of the salaries of certain officers, expenses of borough elections, sessions, and prosecutions, gaols and corporate buildings, police, and all other expenses incident to carrying the act into effect; and in case of a surplus, that such surplus was to be applied, under the direction of the council, for the public benefit of the inhabitants and the improvement of the borough. Then follows a provision, in case of a deficiency for the purposes aforesaid, that the town council may raise the deficiency by a borough rate in the nature of a county rate. The question, therefore, comes to this: What is the state of the law as to the rateability of property similarly circumstanced?—because if we find the principle settled by decisions already made, we feel it to be our duty to act upon them, and not, upon the apprehension of any inconvenient or unforeseen consequences, to question or weaken their authority. Now, in Rex v. Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61, certain trustees, in whom 'the dock estates' within the same parish were vested, were rated in respect of 'the annual value and profits' of the same; and property (otherwise rateable) was there held not to be so, because the rates and duties payable by act of parliament were to be applied to the payment of debts, and to the 'making, erecting, building, finishing, and maintaining docks, basins, piers, and other works and buildings in the port of Liverpool.' In that case, therefore, the application of the tolls or rates (which otherwise, as we have just observed, must have been as much rateable as a mileage rate upon a canal), in the manner above described, exempted them from rateability. And in Rex v. The Trustees of the River Weaver Navigation, 7 B. & C. 70 n, which was under the consideration of the court at the same time as the case just cited, property (as in that case clearly rateable) was held to be exempt, on account of the uses and purposes to which the profits were applicable. There the rates and duties, after payment of expenses, &c., were directed to be 'employed in the repair of bridges and in aid of other public charges upon the county.' And the court decided that the principle of the former disposed also of the latter case. They held that the repairing and maintaining of bridges and highways were public purposes, and that, as no part of the moneys received could be applied to private purposes, they were therefore not rateable in the hands of the trustees. We feel it to be impossible substantially to distinguish these cases, and especially the latter, from the present. The extent and approximation to something like national benefit, are in kind, and almost in degree, the same. The public in the one case is the same town of Liverpool; in the other, the county of Chester. The Attorney-General v. Aspinall, 2 M. & C. 613, in which this very borough fund was under consideration, was cited by the learned counsel on both sides. The main question, however, seems there to have been, whether the corporate property was trust property, so as to come under the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery: and it is probable (though it is wholly unnecessary to express any opinion) the same decision might have been given if the property had been comparatively of a much more private nature. But we have the satisfaction of observing that the view which we have taken of the earlier part of the 92d section, is expressly adopted by the Lord Chancellor; for his lordship, in describing (not giving the words of) that section, comprehends 'the rents, profits,' and other sources of revenue therein enumerated, by the general expression of 'all the income of the corporate property.' In coming to the conclusion to which we have arrived, we certainly feel that whatever may be the effect in the present instance, in many boroughs, consisting of several parishes, the proportion and rate of contribution may be materially disturbed. We think it also extremely probable that the effect of this section upon the rateability of corporate property was overlooked altogether. Our business, however, is with the construction of the statute, and not with consequences; and the remedy, if any be requisite, must be by the legislature. The result of our opinion is, that the order of sessions must be quashed as far as relates to the rate upon the corporation."

2. Who are Occupiers.

A corporation is not rateable to the relief of the poor in respect of lands of which the profits are payable to the borough fund, under 5 & 6 Will. IV., c. 76, s. 92, although the land is situate in a parish without the limits of the borough.

Reg. v. Exminster, 4 P. & D. 69. Case:—The mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the city and borough of Exeter, which is a county of itself, are assessed as the occupiers of a canal in the parish of Exminster. The canal passes through the several parishes of Exminster, Alphington, and St. Thomas, in the county of Devon, no part thereof being in the city of Exeter, but communicating with that city by the navigable river Exe, and the canal and towing-paths adjoining, belonging to the corporation, and are in their own actual occupation. The tolls arising therefrom are payable under a statute passed in 1829, for "altering, extending, and improving" the canal: and the annual income produced by them is more than sufficient to pay the interest of a mortgage to which they are subject. No mention is made in the act of any purpose to which the surplus income should be applied, nor any provision whereby the tolls should at any time be discontinued, but they are parts of the income and general resources of the corporation, and are collected by their officers, who are paid by salaries, and by them paid over to the treasurer to the borough fund. These properties were formerly rated to the relief of the poor of the city of Exeter, but for several years prior to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, they had been rated in Exminster, which rating had been acquiesced in, and the rates paid. The question is, whether the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the city of Exeter are rateable in Exminster. Lord Denman. "The question in this case was, whether the corporation of Exeter was rateable for tolls received by them in a different parish from any in which the city is situate. A distinction was attempted to be drawn between this case and that of Reg. v. Liverpool (a), on the ground of this property being in a parish out of the borough. We are of opinion that there is no ground for the distinction. In Reg. v. Liverpool (a), the court held that, under the Municipal Reform Act, property held by a corporation for corporate purposes is not rateable. After reconsidering the provisions of that statute, and after examination of all the authorities, we consider the principle there laid down to be a right principle, and that it applies whether the property is in the same parish in which the city, or any part of it, is, or in any other parish."

(a) p. 182.

Corporate property now rateable.

But now, by 4 & 5 V. c. 4, the Municipal Corporations in schedules A and B, shall be rated to the poor for lands and hereditaments being the property and in the occupation of the corporation, as if such lands were not corporate property. Provided that, where such property lies in any parish wholly within the limits of the city or borough, and in which the poor are relieved by an entire rate, or in which the poor within the limits existing for municipal purposes at the time of the Municipal Act were relieved by an entire rate, the exemption shall continue. The corporation in the occupation shall be deemed to be beneficial owners for the purposes of rating, as if they occupied for their private advantage, and not for public purposes, and be rated in their corporate style."

The tenant of a farm may be rated for the whole farm although he lets a dairy. The dairyman might have been rated, but the rating of the tenant for the whole and the omission of the Rex v. Brown, 8 East, 532. The farmer let cows to be exclusively depastured on the farm. The farmer was rated for the whole (a). Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The appellant complains of the rate, without showing any grievance; because the farmer having been rated, as we must presume for the full profits of the farm, it matters not to the appellant whether or not the rate in respect of that farm could have been better distributed by laying one portion of it on the farmer and another portion on the dairyman: the appellant's proportion of the rate would remain the same in either case. It is said that the interest which the dairyman takes under such agreement is a tenement in law, and gives him an interest in the land by which he may gain a settlement, and that I do not dispute; and, therefore, if the dairyman, considering him and not the farmer as the occupier of so much of the farm as the cows were depastured upon, had been rated as such for it, I do not see what objection could have been made. But here the objection is, that the farmer is rated for the whole farm, the profits of which arise principally from the stock upon it, and a part of those profits are again required to be subjected to another rate in the hands of the dairyman. But there is no objection to the rate as it now stands, and great inconvenience would ensue if the profits of different persons out of the same farm were subdivided and a proportionable rate laid upon each, instead of one general rate for the whole on the general occupier of the whole. A farmer may make a bargain with one man to let him have a field of grass to cut, or he may let the aftermath of his meadow, some to one and some to another, and this may not only vary every year, but every month or oftener, in the neighbourhood of populous towns. These are substantially the tenants of the land while their subordinate interests subsist, and either might be rated for it during such holding; but if there be one general rate, made on the general occupier of the whole farm, including all these particular profits and subdivisions of interest, by which, in fact, he is benefited, who can say he is injured by the rating of one for the whole, rather than the several subtenants of those partial interests for their respective proportions, [deducting the value of them from the rate upon the general occupier? And as to the convenience of the general rate for the whole, there can be no question of it. Other cases may be put: the owner of a house and garden may let the profits of his garden to his gardener, retaining the use of it in other respects, upon condition of the latter supplying his table with certain articles, or upon a rent; and though the gardener might be rated for this interest, yet, if the owner were rated for his house and garden, what objection could any other person make to the rate on that account? The principle is, that the estate which has once paid shall not be made to pay again: and yet in all these cases it may be truly said that some profit is made by the subholder beyond what the general occupier receives. What was said by Lord Mansfield (a) does not contradict this, that where there was a proportion of the profits of the land rateable in the hands of the tenant, which was not rateable in the hands of the crown, the tenant was assessable for it. But here the whole having been rated in the hands of the farmer, nothing remained to be assessed in the hands of the undertenant. It would be a different question if a farmer derived profit from stock kept upon his farm, but not connected with the management of it; as if he kept a large flock of cattle there, which he fed with oil-cake for sale. There he would be separately rateable for it; not as stock of his farm, but as stock generally, from which he derived a separate and distinct profit. But here the dairy cows are, properly speaking, the stock of the farm, and as to any separate profit derived from them to the dairyman distinct from the farmer, the same might be said of a man to whom the farmer sold the milk by pailsful on the premises, and who after mixing it with water retailed it again at a profit." Grose, J. "The question is, whether the appellant has any ground of complaint. He complains of being rated too much because certain persons renting dairies in the parish have been omitted in the rate. But it appears that though those persons be not rated, others are so for the same subject-matter; because the profits derived from the stock of cows on the farm have in effect been once rated, being included in the rate upon the farmer for the profits of the whole farm, of which they constitute a part." Lawrence, J. "It is contended that the dairymen are liable to be rated for their dairies on two grounds: 1st, That a dairy is a tenement, the taking and occupying of which is capable of conferring a settlement, and that every occupier of a tenement is liable to be rated in respect of it.

Dairyman, is no ground of appeal for a third person.

(a) Bute v. Grindall, p. 162.

2. Who are Occupiers.

That may be so, but the ground of appeal is, that the appellant is injured by the omission of these persons in the rate. But if it appear that others are rated for the whole value of the farms, including the profits of the cows depastured on them, and that the appellant sustains no injury in any way, the ground of appeal fails. Then, secondly, it is said that the cows are personal property, and that the dairymen are liable to be rated for the profits made by such stock. But this is the stock by which the farm is rendered productive, and having been once taxed in effect in respect of the produce in the hands of the farmer, is the produce to be rated again as milk in the hands of the dairyman? By the same rule might it not be rated again as butter, and again as cheese, in the hands of the same person, on account of the additional profit which may be made of it in either of these stages? This would be carrying the principle of rating much further than it has gone before. It would be very inconvenient to parishes to subdivide the rate in the manner proposed. If a person, taking the aftermath of a meadow, is to be rated for it instead of including it in the rate for the whole farm, what is to be done when this is taken, as it frequently is, by drovers of cattle passing along the road, who depart again in a few days and are nowhere to be heard of? Experiments of this sort, if carried into effect, would only introduce confusion. The amount of the rate would be the same; for if by underletting the aftermath the original renter make more of the land, he is rateable in proportion; and it will be found much more advantageous to the parishioners at large to abide by the old practice, and to lay one entire rate on the whole farm in the hands of the general occupier." Le Blanc, J. "I am surprised that the sessions should have reserved any case upon the application of this appellant, when the only question was, whether with respect to him this were an equal rate, or whether injustice had been done to him by the omission of the dairyman in the rate. For, supposing it to be a question whether the farmer or the dairyman were in possession of the property to be rated, and that it were a case of doubtful occupation, yet when it appears that one of them has been assessed for the whole property, and that neither of them complained of the rate, what pretence can there be for setting aside or altering the rate at the instance of a third person, who has no interest in that question, in order to decide a question of doubtful possession between the other two? Taking it, however, as a case between the farmer and the dairyman, it is true that the taking of a dairy in this manner has been held to give a settlement as upon the taking of a tenement; but it has only been held to be a tenement in respect of the interest in the land on which the cows are agreed to be depastured. But here the farmer has the general interest in the whole of the land out of which the other interest is carved: the cows fed upon it are his own, they are his stock; the dairyman is to have the care of them, and the trouble of milking them, and the profits arising from the produce of the cows, in consideration of a certain sum which he agrees to give the farmer. Then what is this in effect more than the farmer making this profit of his land and of his stock by this general agreement with the dairyman, instead of employing his own dairyman to milk the cows, and afterwards disposing of the produce when made into butter or cheese? It is a mode of selling the milk of his cows. Then it is said that the dairyman is rateable as for his personal stock; but he is not the owner of the cows, they are not his personal stock, he has no capital of his own, but he only makes a profit by his personal labour out of the capital of another person." Rate confirmed.

One who occupies a house as surveyor to the trustees of a navigation is rateable although the tolls are exempt, and the trustees have no beneficial interest.

—— v. Armstrong, 2 Stark. c. 543. The plaintiff was rated for a house which he occupied under the trustees of the navigation of the river Lee. It was situated on the river, and had been built out of the tolls arising from the navigation, and he occupied it for the purpose of superintending the business of the trustees. The act of parliament expressly directs that the tolls arising from the navigation should not be subject to the poor's rates. It was contended that as the plaintiff was the servant of the trustees, who had no beneficial interest in the navigation of the river or in the tolls, he was to be considered as the servant of the public, and as exempted from the poor's rate: if the trustees had not built the house they must have paid for one out of the rates and duties collected on the river. Abbott, C. J. was of opinion, "that the plaintiff was rateable in respect of this house. If he had received a salary out of the tolls, and had rented another house, he would clearly have been liable to be rated for it." Verdict for the defendants.

Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 460. Lord Ellenborough said, "I have great difficulty in deciding that a person who has mere permission to turn his cattle on another's land is rateable." R. v. Sudbury, post. 207, 8.

Agistor of cattle not rateable.

However poor the occupier may be, he ought to be put on the rate (a), but a power is given to the justices, with the consent of overseers, to have the name struck off. See post. In some cases, the owner may be rated instead of the occupier; for by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 19, which recites, that "Whereas in many parishes, and more especially in large and populous towns, the payment of the poor's rates is greatly evaded, by reason that great numbers of houses within such parishes are let out in lodgings, or in separate apartments, or for short terms, or are let to tenants who quit their residences, or become insolvent, before the rates charged on them can be collected; and it hath been found that in many instances the persons letting such houses do actually charge and receive much higher rents for the same, upon the ground and expectation that the occupiers thereof cannot be effectually assessed to the poor's rates, and will not be charged with or required to pay such rate, and do thus obtain an undue advantage to themselves; and by means of the premises the other inhabitants of such parishes are unjustly compelled to pay much more than their fair and due proportions of the charges of relieving and maintaining the poor;" it is enacted, "that after the 1st of January, 1820, it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any parish, in vestry assembled, and they are hereby empowered, to resolve and direct, that the owner or owners of all houses, apartments, or dwellings in such parishes, being the immediate lessor or lessors of the actual occupier or occupiers, which shall respectively be let to the occupiers thereof at any rent or rate not exceeding 20*l.* nor less than 6*l.* by the year, for any less term than one year; or on any agreement by which the rent shall be reserved or made payable at any shorter period than three months, shall be assessed to the rates for the relief of the poor, for and in respect of such houses, apartments, or dwellings, and the out-houses and curtilages thereof, instead of the actual occupiers; and the inhabitants so assembled in vestry may, and they are hereby authorised from time to time to rescind, renew, vary, and amend every resolution and direction as they shall see occasion, so as no such resolution or direction shall extend to assess or charge the owner of any house, apartment, or dwelling, which shall, with the out-houses and curtilages thereof, be let at a greater rent than 20*l.*, or less than 6*l.*, as aforesaid; and the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every such parish are hereby empowered and required to carry into effect all such resolutions and directions of the inhabitants in vestry assembled; and in pursuance and execution thereof, in all rates to be by them made for the relief of the poor, to assess by a fair and equal pound rate the owner or owners being the immediate lessor or lessors of the actual occupier or occupiers, of every house, apartment, or dwelling to which such resolution and direction shall extend, for or in respect of the same, according to the actual rent at which every such house, apartment, or dwelling shall be let, after making a reasonable deduction from such rent, not exceeding in any case one-half of the same; and upon non-payment of the sum or sums so to be assessed, the same may and shall be levied upon, and the payment thereof be enforced against, such owner and owners, lessor and lessors, so to be assessed, and his and their goods and chattels, in like manner as rates for the relief of the poor may by law be

Goods of occupiers may be distrained for rates to the amount of the rent actually due.

Sect. 20. Provides that the goods and chattels of every occupier of any such house, apartment, or dwelling, which shall be found in and about the same, shall be liable to be distrained and sold for raising so much of any such rate or assessment being in arrear, as shall have become due during the occupancy of the person or persons whose goods and chattels shall be so distrained (to be ascertained in a summary way by the justices granting the warrant of distress), so that in no case any greater sum be raised by distress of the goods and chattels of any such occupiers, than shall, at the time of making such distress, be actually due from such occupier for rent of the premises on which such distress shall be made: Provided also, that every occupier who shall pay any such rate or rates, or upon whose goods or chattels the same or any part thereof shall be levied, shall and may deduct the amount of the sum which shall be so paid or levied, out of the rent by him or them payable; and such payment shall be a sufficient discharge to every such occupier for so much of the rent payable by him as he shall have paid, or as shall have been levied on his goods and chattels, of such rate, and for the costs of levying the same.

Sect. 23. Provides, that nothing in this act contained shall extend to give any power or authority to assess the owner (not being the occupier) of any house, apartment, or dwelling, in any city, borough, or town corporate, in which the right of voting for the election of members to serve in parliament, shall depend upon the assessment of the voter to the poor's rate, or to vary or affect the manner of assessing and charging any of the inhabitants or occupiers of houses, lands, or tenements, within any such city, borough, or town corporate. Similar clause in 2 Will. IV. c. 45, s. 50.

If the tenant is excused, the landlord cannot be rated.

Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 3 B. & C. 516; 5 D. & R. 359. This was an appeal by the Company against a rate; and one ground stated in the notice was, that the overseers had not rated the lessee of houses, who underlet the same at an improved rent, the occupiers of which had been rated, but excused from payment on account of poverty. Upon this point, during the argument, as reported in D. & R., C. J. Abbott said, "If the principle is established that the landlords are liable to be rated in consequence of the inability of their tenants to pay rates, it will have the effect of depriving poor persons of their habitations, for no landlord will let small tenements to persons of that description if they are to be liable as sureties for their tenants." And again, in giving the judgment of the court, he said, "As to the question of the lessee, whose under-tenants have been excused from poverty, the point was not very much pressed upon our consideration in the argument, and we think the lessee not liable. The 9 & 10 Will. III. (local act) imposes the rate indeed upon the lands, houses, &c. without mentioning either occupier or owner; but as this is a burthen commonly falling on the occupier, we think the owner not compellable to bear it. The owner fixes his rent upon the supposition that this is his tenant's burthen; and without very clear words to show that such was the intention, we think we cannot make the landlord surety for the tenant."

2. Who are Occupiers.

Under the Local Act, (11 Geo. IV., c. 10) for regulating the parishes of St. Giles in the Fields and St. George, Bloomsbury, the landlord of certain houses may be rated, and in an action is not necessary to aver that he had notice of the rate; nor the tenant's default in payment, or not a sufficient distress on the premises.

Robinson v. James, 7 Jur. 715. Coleridge, J. "In this case a motion has been made to arrest the judgment on three grounds of objection to the declaration. The action was for the recovery of poor-rates assessed on the landlord of two houses, under the authority of the 11 Geo. IV. c. x., the local act, which regulates the affairs of the joint parishes of St. Giles in the Fields, and St. George, Bloomsbury, and the declaration is said not to be framed so as to satisfy the requisitions of that statute. First, it is said, that the declaration does not allege that the rate was made by a majority of the vestry assembled at the time of its being made. By the 19th section no order or proceeding shall be made or taken, unless the majority of the vestrymen present shall concur, and the whole number present must not be less than thirteen; and by sect. 86, the vestrymen are to make the poor-rate, which shall be entered in a book and signed by the vestrymen present, or by any thirteen or more of them. The declaration states 'that the vestrymen made the rate, that it was entered in a book provided for the purpose, and signed' by more than thirteen of the vestrymen present at such meeting of Thomas Vowler Short, and seventeen others, who were named, these respectively being vestrymen. It therefore shows, with sufficient certainty, that the rate was made at a vestry at which more than thirteen were present, and signed by more than thirteen. It is not, indeed, stated in terms in the declaration that a majority of those present concurred, but that is not necessary, as the act of the majority is the act of the whole vestry. Unless a majority concurred, it is not true that the vestrymen made the rate; and the form adopted is the correct mode of stating in pleading that the majority, or whatever number were necessary to make a valid rate, have in fact concurred in making it. Secondly, it is objected that it is not averred that the defendant was the landlord of the houses at the time of the notice of making the rate, and of the default in payment, or of the action brought. I am of opinion that this was not necessary. The objection is founded, as it seems to me, upon a misconstruction of the 96th and 101st sections of this act. Two classes of persons are made liable to be rated by the statute, the occupiers generally, and the owners in certain cases; and the present defendant, falling within these terms, has been accordingly rated; provisions are made by the 88th and 89th sections, for the recovery of rates in arrear from both classes, by distress and imprisonment; the 90th and 91st sections provide, in respect of the former class, (the occupiers), for cases in which they may be quitting their tenements, or where change of tenants may take place during the period for which any rate may be imposed on the latter class, (the owners), but do not, in terms, contemplate the case of any change in the ownership during the period for which the rate shall be imposed. The 95th section provides, that although in these cases the tenant be not rated, his goods shall be liable to be distrained to the extent of the rent due from him to his landlord, and he shall be entitled to deduct from his rent, or to re-payment from his landlord, an equal amount. The 96th section, on which this declaration is founded, must be received with reference to the 95th section. Its object is to give a fair remedy in the same cases against the landlord; the remedy by distress would often be insufficient and oppressive on the tenant, always inconvenient to the collector; and therefore it is enacted, that in default of payment by the landlord, the same shall be and remain a charge on the land, and after fourteen days' notice, left on the premises, may be recovered in an action of debt against the landlord. The argument raised on the words 'be and remain a charge' on the land, is, that the action is to be brought against the owner for the time being, whether rated or not. If this had been the intention of the act, I should have expected much clearer words to express it, and provisions analogous to those in the 91st section, that the owner on a change of ownership should be answerable only pro ratâ according to the time for which each shall be the owner. But, in truth, such an intention would have been very unreasonable. The case supposed, is that of an owner rated and making default, the remedy is on something independent of the seizable effects on the land, that is, on the general property of the defaulter, by action of debt. Why then should not he who has made the default be liable to the action, the right to which has accrued by his default, whether he continue the owner or not? I can see no reason, therefore, for engrafting this restriction on the words of the act, which would obviously lead to the most difficult questions in applying it. The last objection is, that there is no allegation of a want of sufficient distress on the premises, in respect of which the rate is imposed; and this I am of opinion is not necessary. In the cases to which the 101st section applies, no action can be brought to recover arrears of rates, unless when a sufficient distress cannot be found; but this section applies to cases other than those provided by the 96th section, on which this action is brought. The two sections are quite distinct, and each complete in itself. Some confusion at first sight is introduced by the order of the several sections; if the 100th and 101st sections had been placed immediately after the 91st, it would have been seen that this naturally follows on those which give the remedy by distress, and point out the manner and form of pursuing it. The 92nd to the 97th, inclusive, provide for the liability of the landlords, and the 96th gives an action against them, quite irrespective of there being or not being a sufficiency of distress on the rated premises, the object in this being to look primarily to them and their general property, and not to the goods of the tenants on the premises. Thinking, therefore, that there is no foundation for any of the objections, this rule must be refused."

2. Who are Occupiers.

Landlords liable by local acts.

In some local acts the landlord is made liable, as in St. Pancras. So also by the local act for St. Giles's and St. George's, Middlesex; lessors, landlords, and owners of all lands, houses, &c., "the yearly assessment or valuation whereof should be less than 30*l.*, may be rated. Some houses which were let for more than 30*l.*, were assessed at less than 30*l.* It is questionable whether the assessment, if not fairly made in the rent, creates a liability on the landlord, even although the words are "assessment or valuation," Mandamus to compel a distress refused. Rex v. Dyer, 2 A. & E. 606. It has been held a valid custom to rate all persons in a parish according to their apparent ability, without regard to visible property in their possession. Nightingale v. Marshall, 2 Bar. & Cres. 313; 3 D. & R. 549, S. 6. What property is rateable.

By the 43 Eliz., besides the inhabitants, "the parson, vicar, and occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriator of tithes, coal mines, and saleable underwoods," are to be taxed; and in some local acts, property not included within 43 Eliz. is rendered liable. See "Rating under Local Acts."

1. Land, Houses, &c.

The first kind of real property named in the 43 Eliz. c. 2, is "lands and houses."

"All things which are real and in yearly revenue must be taxed to the poor." Resolution of the judges of assize in 1633.—Dalt. F. 235.

General definition of "Land."

"Land hath in its legal significations an indefinite extent, upwards as well as downwards. Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cœlum, is the maxim of the law, upwards; and downwards, whatever is in a direct line between the surface of any land and the centre of the earth, belongs to the owner of the surface. The word 'land' includes not only the face of the earth, but everything under it or over it."—2 Bla. Com. 18.

1. Land, Houses, &c.

Its acceptation in this statute.

This is the legal signification of "land," when it is used by itself; but when it is accompanied with other words, which can have no meaning, if the word is understood in its general sense, then there is reason for taking the word in a less comprehensive sense, as in a grant of "lands, meadows, and pastures;" the former word means any "arable lands." (Barton Com. 194.) So here, if land is used in its general sense, no effect can be given to the words "houses, woods, or coal mines;" and it would comprehend all woods, and all mines, and make that rateable which, by repeated decisions, have been held not to be included in the statute.

The occupier of land covered by water is rateable.

Where a river navigation extended through several parishes, and tonnage dues became payable in respect of goods carried along the line of navigation, and landed at a wharf locally situate within the parish of B., a rate on the proprietor of those dues for their whole amount in the parish of B., stated to be for river tonnage, could not be considered as a rate upon that part of the river locally situate within the parish of B., but as a rate upon the parts of the river within as without the parish, and cannot be supported.

The 41 Geo. III. c.23, s. 1, does not give the Court of K. B. the power of amending a poor-rate.

Rex v. Milton, 3 B & A. 112. Milton was rated for "river tonnage" in Bengworth. Case:—The appellant was a tenant of part of the navigation of the river Avon, called the "Lower Navigation," which runs through the counties of Worcester and Gloucester, from the lock above the bridge at Evesham to the junction of the Avon with the Severn at Tewkesbury. The conveyance under which Mr. Perrot's family held this property conveyed to them "all that the navigation and profits of navigation, and passage for boats, upon the Avon, situate in the counties of Worcester, Warwick, and Gloucester, to and from the Severn, up and down the Avon, unto and from the lock and sluice next above the bridge at Evesham: and also all storehouses, sluices, locks, &c., belonging to the river Avon, and the navigation thereupon to and from the Severn, up and down the Avon, unto and from the lock and sluice next above the bridge at Evesham, together with all the tolls, rates of tonnage, &c., to the navigation belonging." By the 24 Geo. II., 1751, "An Act for the regulating the navigation of the river Avon, and for ascertaining the rates of water-carriage," it was enacted, "that the river Avon shall be a free river, and all persons shall have liberty of passing down the river with boats laden with goods, paying the proprietors of the navigation certain rates of tonnage." The appellant was not an inhabitant or occupier of any messuage or tenement in Bengworth, but he resided in the parish of All Saints, Evesham, in which parish part of the river was, and which was used by vessels passing along the river. In Bengworth was a wharf communicating with the river, belonging to one Day, where goods were landed annually, yielding tonnage dues to the amount in the rate assessed; but no tonnage dues were received by the appellant in Bengworth, nor any account given of them in that parish; but, as a check upon the boatmen, an account was taken at the wharf by Day's servant of all the goods landed there, which was sent over to the appellant at his house in Evesham, where the boatmen accounted to him; and he usually received tonnage dues on goods in Evesham, but sometimes at Pershore; there was no lock within Bengworth, and when the tonnage dues were paid at Evesham, the boatman took back with him a certificate from the appellant of his having paid the dues at Evesham, in order to enable him to repass the sluice through which he came up loaded, which was situate at Pershore, and which was kept locked. The same amount of tonnage was payable by every vessel which passed Pershore sluice in its way to Evesham or Bengworth, whether it proceeded as high as either of those places, or unloaded and delivered at any intermediate place, which was frequently the case, and which distance included eight different parishes where goods might be landed. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that this rate, which has been made on the river tonnage, cannot be sustained. It has been contended, that by the words 'river tonnage,' we may understand the profits arising only from that part of the river which lies within the parish of Bengworth. It seems to me, however, that we cannot so understand those words, for they are explained to us by the subsequent facts stated in the case. From these facts it clearly appears that the profits accrued in respect, not only of the use of that part of the navigation which was within the parish of Bengworth, but also from the use of the other parts of the navigation, situate in the different parishes through which the goods had passed. This is, therefore, in substance, not a rate upon the profits of that part of the river only which is situated within the parish of Bengworth, but a rate upon the tonnage dues payable at the wharf there, in respect of the carriage of the goods through the other parishes. Unless, therefore, we are to supersede all the late cases by which it has been held that tolls per se are not rateable, we are bound to say that these tonnage dues are not subject to this rate." Bayley, J. "Since Rex v. Nicholson, the court have held themselves bound to see clearly that the property rated comes within the words of the 43 Eliz., by which the rate is directed to be 'by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods, in the parish.' Now the party here, not being an inhabitant, must be brought within some of the other words, and the only other words applicable to this case are 'occupier of lands.' Rex v. The Aire and Calder Navigation, and Rex v. Page, certainly do not admit of that distinction. In Rex v. Nicholson those decisions, however, were expressly overruled by this court. In Rex v. Macdonald the rate was for the Rochdale Canal Lock Tunnel dues or rates. Now, if those dues or rates had arisen from property partly within the parish and partly without, it would have been like the present case. The only dues which the party was entitled to receive in that case were dues in respect of vessels passing through the lock, which lock lay within the parish; and, therefore, all the tolls and dues there arose from what may be called parish property. The rate in this case is for tonnage dues, and it would be a good rate, provided it could be shown that the tonnage arose wholly from the use of rateable property within the parish. It is stated, however, that the canal passes through several parishes. The tolls, therefore, which are collected for goods landed at the wharf in the parish of Bengworth, are payable to the proprietor as a compensation for the use of the whole line of the canal through which the goods pass, and not merely for the use of that part of the canal which lies within the parish of Bengworth. It is a rate, therefore, upon profits arising partly within and partly without the parish; and upon that ground, I think that the rate cannot be supported; and if it cannot, the case of Rex v. The Mayor of Bath is an authority to show that the rate must be quashed. This is not a mere objection to the quantum of the rate." Holroyd, J. "It is now to be considered as an established rule, that tolls qua tolls are not rateable. I do not mean to say, however, that a rate may not be made on rateable property under the denomination of tolls, provided that the property from which the tolls arises be within the parish, and the rate be confined to that property. Here the rate is upon tonnage-dues. It is said that the property rated is rateable property within the parish where the tonnage-dues became payable, and that, therefore, this is to be considered as a rate upon that rateable property. I think, however, that this is a rate, not only on rateable property within the parish, but on other property, which, though rateable, is rateable in another parish, and not in this. The case states, that within the parish there is a wharf, communicating with the river, where goods to the amount assessed are annually landed. It must be taken, therefore, that the rate was made upon all those tonnage-dues. It is also stated, that part of the navigation lies in other parishes, in the passage through which the tonnage-dues arise, as well as for the passage through the part of the river which lies within the parish. Now, if the rate on the tonnage-dues be, in fact, a rate on the rateable property, that is, on the whole part of the navigation in respect of which those dues are payable, it must be considered as a rate upon the profits arising, not only from that part of the navigation which is within the parish, but from that also which is not within the parish. The objection, therefore, is not merely to the quantum, but to the rate itself, viz. that it is a rate upon property without as well as within the parish. I think, therefore, that this rate is bad." Best, J. "The only mode by which the tolls of a canal become rateable is by rating the land itself, or that part of the land occupied by the canal, which is locally situate within the parish; the tolls then are the profits arising from that part of the land; and the statute of Elizabeth authorises the rating of such property locally situate within the parish; but it does not authorise the rating of property not situate within the parish. I think that the rate here is upon property partly within and partly without the parish, and that it is, therefore, bad; and that, being so, I think the order of sessions ought to be quashed."

Tonnage dues, like tolls, are not rateable per se.

a. Canals.

Tolls are not rateable per se; but contra, when mixed with a rate upon other property, which, as having substance and locality within the parish, is properly rateable there.

Rex v. Macdonald, 12, East, 324. Case:—The property was described in the assessment as the Rochdale canal, lock, tunnel dues or rates; and certain warehouses were named; and the assessment was made upon Sir Archibald Macdonald (and others), trustees of the late Duke of Bridgewater. The appellants were not inhabitants of Manchester, but were in the receipt of the tonnage in respect of vessels passing through the lock built upon the Rochdale canal, under the 34 Geo. III. The 2nd section, after reciting, that "whereas the Duke of Bridgewater hath expended a considerable sum in making wharfs for the convenience of the public near his canal at Manchester, and when the proposed junction is made with his canal, the profits of the Duke arising from his wharfs will be considerably diminished; he nevertheless consents to such junction on being authorised to build a lock upon the Rochdale canal, near the junction, and to collect rates as a compensation" for the diminution in the profits of his wharfage, authorises the Duke, &c. at his expense, to build a lock upon the Rochdale canal, at Castle Field, &c. and to take at the said lock for his benefit the following rates, viz. (naming rates for goods carried from the Rochdale canal to the dock,) which rates shall be paid at or near the lock to the Duke, &c. The lock was built in pursuance of this act. The tonnage amounts to as much as is charged in the assessment. The appellants were and still are in the occupation of the lock, warehouses and wharfs. No inhabitants of Manchester or other persons were rated in respect of their personal property in the township. There were owners of annual chief or ground-rents payable from lands in Manchester, and the owners were also inhabitants, but not rated in respect of these rents. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The question stands on the rateability of the property of the trustees. The case states that they are the occupiers of the lock, and of the several wharfs and warehouses mentioned in the rate; and it is not disputed that the property rated yields profit; but it is objected that they are rated for dues or rates, that is, for the tolls payable at the lock under the act of parliament; and that the court have held tolls not to be rateable. But the court have only said that tolls are not rateable per se, but only when connected and rated conjunctively with real and substantial property, situated in the parish; which, as yielding profit there by means of the tolls, is the proper subject of rating within the act of Elizabeth. Now here the lock itself is rated, which is something real and substantial, locally situated in the township, and producing profit; and the addition of the dues or rates is merely giving other names for the same thing. These dues or rates are given by the act of parliament as a compensation to the Duke of Bridgewater, for the loss of his profits of certain wharfs adjoining to his canal at Manchester; which wharfs were before clearly rateable in respect of those profits: the rates, therefore, made payable at the lock were substituted as a compensation for and in lieu of the wharfage before enjoyed: they are the substituted medium of profit arising, as the act describes it, from those wharfs. The court, therefore, by this decision, will not break in upon that which they have recently decided, that tolls per se, and when not mixed with a rate upon other property, which, as having substance and locality within the parish, is properly rateable there, are not liable to be rated." The other judges concurring, the rate and order of sessions were confirmed.

Tolls taken upon a river for passing a sluice are rateable.

Rex v. Cardington, 2 Cowp. 581. Case:—A. Palmer was seised in fee of the right of navigation of that part of the river Ouse which lies between Erith, in Huntingdon, and the town of Bedford, and of all the tolls arising from the carriage of goods upon that part; he had power to erect sluices and staunches for keeping up the water, tolls were paid for passing every sluice, and in a different rate for different sluices: one sluice was erected in the parish of Cardington, at which the toll was 3*d.* a chaldron. Mr. Palmer did not reside in Cardington, nor was any person resident at that sluice to receive the tolls; the tolls for that sluice were received at Barford or Eaton; neither Mr. Palmer, nor any former proprietor of that navigation, were assessed to the poor-rates for their sluices or for the tolls, but they had for many years been assessed to the land-tax. The court ordered it to stand over, that inquiry might be made as to the custom of rating this description of property in other places. In answer to the inquiries, it was returned, that out of fourteen sluices, being the whole number erected upon this navigation, one only was rated to the poor; that the river Ivil, near Bury, the Northampton river, Larke, Ouse, and Stower, were none of them taxed. The tolls at Marlow, Oxford, Reading, and several others on the river Thames, were all rated to the poor. Upon the whole, the court was of opinion that these tolls were rateable.

a. Canals.

Custom of rating.

The proprietors are rateable in each parish for the profits earned by the canal there, unless by the Canal Act there is a special exemption. See post.

b. Pipes.

Occupiers of land by means of pipes are rateable.

A company is rateable as occupiers of land in the parish wherein their pipes are laid, for the entire profits of that land.

Rex v. Brighton Gas Company, 5 B. & C. 466; 8 D. & R. 308. The company was established by act of parliament, for lighting Brighton with gas. The buildings and manufactory are in the parish of Rottingdean, the mains or pipes, forming the subject of appeal, are placed in the ground in the parish of Brighton, where the gas is sold and consumed; the company being authorised, with the consent of certain commissioners, to open the ground in the streets of Brighton. The mains or pipes were assessed at 40*l.* per annum, being a ninth part of the estimated value of 360*l.*, that being the proportion in which other rateable property is there rated. Personal property is not rated in Brighton. The mains and pipes were worth 360*l.* a-year at the least, to any person who could use them for the purpose for which they were laid down. Bayley, J. "The only question is, whether the company can be deemed occupiers of land, and to the extent to which they are rated. If it were doubtful in this case, whether the pipes constituted part of the freehold, the company would, at all events, be liable to be rated for an occupation way; but I think that we may collect from the case that the pipes are fixed in the soil; and if so, then Rex v. The Corporation of Bath establishes that they are to be deemed occupiers of that land in which the pipes are fixed. Rex v. The Rochdale Water Works Company (infra), and Rex v. The Birmingham Gas Light Company, establish the same principle. In the case of a canal the proprietors are rateable, not only in the parish where the tolls are collected, but in each parish where they occupy land for that purpose. In many acts of parliament, authorising the making of a canal, it is provided that the company shall not be rated at a higher rate than the adjoining land; but if there be no such provision, then they must be rated in respect of the value which the land has acquired from its having been used for the purposes of the canal. There is no such provision in this case; and as the pipes are laid down so as to become part and parcel of the land for the time they remain, they thereby improve the value of the land, in the same manner as buildings erected upon the land, and the whole must be rated accordingly. I entertained some doubt at one time whether the right of the company to remove the pipes might not prevent their being rateable in respect of the increased value of the land; but upon reflection it appears to me that that makes no difference, because they must be rateable upon the same principles as buildings are which may be removed at the end of the term. There are cases which in principle are similar to the present. Thus a person who had the exclusive occupation of a waggon way, and not a mere right of passage, has been held to be rateable. Upon these grounds I am of opinion that the property is rateable. Secondly, that it is rateable to the extent of the value of that which, for the time, constitutes part of the freehold. Thirdly, I am of opinion that the rate is properly made in Brighton, and not in Rottingdean, because the rate must be upon the land occupied by the company, and here the land occupied is in the parish of Brighton." Holroyd, J. "The first point is decided by many cases which are similar in principle to the present." [He then referred to Rex v. St. Nicholas, Gloucester, and Rex v. Hogg, post.] "I think, therefore, that so long as the company use the land for the purpose of their pipes, they are rateable, for they have the exclusive occupation of that part of the land in which their pipes lie; and that they are rateable for the entire profits of that land, part of them arising from the gas pipes placed in the land." Littledale, J. "The rate must be upon the land. Here the pipes being fixed to the land, the land and pipes are to be considered as one thing. The only difficulty in the case is, whether the company are to be considered as occupiers of land. They are authorised, with the consent of the commissioners, to break the soil for the purpose of laying their pipes. Now in Dyson v. Collick, (5 B. & A. 600,) it was held that the contractors for making a navigable canal, having, with the permission of the owner of the soil, erected a dam of earth and wood upon his close, across a stream there, for the purpose of completing their works, had a possession sufficient to entitle them to maintain trespass against a wrong doer. This is an authority to show that the company were virtually in the occupation of this land, and being in the exclusive occupation of that portion of land in which their pipes lay, they are rateable within the principle laid down in Rex v. The Corporation of Bath, and Rex v. The Rochdale Waterworks Company."

b. Pipes.

A company empowered to lay under ground through the streets of a town main pipes for the conveyance of water, are rateable in the parish where the main pipes lay.

Rex v. Rochdale Waterworks Company, 1 M. & S. 634. The proprietors of Rochdale Waterworks were rated in the township of Spotland for main pipes for the conveyance of water belonging to the company, and being fixed in the ground in the township, and the profits arising therefrom within the township. By 49 Geo. III. intituled, "An Act for the better supplying the Inhabitants of the Town of Rochdale and the neighbourhood with Water," the appellants are incorporated and empowered to lay under ground, along the streets and highways, in the township of Spotland, main pipes for the conveyance of water; and authorises the inhabitants of the township, with the consent of the company, to lay down pipes, communicating with such main pipes, to their respective houses, paying to the company rates for such privilege and water. In pursuance of this act, main pipes and branches are laid and used in the township, and divers of the inhabitants pay rates to the said company. The company were assessed for the pipes. Lord Ellenborough. "Whether the occupiers of the houses are or are not rateable in respect of the advantages derived to them from the use of these collateral pipes, does not affect the present question. The question here is, whether the company, as occupiers of the main pipes, are rateable? What difference does it make whether it be a reservoir of so many feet square, or a pipe of so many inches in diameter? I own I cannot distinguish this case from Rex v. The Corporation of Bath." Le Blanc, J. "If this rate on the company had been simply on the leaders which carry the water to each house, the argument might have been of weight; but the rate is imposed in respect of the main pipes and the profits arising from them." Rate confirmed.

A company, who occupy lands by their pipes, is rateable, although another person is rated for the herbage of the surface.

A warrant from the crown to use a pond in a royal park, for limited

Rex v. Chelsea Waterworks Company, 5 Bar. & Adol. 156; 2 Nev. & M. 765. Part of the pipes, reservoir, &c., belonging to this company are situate in the Green Park, and are laid in the ground for the conveyance of water to persons paying the company for the same. The herbage growing on the surface, including that under which the pipes pass, is rated in the hands of the ranger of the park. The reservoir is situated in the Green Park, and was formerly a pond. It communicates with the pipes and with the water trunks, and forms part of the company's works. In 1725 permission was given to the company, by a warrant from the king, to use the purposes, and as tenants at will, gives the grantee an interest in the soil, which makes him rateable.

pond and the park as a reservoir, and to dig the ground for laying pipes. Under this warrant the company have ever since used the pond, and have made the reservoir, and laid the pipes in the Green Park, and have conveyed water into the reservoir, and through it in its progress to the houses they supply. The tanks are a part of the reservoir. About two years ago, when improvements were made in that vicinity, the company were required by the crown to cleanse and reconstruct the reservoir, and to brick the sides and bottom, which they did under the superintendence of the crown surveyor; at the same time they erected other works for cleansing the surface of the water while in the reservoir, and keeping it at a proper level. The company have no interest in the basin, or in the soil, other than is conveyed by the royal warrant, nor do they occupy it further than as above stated. The use of it is not essential to their purposes, but it is beneficial to them by enabling them to charge their main pipes without working their engines at the head of their works (a), and the company are by this means better enabled to use the engines when they think proper for the supply of other districts than those communicating with the reservoir, and for other purposes, and in particular, it may be useful in case of fire. The fish in the reservoir have been taken by the deputy ranger, the company not objecting; and the company have been always restrained from making alterations in or doing repairs to the basin, unless by the express permission of the crown surveyor, and under his inspection. They pay no rent, and are paid for supplying the palace. The question was, whether any of the works in the Green Park were rateable. Cur. adv. vult.—Denman, C. J. "With respect to the pipes laid in the park it was admitted by the learned counsel for the appellants, that unless he could distinguish this case from those in which it was decided that pipes of similar companies laid in the streets were rateable, the rate in the present instance in that respect must be confirmed. The ground of distinction was, that here another person was rated for the surface of the land under which the pipes were placed. But we are clearly of opinion that this makes no difference. That part of the soil which the company occupied was not included in that rate. Upon this question the court expressed a clear opinion in the course of the argument. The only reason for deferring our judgment was, that we might have an opportunity of more attentively considering the effect of the royal warrant under which the reservoirs were made. We have done so, and we are of opinion that it gave to the company as much interest in the space where their reservoirs are made as in that where the pipes are laid. It is impossible to distinguish one from the other. Their interest, indeed, in the former is expressly, in the latter by implication at will only; but a tenant at will is, until the will be determined, an occupier of the land; and as the company are, on the authority of the decided cases, the occupiers of the land filled by the pipes, they must be considered as the occupiers of that where the reservoirs are constructed. They appear to us to have the exclusive right in a portion of the soil in both cases, though for a limited purpose only." Rate confirmed.

But such company must have an interest in the soil, and not merely an easement.

It is necessary to distinguish between an easement, and an interest in the soil. The grantee of the former is not rateable. A power given by statute to render a river navigable, does not necessarily give the undertaker any interest in the soil, except in the land which they purchase. So also the grant of a right of way, of a right of common, of the privilege, not exclusive, of taking stone from the quarry, does not constitute the grantee an occupier. In all such cases the person in possession of the land is deemed the occupier, and liable to be rated for the value of the land increased by the use of it.

Mere licence to get stones from a quarry is insufficient.

Rex v. Trent and Mersey Navigation Company, 4 B. & C. 57; 6 D. & R. 47, in which case the proprietors of certain limestone quarries agreed to deliver to a canal company, yearly, such quantities of good limestone as the latter should direct, at the rate of 7*d.* per ton, and if they should at any time neglect to deliver the quantities required, it should be lawful for the company to enter upon the lands, or limestone quarries, of any of the proprietors, and to take such quantities of limestone as they should think proper, paying 2*d.* per ton. The proprietors having failed to make the supply, the company entered, and worked the quarries for more than twenty years, according to the contract, and they were, therefore, rated as occupiers. Rate confirmed. Abbott, C. J., having adverted to the fact, that no one beside the company had got stone from the quarries, since they first entered to work them for themselves, proceeded—" But the right of the company was merely to get what stone they might think fit: there was nothing in the contract to prevent the owner from giving to others also the privilege of getting stone in the same quarry. The company, therefore, had not the sole and exclusive occupation, but a mere privilege, and consequently were not liable to be rated."—Order of sessions quashed.

b. Pipes.

A company authorised to make a river navigable, and to build bridges, sluices, locks, &c., and to levy tolls, have only an easement in the river, and are not rateable as occupiers of the river, though they are rateable for the locks, &c.

Rex v. The Mersey and Irwell Navigation Company, 9 B. & C. 95; 4 Man. & R. 84. By 7 Geo. I. certain persons, therein nominated undertakers, were authorised, at their own cost, to make the rivers Mersey and Irwell navigable from Liverpool to Manchester, and to maintain such navigation; and for those purposes to open, scour, enlarge, or straighten the said rivers, and to dig or cut the banks thereof; and to make any new cuts, trenches, or passages for water in the adjoining lands, as should be necessary for the navigation of boats and other vessels, and if necessary, to cut and remove trees, gravel beds, &c., which might hinder the navigation; and to erect such bridges, sluices, locks, &c., as should be necessary where they should think fit, and to turn any highways, and make towing-paths near the rivers, and do all other things necessary for the maintenance and improvement of the navigation of the said rivers, first giving satisfaction to the owners of property taken or destroyed for the purposes of the act. In consideration thereof, the undertakers and no others were to take certain tolls for their own proper use and behoof; and that the said rivers should for ever thereafter be deemed navigable from L. to M., and that all the king's subjects with their goods, &c., might have free passage thereon, with boats and other vessels, &c., without hindrance, paying such rates or duties as were appointed by the act. The company was incorporated by 4 Geo. III. The sessions held that the company were rateable for the whole line of navigation within the township to which they were in this instance assessed, in respect of the land taken and used by them for the Mersey and Irwell Navigation, the towing-paths, wears, locks, cuts and sluices, and assessed the annual value of the profits at 2,600*l.*, and ordered the rate to be reduced accordingly, being of opinion that the amount of the tonnage as originally stated in the rate (2,908*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*) was overvalued. Lord Tenterden, C. J. " I am of opinion that the company of proprietors are not rateable for the ancient bed of the navigable part of the river; and inasmuch as the rate, which the sessions have affirmed, is made on them as occupiers of that part of the navigable ancient bed of the river which is situate in the township of Barton-upon-Irwell, the order of sessions must be quashed. It does not follow, however, that the whole rate ought to be quashed by this court, even on these proprietors, much less the whole rate on the whole parish. Some matters there are which, according to the present state of the case, appear to be rateable; such as the new cuts, which are made through the soil of which the proprietors were actual purchasers. They must be considered, in respect of those cuts, in the same light as the proprietors of any ordinary canal. So of the locks; and the only question will be as to the amount. I say nothing about the towing-paths; for there seems to be some question whether the facts as to the length of those in the township are correctly stated. But inasmuch as there is one sum now applied to a subject for which the company are not rateable, joined with a subject-matter for which I think they are rateable, the inclination of my mind is to quash the order of sessions, and send the case to them that they may rate such parts as are rateable according to their own judgment, if they can come to any proper conclusion upon the question." Bayley, J.

b. Pipes.

"When this question was first presented to my consideration in Rex v. Thomas, it struck me that the company were liable to be rated in respect of the navigation and the other property; but on further consideration, I think that with reference to the navigation, viz. the navigable bed of the river, I was wrong. In order to make them rateable, they must be within the words of the 43 Eliz. 'occupiers of land or houses,' and it struck me at first, that inasmuch as they had a right to have the bed and banks of the river upheld, to hold the water, which water they were to use, they might, perhaps, be called the occupiers of that land which was so covered with water, and which held the water so afterwards to be used. But when, after considering the subject, I find that they can maintain no description of action which an occupier is capable of maintaining, I am now disposed to think that the correct view of the case is not that they are occupiers of the land covered with water, but that they had an easement only in the land. Where the proprietors of a canal purchase the land, and are themselves owners of the soil, they are rateable, on the principle that they are the occupiers of the soil which belongs to them; but in this case, the soil, as far as we can form any judgment, does not belong to this company. They have only a qualified right to use the land, to deepen the channel of the river, and make the soil fit for the purpose of holding the water, which water they are afterwards to use; but subject to the right of navigation being vested in them, and subject to the right they have that the soil shall continue to hold the water in which the navigation is to take place, the soil remains in the ownership and occupation of those persons to whom that soil originally belonged. When the company make cuts under the powers of the act of parliament, which authorises them to buy the land for the purpose of making these cuts, they are, with reference to those cuts, proprietors and occupiers of land, and therefore rateable in respect of that land. As they have a right also to erect wears, and dams, and locks, those wears, and dams, and locks, being on their own land, become their own real property; and they are the occupiers of that land on which those wears, dams, and locks, respectively are, and they are therefore rateable in respect of them. But, for the reasons I have given, (which I have thought right to state, having, on a former occasion, expressed an opinion that the navigation was rateable,) I am of opinion that they are not liable to be rated for the navigation. It seems to me, therefore, that the proper course is to send the rate down to the session for amendment. For, if the rate be quashed, this consequence will ensue; namely, that a rate will be levied in respect of a bygone time, and the former overseers of the parish will be reimbursed by rates to be levied, not on the persons who were occupiers at the time when the expenditure took place, but by a rate on those persons who have become occupiers since that time. For these reasons I think the case ought to go back to the sessions, that they may rate those parts of this property which ought to be rated."—Littledale, J. "I am entirely of the same opinion, that the principal subject of this rate, viz. the navigation, is not rateable, and I think the case ought to go back to the sessions to have the rate amended. The inconvenience mentioned by my brother Bayley, would certainly arise if the rate were quashed entirely, but for that I should have thought it more convenient that this part of the rate should have been quashed altogether. It seems to me there may be some difficulty, but we have nothing to do with that, in ascertaining how those locks and towing-paths are to be rated. The rate is an entire rate on the whole profits, and I do not see how it is possible to say how much a lock or a towing-path produces. Suppose they were to make 2,000*l.* annual tolls, how can it be ascertained what proportion of that sum is contributed by the locks and towing-paths? That, however, is a question for the sessions." Parke, J. "I agree with the rest of the court, in thinking that the order of sessions should be quashed. The question has been argued with much ability, and at last is reduced to a very simple point, namely, whether we can pronounce that these defendants are, on this finding, 'occupiers of lands.' If they are occupiers of lands, they are rateable; if they are not

b. Pipes.

occupiers of lands, they are not rateable. Many of the early cases of rateability seem to have proceeded upon a disposition of the court, (pardonable, but, perhaps, not strictly correct,) to extend the operation of the statute of Elizabeth, so as to include as large a fund as possible in the rate. The law on this subject was at length settled in Williams v. Jones, 12 East, 346. It is clear, from that case, that no one can be rated unless he be an inhabitant or occupier, and these defendants are not inhabitants. The question then is, whether they are occupiers of land? If they have a mere easement, they are not rateable. Persons who have a right of common, a right of way-leave, or a right of ferry, are not rateable. This subject-matter of rate cannot be well distinguished from the case of a ferry, from which the owner of the ferry derives a particular benefit, and from the use of which the public also derive a benefit. In Williams v. Jones, the owner of the ferry had repaired the landing-place, which was parcel of a highway on the bank of the river, and had a post fixed in the ground there, to which the boats were usually moored, and yet he was held not to be the occupier of the highway, though he had a special power and privilege as to a part of it. Now in this case it is quite clear that as to the bed of the river, this company had only a special power; they had not the exclusive occupation of any part of it. It seems to me, therefore, they are not rateable for the bed of the river. No person can be an occupier unless he has the exclusive right to enjoy some portion of the soil. It will be found that that obtains in the case of the gas companies. There the companies who have gas pipes have the exclusive right to enjoy a portion of the soil; they have the exclusive right of occupying, by means of these pipes, that portion of the soil in which the main is. But in this case the company have no exclusive right to occupy any part of the soil of the bed of the river. As to the locks, if it shall appear that the property of the soil (where the locks are made) is in the company, they will be rateable. As to the cuts made at the outset of the navigation, (the property being in the company,) they are rateable in respect of them. There may be a difficulty in affixing the quantum of rate; that, however, is not for us, but for the sessions to settle. They will fix that according to the degree of productive value which they may ascertain to arise from the occupation of this particular part of the soil. It seems clear, on the whole, that in this case the company are not rateable for the bed of the river, for they have merely an easement in it. Probably, certain acts which they have exercised might be primâ facie evidence of their being owners of the soil; but the moment the statute is looked at, it is quite clear that those acts are referable to the powers they have under the statute, and not to any exclusive right to the possession of the soil. It seems to me, therefore, that they are not liable to be rated for the bed of the river, having only an easement in it, but that they are liable to be rated for the cuts, for they are owners of the soil of them, and derive a benefit from them, either directly in the shape of toll, which they receive from other persons, or indirectly in respect of what they receive from their own customers; and whether they receive it from other persons who pay toll, or receive it from their own customers at the end of the voyage, makes no difference, as the enjoyment of that land is profitable to them in both cases, and for that profit they ought to be rated. As to the remaining question, it will be whether they are owners of the soil on which the locks are placed; if they are, and if they have the land on which the locks are placed in their own use, if they have the right of possession, and receive the profit arising on that, they will be rateable." Lord Tenterden, C. J. "All that we can pronounce is, that we quash the order of sessions; the rate is not brought up before us." Order of sessions quashed.

Exclusive right test of occupation.

Rex v. Thomas, 9 B. & C. 114; nom. Rex v. Avon Company, 4 Man. & R. 23. By an act of parliament certain persons were authorised to make the river Avon navigable from B. to H., and to maintain such navigation; and, for those purposes, to clear, scour, open, enlarge, or straighten the river; to dig and cut the banks, to make new cuts, trenches, or passages for water through lands adjoining; and to build bridges, sluices, locks, &c., and to do all other things necessary for making and maintaining the navigable passage, first giving satisfaction to the owners of lands; and commissioners were appointed to settle what satisfaction every person should have for such proportion of his lands as should be cut, dug, removed, or made use of for carrying on the undertaking, and to settle what proportion of such purchase money or satisfaction every person, having a particular estate or interest in any of the premises, should have for his respective interest; and, in consideration of the expenses to be incurred, the undertakers were authorised to take, for their own proper use and behoof, certain tolls. The undertakers made the river navigable. A cut and lock were made in the respondent parish at the expense of the proprietors, who still continue to cleanse the river. No specific toll is payable for passing the lock or cut, but for this purpose they form part of the navigation of the river, and are substituted for the natural river. None of the appellants reside in this parish. The navigation is eleven miles in length; three of which are in the respondent parish. The length of the cut, &c. in that parish is 300 yards. The clear annual income of the whole is 4,000*l.* The river was rated at 100*l.* and the cut at 5*l.* This case was argued before Rex v. Mersey, and after giving judgment in that case, Lord Tenterden said, "The question is precisely the same as in Rex v. Mersey; and we are of opinion, that the proprietors of this navigation are not occupiers of land covered with water by part of the river Avon, and are not liable to be rated for the same. We agree with the sessions in deciding that the cut or navigable canal which was actually made by this company upon land purchased by them, and the lock which is erected on such land, are, according to all the authorities, fit subjects to be rated to the poor." (a)

But the company have such an exclusive occupation of the cuts and towing-path as to make them rateable.

When the verdict of a compensation jury has been made a record of sessions by statute, and the company take possession, no conveyance is necessary.

See statute of Anne, Rex v. Thomas, supra.

Bruce v. Willis, 3 P. & D. 220; 11 A. & E. 463. The plaintiffs were rated in Hanham, a hamlet of Bitton, to a poor-rate; in replevin it appeared they, the proprietors of the navigation of the river Avon, under the 10 Ann. c. 8, and of the 47 Geo. III. c. cxxix. had purchased lands, &c., made the navigation and works, but the 10 Ann. c. 8, not containing any power to make a horse towing-path, 47 Geo. III. empowered them to make a horse towing-path, and for that purpose to take the lands over which the towing-path was set out, and to repair it, and build bridges and culverts for the better making of it; and by the same act they were enabled to purchase the necessary lands, or to treat with the owners for the damages to be done in the execution of the act. By virtue of the 10 Ann. the predecessors of the plaintiffs made the river Avon navigable, and the plaintiffs have so continued the same, and have made new cuts, and also set out a towing-path for men along the river and cuts. Part of these new cuts, and also a lock and a towing-path for men, were made by the company in the hamlet of Hanham, and are the subject of the rate. After the 47 Geo. III. the plaintiffs made a horse towing-path, and have repaired it, and put up for the convenience of the landowners, and persons using the navigation, gates and bridges. Part of this towing-path, about two miles in length, running partly by the river and partly by the side of the cut and locks, is situate in Hanham. A public footway runs for about 1,518 yards along the same line, and was used as such before the 47 Geo. III. Of the land taken for the towing-path, about six feet in width is used for that purpose; the remainder is depastured or otherwise occupied by the occupiers adjoining the pathway. There are gates across the towing-path, which are the property of and are repaired by the plaintiffs, who also repair the towing-path. That part of the towing-path in the hamlet is for the greater portion not fenced off from the adjoining lands, so that the cattle of the adjoining occupiers

(a) In this case Lord Tenterden, in giving the judgment of the court, observed, "that if there should happen to be in any parish no new cut made, or any profitable building erected, but land should be bought for locks and wears, which are in themselves unprofitable, it might be contended that the company would not be rateable at all for the land so taken."

may stray upon it, but such occupiers have never been rated fo it. The towing-path is used by plaintiffs and by such persons as are authorised to use the same by the above acts, and by no other persons whatsoever. The plaintiffs have paid to the owners of the said lands annual sums for the same, taking receipts in this form :—"23rd March, 1822. Received, &c., for two years' towing-path rent, &c." The 47 Geo. III. gives power to purchase such lands, but no conveyance was ever made to the company for that purpose of any lands in Hanham; but two inquisitions were taken under the above acts, and the company, previous to the making of the said towing-paths, gave a satisfaction to the respective owners of such lands as were required for the navigation, for damage done to them, by payment to some of them respectively of a general sum or annual payment, and to others such a sum in gross by way of damages as a full recompense for the same. The plaintiffs receive the tolls to their own use, and the undertaking is profitable. Ever since the completion of the towing-path for horses, the plaintiffs have been rated in Hanham for the cuts and towing-path in the hamlet, and have paid the said rates. By one of the inquisitions taken on 25th August, 1720, it appeared that the jurors having viewed certain lands in Bitton, and having heard evidence on the part of the landowners and of the undertakers, found that for making the said river Avon navigable a cut and lock were necessary, and that for the said cut and lock the undertakers had occasion for the ground there staked over; and they assessed damages as a full recompense to be paid by the undertakers for the same thirty years' purchase, at and after the rate of 40*s.* an acre, viz. to every lord or owner of the land wherein no other person hath any term the full number of thirty years' purchase, and to such termors as have estates depending on one life ten years' purchase out of the said thirty years, and in like manner fifteen years' purchase to termors for two lives, and eighteen years' purchase to termors for three lives. Like compensation was assessed for lands necessary to be taken for a towing-path; (which was the old towing-path for men.) The jurors also assessed damages to B. S. for the tithe of hay and corn which would be lost by the new cut and towing-path, and the sum of 18*l.* to the churchwardens of Bitton towards the relief of the poor, in satisfaction of the loss sustained by persons having right of common in the grounds so to be made use of. The second inquisition was taken in 1813, under 10 Ann. c. 8, and without a jury under 47 Geo. III.; and by that it appears that "H. Creswick, of Hanham, having attended in pursuance of a notice, &c., and it appearing that he is the owner, &c., of freehold ground in the said parish, adjoining to the said river, a part of which is also required by the proprietors of the said navigation for making a horse towing-path; and we having heard evidence as to the value of the said land, and the damage that will be done thereto, do adjudge, settle and determine, that the said proprietors pay unto H. Creswick, his heirs and assigns, thirty years' purchase, at 5*l.* 5*s.* per annum for every acre of land in Bitton which he holds discharged of commonable rights, and so in proportion, &c.; and also that he be paid by the said proprietors the sum of 5*l.* 5*s.* per annum per acre, and so in proportion, &c., for any other land belonging to him in Bitton which shall be taken and used by the proprietors for the purpose aforesaid, which annual payment is to be considered as a satisfaction and remuneration to all persons having any interest or claim whatever to such last-mentioned land or any part thereof;" and the question was, if the proprietors were liable to be rated as occupiers. Lord Denman, C. J. "More facts have been stated in this case than were necessary, as the question is whether, on the construction of these two acts of parliament, and on what has been done under them, the company have not such an occupation of the cuts and towing-paths as to make them liable to a rate? I entertain no doubt that they have such an occupation. Suppose a person to trespass on the land of another, who thereupon brought his action,—if the jury gave damages amounting to the whole value of the land, and the trespasser continued in possession, although there would be no conveyance,—can it be doubted that he would have such an occupation as would render him liable to be rated? But that case is much weaker than the present; for here, by the 10 Ann., upon payment of the sum of money agreed on between the parties or assessed by a jury, the Company are authorised to enter upon the lands, and 'use and enjoy the same to and for their own proper use and benefit.' It seems that by an inquisition in 1720, the jury have assessed thirty years' purchase for lands then taken by the company, on which the cuts now rated were made, and the latter have accordingly entered upon and enjoyed the land. The jury then awarded compensation, parcelling out the amount among the different lifeowners. There can be no doubt, therefore, that on this transaction the fee passed to the company. With regard to the towing-path also, I think that the company have such an occupation as makes them rateable. It is true that the adjoining landowners have a qualified right of way upon it also; but what part of the country is there in which the most powerful proprietor can claim the sole and exclusive occupation of all his land?" Littledale, J. "By the 10 Ann. c. 8, s. 2, in order to carry the act into effect, certain commissioners are named for settling all differences which may arise between the undertakers and the proprietors of lands adjoining to the Avon, and to determine what satisfaction such persons shall have for the lands made use of by the navigation, and to adjust and settle what share of such purchase-money or satisfaction the tenants of such landowners should have. It seems to me, therefore, that under this act, although not so explicitly expressed as in more modern statutes, the company had full power to purchase lands. The section then goes on to enact that, if the landowners refuse to agree with the undertakers, the commissioners may impanel a jury, who are to assess 'such damages and recompense as they think fit,' and 'the value and recompense so to be assessed and decreed' shall be binding, and the orders, sentences, or decrees so made shall be set down in writing, and be kept upon record amongst the records of the sessions of Somersetshire and Gloucestershire. It is very true that in this case there has been no conveyance of the land on which the cut and locks have been made; but that appears to me to be unnecessary, because, where a jury have assessed compensation, and the inquisition is made a record, that of itself is sufficient title. With regard to the towing-path, the 47 Geo. III. contains more express powers than the 10 Ann. for the purchase of the land required, and it enacts, like the 10 Ann., that every judgment of the commissioners acquiesced in by the parties concerned, and every verdict of a jury, shall be made a record of quarter sessions; as to the towing-path, therefore, also no conveyance would be necessary. The question then is, what was done by the inquisition under 47 Geo. III.? The inquisition certainly does not speak distinctly as to the purchase of the land; but, when thirty years' purchase is directed to be given for it, there can be little doubt what that means. With regard to other land taken, a perpetual rent is directed to be paid of 5*l.* 5*s.* per acre; and upon the whole it seems to me that under both acts land was purchased by the company. It is, however, not necessary to investigate whether the company have the fee or not; for, even if there ought to have been a conveyance, and they have been erroneously let into possession, they are still liable to the rate. I think it therefore unnecessary to go into the numerous cases that have been cited." Williams, J. "I have never doubted that, when a company makes a cut for the purpose of improving the navigation of an ancient navigable river, they are as much rateable as if they had made a canal, and in all such cases it is clear that the soil of the cut is vested in the company, and never could be intended to remain in the original owners. Here, then, the company make the cut and enjoy the land; and I entirely agree with my brother Littledale that, even if they have not the legal title, they are liable to be rated. The argument of the attorney-general appears to have been more directed to the towing-path than to the cuts, as he contends that there was no exclusive occupation of the former; but sect. 17 of 47 Geo. III. only gives the right of way over so much of the towing-path to the landowners as adjoins to their respective lands, and then only for watering their cattle, and enacts 'that no other person shall use the same except for purposes relating to the said navigation, and except in such places as the course of the said towing-path hath been of right used as a common or private way.' It is clear, therefore, that but for this section the company would have had the exclusive occupation even against the adjoining landowners, who by the act now enjoy a mere easement. I think, therefore, that the company have clearly a rateable occupation." Coleridge, J. "I entirely concur with the rest of the court, and think that the Company were the exclusive occupiers both of the cuts and the towing-path. A great deal of discussion has taken place on the point, whether they were owners of the soil or not. I do not at all hold they were not so, and think the absence of any conveyance immaterial; but that question is only important as showing whether they have exclusive occupation of the land or not. Abundant evidence is furnished here to show that they have such an occupation. Besides which, the two statutes explain the whole matter; those acts authorise the company to take land for the purposes of their navigation, and they have done so: if so, they are rateable." Judgment for the defendants.

b. Pipes.

The grant of the "navigation" passes only an easement.

Aire and Calder, trustees, not rateable for it.

Rex v. Aire and Calder Navigation, 9 B. & C. 820; 4 Man. & R. 728. The 9 & 10 Will. III. gave to certain undertakers authority to make navigable the river Aire, and for that purpose to cleanse and scour the same, and dig and cut the banks. By a subsequent act reciting that the legal estate and interest in the navigation of the said river, and divers messuages, mills, warehouses, buildings, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, were vested in trustees, they were authorised by deed to sell and convey in fee such messuages, mills, lands, or tenements, belonging to the undertakers, or to convey in fee, by way of mortgage, as well the said navigation as also all or any messuages, mills, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, being the property of the undertakers: Held, that the word "navigation" imported an incorporeal hereditament, and that it authorised the trustees to mortgage in fee that incorporeal hereditament, and the first act having given the undertakers an incorporeal hereditament only in the bed of the river, they were not rateable to the poor as occupiers of the river Aire.

Nor are the company rateable for a dam erected to make the river navigable.

Rex v. Aire and Calder Navigation, 3 B. & Ad. 139. The company were rated for a dam, and the case stated that the rivers Aire and Calder were rendered navigable by 10 & 11 W. III. c. 19; 14 Geo. III. c. 96; 1 Geo. IV. c. xxxix; and 9 Geo. IV. c. xcviii. The river Aire forms the boundary between the respondent townships and those of Ferrybridge and Knottingley, as far as the mills after mentioned. Opposite these it divides itself into two branches, the northern branch separating Brotherton from Knottingley, the southern passing through Knottingley. On the Brotherton side of the northern branch is an ancient mill called Brotherton Mill, with a mill-dam across that branch of the river, forming in part the head and fall of water by which the mill, when in operation, was worked. Half of the dam is in Brotherton, and half in Knottingley, abutting on one side upon the mill, on the other side upon land held to the use of the undertakers. The mill and dam existed before the navigation, and were leased to trustees for the undertakers of the navigation, fifty years ago, but are now dilapidated, out of use, and unoccupied. On the Knottingley branch of the river are other ancient mills (vested in trustees for the undertakers in fee), to which belongs a second dam, extending across the southern division of the river. This, the Knottingley dam, lies near the Brotherton dam before described, and the two together form a pond or head of water. Since the Brotherton mills were dilapidated, the Knottingley dam has been substantially repaired by the appellants, for the use of the Knottingley mill, and of the navigation in common. A side cut mentioned in the rate, but concerning which no dispute arose, was made by the undertakers, with a lock in the respondent parish, for passing vessels from the level above to that below the Brotherton and Knottingley dams. There is a similar cut for the same purpose on the Knottingley side. The water of the river Aire is held up, and the river rendered navigable, by the above-mentioned dams, from the lock in the side cut in Brotherton township, for 9,823 yards upwards, within which distance it runs through six townships (including Brotherton), each maintaining its own poor. No tolls or dues are specifically taken for passing a dam or lock: the only toll is an equal mileage toll, charged according to the length of the river or canal, or both actually navigated, and whether any locks or dams be passed or not. No tolls are actually received in the respondent township. The appellants contended that they were rateable only in respect of the canal and lock in Brotherton. The respondents maintained that as the water of the river was upheld, and the river made navigable for 9,823 yards, by the two dams above mentioned; and as one-half of one of the dams was in the respondent township, they were entitled to rate the undertakers for one-fourth of the tolls on the whole line so made navigable, or at least upon that portion of the line which lay within their township. The sessions considered the appellants rateable for a fourth of the tolls upon the whole line, as well as for the cut and lock at Brotherton." Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I am of opinion that this rate must be amended by reducing it to the amount assessed upon the cut and lock. This is an attempt to evade the decision of the court in a former case of Rex v. The Aire and Calder Navigation (supra). We there held, that the undertakers were not rateable as occupiers of the bed of the river, having merely an easement in it. No rate then could be laid upon them for the water of the river made navigable by them; and if so, none could be imposed in respect of the dam; for to rate the dam because it keeps up the water, would be equivalent to rating the water itself. If the water cannot be rated, neither can the dam which holds it up." Littledale, J. "It has been held, that the company were not rateable for the river, and I therefore think they are not so for the dam." Taunton, J. "It has been contended, that the water of this river was holden up and made navigable for 9,823 yards by dams, one of which was partly situate in the respondent township; the undertaker might, therefore, be rated upon the dam for a proportion at least of the tolls accruing upon the water so upheld. But I think that this is a vicious principle, and at variance with decided cases. It might as well be said, that a reservoir which supplies water to a district nine or ten miles in extent, or a lock which acts as a dam or a steam-engine employed to raise water from a lower to a higher level, is rateable in respect to the whole distance to which water is supplied by any of these contrivances, and the profits accruing from that supply; propositions which cannot now be maintained." Patteson, J. "It is very clear that such a rate as this, if it may be imposed, is in effect the same as rating the water. Suppose this were a canal, it would then be rateable all along the line of navigation to the parishes through which it passed, and in that case the rate evidently could not be laid upon the dam. Can it then be imposed upon the dam here, because the line of navigation is not rateable? I agree with my lord, that it is merely an attempt to evade the former decision of the court." Rate sent back to be amended, by reducing it from 150*l.* to 15*l.* 16*s.*, the amount chargeable upon the canal and lock.

b. Pipes.

Blackwater River

Rex v. Chelmer and Blackwater Navigation, 2 B. & Ad. 14. The soil of the river Blackwater is not by the statute vested in the proprietors, but only the privilege of using it in the nature of an easement. See Case, post.

Commons.—Rights of Pasture.

Commons, rights of pasture, &c.

Land, over which there exists a right of common, which affords a beneficial occupation, is rateable; but the party to be rated must not only be the beneficial occupier, but he must have such a possession as will enable him to maintain an action of trespass, which a mere commoner cannot sustain. In most cases, therefore, where the common belongs to a corporate body, the corporation, and not the members individually, must be rated. A mere right of common is not rateable.

Commons.—Rights of Pasture.

A commoner is not rateable for his right of common.

Rex v. Churchill and Booth, 4 B. & C. 750; 6 D. & R. 635. In the parish of St. Mary, Nottingham, are about 280 acres of meadow, to the pasturage of which the burgesses resident in the three parishes of Nottingham, even if they are inmates not renting or holding any tenement, are exclusively entitled, and to turn in three head of large cattle each at certain periods of the year. There are also 650 acres in the sand and clay fields, fenced off into different closes, belonging to different individuals. The burgesses resident in the three parishes, and also the occupiers of ancient messuages in the three parishes, and who, as such occupiers, are severally rated for their messuages, but not for such common right, claim, and such of them as choose exercise, the right to turn in three head of large cattle from Old Lammas-day to Old Martinmas-day in every year, during which period neither the owner of the freehold nor the tenants have, as such, any right to turn in cattle therein; and during that period the pasturage of the fields are of the value of 10*s.* per acre. The several persons named in the notice of appeal had each of them cattle, in either the fields or meadows, during some part of the time the same were commonable, and at the time of making the rate; but none of them were rated for so depasturing their cattle, nor has it ever been usual to rate them. The sessions refused to quash or amend the rate on account of such burgesses and occupiers of ancient messuages being omitted to be rated, from the impossibility of ascertaining and rating the whole of such persons so turning into the said fields and meadows for their actual occupation and enjoyment, there being upwards of 2,000 burgesses entitled so to turn in, besides the occupiers of many hundred messuages, many of whom exercise such right in different modes and at different times, as by turning in one or more head of cattle for a night or a day, and in other ways, and there being no coin small enough to assess some of them, if they were liable to be rated only for their actual occupation and enjoyment. Bayley, J. "In order to prove a person liable to be rated, it is necessary to show that he is an inhabitant, or an occupier of lands, houses, &c. The question here is, whether the persons whose names are alleged to have been improperly omitted out of the rate, were individually occupiers of land? The word common is well known to the law, and Lord Coke says there are four kinds of common of pasture: common appendant, which is appendant to arable land; common appurtenant, for which one must prescribe (in a que estate); common per cause de vicinage, which is but an excuse for trespass; and common in gross, which is so called for that it appertaineth to no land, and must be by writing or prescription. Land lies in livery, but a right of common in grant. Does that for which it is attempted to rate the burgesses of Nottingham lie in grant or in livery? Each has a right to turn three cattle upon certain fields during a certain portion of the year. It is claimed by them as burgesses, and as occupiers of ancient houses. Could they be infeoffed of such a privilege? If not, it is plain they have no right to the soil, but merely an incorporeal hereditament, a right of common by prescription, which is not rateable. The order of sessions was therefore right." Holroyd, J. "It appears to me that the right is vested in the corporation for the benefit of its members. Supposing that there was a possession in law of those fields, so that trespass might have been maintained either by the corporation or the burgesses, I think it must have been by the corporation. But this appears to me a mere incorporeal right, and not within any of the words in the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. Land to which a right of common is attached may, on that account, be rated at a higher value, but the right of common is not rateable per se." Littledale, J. "The burgesses had a mere right of common, and, according to the decided cases, that is not the subject of rating. It is said that the exclusive pasture gave them the exclusive interest. I think it had not that effect, and that they could not maintain trespass as persons having the primam vesturam. The right enjoyed by these burgesses could only be claimed by prescription in the name of the corporation. According to Com. Dig. Prescription (H.) there may be a prescription for sole and several pasture, so as to exclude the owner of the soil, as appears also by Hoskins v. Robins, 2 Saund. 324, and under such circumstances the persons enjoying the right may grant it to others. But in this case no such grant to others could be made by the burgesses; the exclusive right was in the corporation, and they had it but for a limited time, and could only take it by grant or prescription. The burgesses could not take it by either of those modes, which shows that they had a mere privilege of turning on cattle, in respect of which they were not rateable. The order of sessions must therefore be confirmed."

Land, to which such right belongs, may be rated higher. See Kemp v. Spence, post.

Members of a corporate body, which holds in fee certain common lands, exercising their right of common on such lands, are rateable. (a).

Rex v. Watson, 5 East, 480. Appeal against a rate for omitting to rate certain persons, who were resident burgesses, and who stocked the common. Case:—The mayor, &c. of Huntingdon were the owners in fee of lands, which were used as a common of pasture, and stocked by such resident burgesses as thought proper to stock, under certain restrictions. Some stocked fully, others did not, and some not at all. In the latter case, an annual payment was made by those who did stock to those who did not. It was observed by Lawrence, J., that "occupation," properly speaking, implies "possession." Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This is not an incorporeal hereditament. The corporation are the owners in fee of the land, and they dole it out annually, according to the custom, to certain of the burgesses, such of them as take it paying a certain sum to those who do not turn on any stock. Then when the number of those who stock is ascertained, what is there to distinguish them from other tenants in common? Each of them might maintain trespass for any injury done to his occupation in common. It has been decided that a common in gross is a tenement, and it should seem from thence that it is rateable; (b) but without considering that this case steers clear of all difficulty, for I do not consider this as an incorporeal hereditament, but as a corporeal tenement, of which the several burgesses who stock are tenants in common. And we cannot say that an enjoyment of land, which is of such value as that those who do not actually enjoy it, but who might if they so pleased, are entitled to a compensation from those who do, is not something which is rateable: and being rateable, it must be rated in the hands of those who have the beneficial possession." Le Blanc, J., added, "It is improper, therefore, to call it a right of common; because it is holden in fee by the corporation for the benefit of the resident burgesses. The corporation themselves, as a corporation, have no benefit from the land, but the resident burgesses, to whom it is meted out annually by the leet jury. This view of the case avoids the difficulty stated in the argument of rating persons having a right of common running into several parishes; for this is a case of persons having an equitable right to the land, the fee of which is vested in the corporation for their benefit." The rate sent back to be amended by the insertion of the burgesses occupying the land.

Rex v. Churchill, ante, 205.

The trustees of aftermath are rateable where the aftermath was vested in them, and by them let out in pastures at so much per head.

Rex v. The Trustees of Tewkesbury, 13 East, 155. Before the 48 Geo. III. for inclosing lands in Tewkesbury, and for vesting the after or latter math of a meadow called Severn Ham in trustees, the burgesses or freemen of the borough of Tewkesbury, resident within the borough for the time being, and the occupiers for the time being of certain houses situate within the borough, were entitled to a right of common for a limited number of their own cattle only in the Severn Ham, for a certain period in every year, which right of common was, according to the act, afterwards suspended by order of the commissioners, and the after or lattermath of the Severn Ham was by the act declared to be vested in certain trustees, for the burgesses or freemen and principal householders of the borough of (a) On this case being cited in Rex v. Tewkesbury, infra, 145, Lord Ellenborough said, "There each was in possession of a distinct interest in the land, as in the case of a cattle gate, for which he might have maintained an ejectment." And as to cattle gates, see Rex v. Whixley, post.

Tewkesbury, for ever discharged from all right, &c. which any person could have in the same. By the act, the trustees might let and set annually the after or latter math of Severn Ham, or any part thereof, to any persons at the most improved yearly rent; and also might let the lattermath of Severn Ham in pastures for horses, cattle, and sheep, to different persons, in such manner as they should appoint; or they might lease for term of years; and the rents arising from the lattermath of the said meadow should every year be paid and divided between such burgesses or freemen of Tewkesbury, and such occupiers of houses within the said borough as would have been entitled to rights of common upon the meadow, if that act had not passed, according to their respective rights and interests. On the 12th of August, 1809, the trustees not being able to let the said aftermath together for a sum equal to its value, let it out in pastures at a certain sum per head for horses, cattle, and sheep, to various persons, for 295*l.*, but subject to expenses of between 30*l.* and 40*l.* The several persons who took the aftermath in pastures, enjoyed the same by turning in their cattle from the 12th of August, 1809, to the 13th of February, 1810, and the trustees did not occupy it, unless such letting, &c. amount in law to an occupation by them. No alteration has been made since the passing of the act in the proportion of the poor-rates of the parish assessed on the occupiers of the houses there, who were previously entitled to such right of common on the Severn Ham, nor has any deduction been made from the assessments in consequence of the alterations introduced by the act. The question was, whether the trustees were liable to be rated in respect of the after or latter math? When Rex v. Watson was cited, Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "There the corporation could not take in the cattle of a stranger, but here the trustees may contract with any persons to take in their cattle by the year, or by the month, or week; and here not being able to let it altogether, they took in the cattle of different persons at so much a head. Who then can be said to be the occupiers, if they are not in this case?" And afterwards, in giving judgment, he said, "The letting is at so much a head, without any definitive time, or for any definitive portion of the aftermath, nor were the trustees bound to limit the number of cattle, though they might have done so." Grose, J., agreed. Le Blanc, J. "The persons whose cattle were taken in had no definitive portion of the aftermath let to them." Bayley, J. "In the Huntingdon case the portions of those who had a right to stock were ascertained, but here there was nothing to limit the trustees from taking in others." Order of sessions confirmed for rating the trustees.

Where a corporation was seised of certain pasture lands, and appointed a ranger to keep the keys of the gates, clean the ditches, preserve the fences, and impound cattle trespassing thereon; and, at a court held annually, made such regulations concerning their pastures, and the number of cattle each burgess was to turn on, and the sum to be paid in respect thereof, which money after deducting the expenses of management of the land, was distributed among the burgesses who did not turn on. Rex v. Sudbury, 1 B. & C. 389; 2 D. & R. 651. Appeal against rate. Case:—Richard de Clare, about the year 1250, granted certain pasture land, called Portman's Croft, in the hamlet of Ballingdon, to "his burgesses and whole commonalty of Sudbury;" and Charles the Second, by his charter, under which the corporation now exists, confirmed the said grant to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses. The land is inclosed; and the corporation, consisting of a mayor, six aldermen, and twenty-four capital burgesses, appoint the ranger of the commons, to keep the keys of the gates, clean the ditches, preserve the fences, and impound cattle trespassing. They, at a Court of Orders and Decrees, annually make such regulations concerning their commons as they think proper, and give a public notice of them by the common crier; and for the year when the rate in question was imposed, the order declared that every burgess who had a right to turn on his cattle to feed on the commons, should put two head of cattle, and no more, on Portman's Croft. It then appointed the day when the cattle should be turned on, and fixed the price of each head of cattle, which price is always paid by the freemen exercising this right (who amount to more than 100), to the treasurer of the corporation. The mayor, aldermen, and capital burgesses (being resident) enjoy the same right upon the same terms, and some of them exercised it during the year for which the rate was made. The cattle are branded by the ranger when turned on. The whole of the money thus paid to the treasurer, after deducting the expenses incident to the management of the land, is distributed among the poorer burgesses, who have, but do not, on account of their poverty, exercise a right of depasturing cattle. The mayor, aldermen, and capital burgesses were rated, in their corporate capacity, as the occupiers of Portman's Croft; and the questions for the opinion of this court were, whether there was any rateable occupation of Portman's Croft; and if there were, whether the corporation, or individuals who depastured their cattle upon it, were liable to be rated? Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the corporation were the beneficial occupiers of the land in question. We have been pressed strongly with Rex v. Watson, but that case differs from the present in two important particulars. There the individuals who turned on had the exclusive enjoyment of the land, for the purpose of turning on their cattle. No payment was made by them to the corporation, but to those resident burgesses who had the right to stock and did not exercise it. Here it is clear, from the facts stated in the case, that the corporation retained the exclusive right to the possession of the land. They appointed a ranger—he was their servant, and paid out of their funds; his duty was to keep the keys of the gates, clean the ditches, repair the fences, and impound cattle: all these acts are usually done by the occupiers of land. The commoners could not insist upon having the keys from him. If the occupation, however, was in them, they would be entitled to have the control of the gates, and they would be bound to do the several acts in respect of their occupation, which the corporation did by their servant. The corporation received the agistment money paid in respect of the cattle turned on the land; they therefore occupied the land as agisters of cattle. The present case appears to me to fall within the principle of the decision in Rex v. Tewkesbury. The only difference is, that there the common was fed by the cattle of strangers, and here, by the cattle of the members of the corporation. If, however, the exclusive occupation of the land is in the corporation, the principle upon which that case was decided is applicable to the present. The trustees were there considered as taking in cattle to agist, and particular stress was laid by the court upon the circumstance, that there was no letting of any definite portion of the aftermath. Now, in this case, no definite portion of the land is let to any one individual. The corporation do nothing more than take in cattle to agist; they do not even know, in the first instance, how many cattle will come in. For these reasons it seems to me that this case falls within the principle of Rex v. Tewkesbury, and is distinguishable from Rex v. Watson. If it were necessary to overrule either case, I should adhere to the decision pronounced in the former case, which seems to me to furnish a more reasonable rule of construction than Rex v. Watson." Holroyd, J. "This case differs from Rex v. Watson in several particulars. In that case it did not appear that the corporation did any acts upon the land. The temporary ownership seems to have been given up to the three persons mentioned in the case. Here the right of soil is in the corporation; they have the management of the land by the ranger, their servant, who keeps the keys of the gates, and cleans the ditches; at the court mentioned in the case, they annually make regulations with respect to the mode of enjoyment of the commons by the burgesses. The money paid in respect of the cattle turned on, is received by the corporation, though it be afterwards distributed among the poorer burgesses. Many of these acts done by them could only be done in respect of their being in possession of the land. That is perfectly consistent with the exercise of subordinate rights by the burgesses. In respect of any injury done to the land itself, trespass would lie by the corporation, but in respect of any injury done to the right of common, the burgesses could only maintain an action on the case. In Rex v. Watson, the part of the common situated in the parish of St. Mary seems to have been in the exclusive occupation of the three persons mentioned in the case. The objection to the rate was, that those persons were not rated for certain lands in the parish of St. Mary, over which they had commonable rights, which said lands, in the notice of appeal, was stated to be in the respective occupation of the said three persons. The case stated that the mayor, aldermen, &c. of Huntingdon, were the owners and proprietors of large tracts of land within the borough, used as a common of pasture, and stocked by the burgesses, part of which lands, viz. those mentioned in the notice of appeal, was in the parish of St. Mary. Now that part in the parish of St. Mary was stated in the notice of appeal to be in the occupation of three persons named in the case. Those persons appear, therefore, to have had the exclusive occupation of those lands at the time when the rate was made. During that time the corporation could not do any act upon the land; they could not maintain trespass for any injury done to the land. Here the possession is in the corporation, although there be a subordinate right in others. There was no letting of any definite part of the common to the burgesses, there was no rent reserved, but merely something paid for the agisting of the cattle. For these reasons I am of opinion that this case differs from that of Rex v. Watson, and that the order of sessions must be affirmed." Best, J. "I think Rex v. Tewkesbury furnishes a more just principle of construction than Rex v. Watson, and I should be disposed to overrule the latter case, if it were necessary to do so in the present instance. If A. occupies for the benefit of B., C., and D., A. is to be rated. Here the corporation are the owners as well as the actual occupiers of the common, although they occupy for the benefit of individual corporators, viz. first, for the benefit of the burgesses who put in their cattle; and secondly, for the benefit of the poorer sort, among whom the money received is afterwards to be distributed. The burgesses are nothing like tenants in common: they have no interest whatever in the soil; it is clear that the corporation retained possession by their officer; he could not otherwise impound cattle damage feasant, that being an injury done to the occupier of the land. The corporation are even to decide how many cattle each burgess is to turn on. This shows, clearly, the right of occupation to be in the corporation, although the right of turning on be in different members. It seems to me that this is not distinguishable from the case of persons taking in cattle to agist. The corporation must be considered as the owners, for it is impossible to rate any other person; for before the orders of the court are issued, the individuals who are likely to have any interest are unknown." Order of sessions confirming the rate affirmed.—See also Reg. v. Mayor of York, ante.

The corporation of Alnwick are not the occupiers of Haydon Forest, so as to render them rateable, nor the freemen.

Reg. v. Common Council of Alnwick, 1 P. & D. 343. A rate for the parish of Alnwick, was confirmed by the sessions. Case:—The town of Alnwick is an ancient borough, and the freemen are a body corporate by prescription, by the name of "The Chamberlains, Common Council, and Freemen of Alnwick," (the appellants). The common council consists of twenty-four freemen elected for life, from whom four chamberlains are annually chosen. The management of the affairs of the corporation is vested in the chamberlains and common council. Adjacent to the town of Alnwick is a large tract of uninclosed ground, called Haydon Forest or Alnwick Moor, upon which the freemen of Alnwick, and widows of deceased freemen resident within the parish of Alnwick, have from time immemorial been entitled to certain rights or privileges. The appellants were assessed for land as the alleged occupiers of the said moor; and objection that they did not occupy any land in the parish that was common of pasture; it was not properly described; and that common of pasture was not rateable; and, even if rateable per se, was not in the beneficial occupation of the appellants. The most ancient documents in the possession of the corporation relating to the borough, are three charters from the De Vescis, formerly lords of the manor of Alnwick; the first of which, supposed to be of the reign of Henry II., stated, that William de Vesci "granted and confirmed to the men, my burgesses of Alnwick, to hold of me and my heirs, &c., to them, &c., as freely as the burgesses of Newcastle hold of the lord the King of England, and also to have common of pasture in Haydon, and in the moor of Haydon." The second charter, by the grandson of William, confirmed the said common of pasture; and the third charter, by his son in 1290, also confirmed to the burgesses of Alnwick all their liberties, &c. "with common in Haydon, and with all the privileges in Haydon Moor, in the marshes, feeding, and pasture grounds, with liberty to get peat, turves, and brush-wood, as well in the forbidden month as in others; and the burgesses, for the privileges which they are to have in Haydon in the forbidden month, with their liberties, shall give me and my heirs 2*s*. annually." About the year 1700, the corporation inclosed about 700 acres from Alnwick Moor, which are divided into several farms. On March 6th, 1762, by an agreement between the Earl of Northumberland and Elizabeth, his wife, and the then chamberlains and twenty-four common councilmen, on behalf of themselves and the freemen; after reciting a bill filed in Chancery by Lord and Lady Northumberland against the corporation of Alnwick, praying that the rights of the plaintiffs in Alnwick Moor might be settled and declared, and that the corporation might be prevented from demising or inclosing any more of the moor; in order to put an end to all differences, it was mutually agreed (inter alia) that Lord and Lady Northumberland were lord and lady of the manor of Alnwick, and that Alnwick Moor was parcel of the manor. That the freemen of Alnwick were entitled to common of pasture upon Alnwick Moor, upon payment of the rent of 2*s*. per annum for the liberty of depasturing their cattle thereon in the fence-month, and that the freemen of Alnwick have a right to dig as well as cut peats, furzes, turves, and bushes growing thereon, for their own use; and that the lord and lady of the said manor have no right to grant the herbage or vesture of the said moor to their tenants holding by burgage tenure, or any other person whatsoever. That the present inclosures (being part of the moor) should be established to the corporation, but that no new inclosures should be made, and that the soil and royalties of Alnwick manor should be vested in the said earl and countess. That the freemen and freemen's widows should have liberty to get limestones, slates, and freestone, in any of the present quarries, and to dig clay and burn bricks in such parts of the said moor as the lord's bailiff and the chamberlains should think fit, for the use of themselves or the use of any other freeman; and in like manner to dig and take away sand, gravel, clay, and marl for their own use. By an indenture, 30th July, 1811, between the Duke of Northumberland and the chamberlains and common council in behalf of the other freemen, reciting that the freemen of Alnwick were entitled to common of pasture and other rights upon Haydon Moor, the Duke granted a right of common, on two pieces of freehold land, to the freemen of Alnwick, in exchange of their right of common and other rights on a certain portion of Haydon. The Duke of Northumberland is lord of the soil and royalties of the said moor, granting licence to make bricks, get clay, and of making washpools, winning stones, coals, and limestones. About three years ago, the Duke, as lord of the manor, granted to the corporation his licence in writing, for a permanent washpool of stone-work upon the said moor. By a lease of the present Duke to the corporation, dated 29th July, 1833, (after reciting the articles of 1762,) he, as the impropriator of the tithes of the manor, demised to them for ten years, at the rent of 1*s*., the agistment tithes payable in respect of cattle depastured on the inclosed lands of the corporation, and also in respect of the cattle of the freemen depasturing the said moor, on which the freemen were stated in the lease to be entitled to common of pasture. The rent of 2*s*. per annum, reserved for the liberty of depasturing the said moor in the fence month, is regularly paid to the Duke. The inclosures made from the moor previously to 1762, are let to tenants, and the rents paid to and applied by the common council for the benefit of the corporation. The freemen do not ask any permission to turn their cattle on the moor; they know the regulations, and put on their cattle accordingly, without making any payment whatsoever to the corporation for the exercise of their right.

No cattle belonging to the corporation are turned upon the moor, nor is there any occupation thereof by the chamberlain and twenty-four councillors, except by their own cattle, as individual freemen. No profit whatever arises to the corporation, in their corporate capacity, from the moor. The chamberlains and common council exercise the power of making by-laws, regulating the number of stints to be depastured by the freemen, and by the by-laws the moor-grieves are authorised to distrain all cattle depasturing the moor contrary to the by-laws, and the number of stints is regulated by the herd. The chamberlains and common council appoint both the moor-grieves and the herd; the latter of whom, in addition to his salary paid by the corporation, has four stints on the moor, his right to put on which was established in a replevin suit at the assizes. The corporation have frequently employed persons in hoeing up and burning the whins and furzes growing upon the uninclosed part of the moor, and in draining the same for the improvement of the herbage, and in sowing grass seeds where the whins and furzes have been removed. Upon the foregoing evidence, the sessions were of opinion that the corporation were in such occupation of the herbage of the said moor, as trustees for the freemen, and for their benefit. Lord Denman, C. J. delivered the judgment. "This was an appeal by the chamberlains, common council, and freemen of the borough of Alnwick, against a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish of Alnwick, whereby the appellants were assessed as occupiers of land valued at 350*l*. The sessions confirmed the rate, subject to a case which states the facts hereinafter noticed, and at the conclusion, 'that the sessions were of opinion that the corporation were in the occupation of the herbage of Alnwick Moor, as trustees for the said freemen, and for their benefit, so as to render them liable to be assessed to the said rate.' We notice this at the outset, because, generally speaking, this finding of the sessions would have been conclusive upon the question. In this instance, however, from the long statement of facts submitted to our consideration, it is impossible not to perceive that the finding of the sessions was merely formal, and that their real object was to procure our opinion—whether the facts stated warrant their conclusion or not. The principal question accordingly (and into which alone it is necessary for us to enter) is, whether the interest of the appellants in the district (of from 2000 to 3000 acres) called Aydon or Haydon Forest, or Alnwick Moor, in the neighbourhood of the town of Alnwick, be of such a nature as to make them liable to be rated. It is material to observe thus early, that it is found as a fact that the Duke of Northumberland is lord of the soil and royalties of the said moor; and if that finding needed any confirmation, it would have received it from the fact of his having recently granted a written licence to erect a permanent washpool thereon. It is obvious, also, that the original grants to the burgesses of Alnwick were plainly of a right of common, and of that right only. Hence this important consideration arises—that the burthen is clearly cast upon those, who contend that some larger interest in the soil than a mere right of common is vested in the appellants, to show how and when such enlarged interest accrued. The two first grants are from the family of De Vesci, then lords of the manor of Alnwick, and supposed to be about the dates of Henry II. and Edward I. respectively, 'of common of pasture' in Haydon, in the manor of Haydon, to their burgesses of Alnwick. The third grant to the said burgesses, of the date of 1290, by the son of the second grantor, is of certain lands (not material to the present purpose) 'with common in Haydon, and with all the privileges in Haydon Moor, in the marshes, feeding and pasture grounds, with liberty to cut peats, turves, and brushwood, and with all other their free appurtenances and privileges which they were wont to have and use in the times of my ancestors, as well in the forbidden month, as in others;' for which enlarged privilege, during the fence month, 2*s*. annually were to be paid, and the same (as the case states) is regularly paid to the lord at this day. From the two earlier grants, therefore, common of pasture only, and by the third, common of turbary in addition, with an extension of all the privileges over the fence month, were given to the burgesses. And the payment of the 2*s*. annually, as already mentioned, amounts to a distinct acknowledgment of the force and validity of the grant of 1290, by which unquestionably no right in the soil, of a higher nature than that of common of pasture and turbary, passed to the burgesses. Nor do we think that, from the more modern deeds and instruments introduced into the case, any inference of a contrary tendency can be fairly deduced. That of 1811 was for the purpose of effecting an exchange between the Duke of Northumberland and the chamberlains, common council, and freemen of Alnwick, 'of a certain portion of inclosed land belonging to the Duke, adjoining to Aydon Forest or Alnwick Moor, for a certain portion of the said forest or moor;' and it is to be observed, that what is thereby professed to be relinquished to his grace, is not land, but 'all the right of common and depasturage, and other right, title, claim, and interest of the said chamberlains, &c., of, in, and to the piece of ground in question.' The last in order, and the most recent in date, is the deed of 1833, whereby the Duke, as impropriator of the tithes of the manor and borough of Alnwick, for a rent of 2*s*. leased, during a term of ten years, the agistment tithe payable in respect of cattle depastured (amongst other places) upon the said moor, on which the freemen of Alnwick are therein stated to be entitled to common of pasture. We have purposely omitted the articles of agreement of March 1762, though of earlier date than the two deeds lastly noticed, because they have reference especially to the inclosure of upwards of 700 acres of the moor, about the year 1700,—a fact to which considerable importance seems to have been attached, though, with the accompanying explanation, it appears rather to operate in favour of the appellants. That such inclosure was made upon any exercise or claim of right, is certainly not shown;—that it originated in encroachment and usurpation, there is every reason to conclude. The said articles of agreement made between the Earl and Countess of Northumberland and the chamberlains, &c., of Alnwick, after reciting that a bill had been filed by the said Earl and Countess against the said chamberlains, (amongst other things) to establish the right of the former to the soil and inheritance in the place in question, and to restrain the latter from letting or inclosing any part of the same, went on to adjust between the parties that the said inclosure of 700 acres should stand, but that no further inclosure should be made; and that the soil and freehold were to be vested in the said Earl and Countess, as from the earlier documents it is quite clear that they were before. Since, therefore, the Duke is stated expressly to be lord of the soil, and that there is no reason for concluding that the part of the moor inclosed was under different circumstances from the rest, and the chamberlains, &c., formerly sitpulate to inclose no more, it seems clearly to follow that they had no right to inclose at all; for if they had, why should they renounce it? It must certainly be conceded (as was pointed out in the argument) that very large, and with reference to commons generally, unusual rights are by these same articles conceded or admitted to belong to the freemen, such as the liberty to disturb the surface, by digging for clay and gravel, and to cut down whins, wattels, &c., upon the surface; and in other respects also (as appears by the case) they have interfered with it. Seeing, however, as we think we do distinctly, the original relation of these parties to each other, to have been that of lord and commoner, and that there is nothing in any subsequent deed or instrument to satisfy us that the quality and extent of the interest of the freemen has since been varied, we think that the nature of their rights is still, as at first it is shown to have been, that of commoners, though with large and (as we have before observed) unusual enjoyments upon this moor. In coming to this conclusion upon the facts of this case, we have in effect disposed of it, because it was not contended in argument (and could not have been with any prospect of success) that, unless the interest of the appellants in this tract of land was something more than an incorporeal hereditament, the rate could be sustained. It is not needful, therefore, to do more than to observe generally, as to all the cases cited in the argument, Rex v. Watson, Rex v. Aberavon, Rex v. Tewkesbury,

Commons.—Rights of Pasture.

Rex v. Sudbury, and the recent case of The Mayor of York, that there was, undoubtedly, rateable property, and the only question was, whether there was a rateable occupation. Thinking, therefore, as we do, that the first point is in favour of the appellants, we do not enter into the second, and upon that express no opinion. The result is, that the order of sessions must be quashed."

The mayor and commonalty of York are liable to be rated for lands allotted to them in lieu of certain common rights previously vested in the freemen, although the freemen only had the agistment of such lands; but they are not rateable for lands purchased by trustees for the same purpose.

Rex v. Mayor of York, 1 N. & P. 539; 6 A. & E. 419. The appellants were assessed in the township of Heworth for Monk Ward Stray. Rate confirmed. Case:—The lands called Monk Ward Stray, consist of 131 acres and 38 perches of land, situate near the city of York, and in the township of Heworth. Before the 57 Geo. III. the freemen of the city of York, who were occupiers of houses within Monk Ward, were, with other persons, entitled to a common of pasture and right of stray or average, and had immemorially used the same on Heworth Moor, of which G. A. T., lord of the manor of Heworth, was then seised in fee; and also over a farm called Heworth Grange, of which the king was then seised in fee; and also over certain closes called Hall Fields, the Groves Turnstile Close, and Margery Close, of which E. P. esq. and others were then seised in fee. By the said act, commissioners were appointed to settle the value of the right of stray and average, and to award, to the mayor and commonalty, so much and such parts of the parcels of ground respectively as should be a compensation for the rights of stray and average of the freemen; and from and after the execution of the award, the right of stray and average should cease and be for ever extinguished, and the parts so awarded to the mayor and commonalty should be thereafter held by them, exclusively of any manorial rights or interests of G. A. T. and the other owners and proprietors before mentioned, to be exclusively enjoyed by such freemen of the city residing in Monk Ward as for the time being would have been entitled to right of common, stray or average, over the several parcels of land, in case the act had not been passed, and for the same cattle, and under the same regulations as such freemen respectively did or were entitled to enjoy the same. By another act (the 58 Geo. III.) the commissioners were further authorised and required to apply certain surplus moneys arising from the exoneration of the several parcels of land, the subject of the inclosure, from the right of common, stray or average, to the purchase of a further allotment to the mayor and commonalty, to be for ever exclusively enjoyed by such freemen as aforesaid, in the same manner as their previous rights of stray or average had been held and enjoyed. The commissioners, by their award of the 16th day of January, 1822, did award unto the mayor and commonalty, to be exclusively enjoyed by such freemen of the city residing in Monk Ward as for the time being would have been entitled to right of common, stray or average, over the several parcels of grounds by the acts intended to be allotted, in case the same had not been passed, and for the same cattle, and under the same regulations as such freemen respectively did or were entitled to enjoy the same, the following allotments, viz.:—An allotment from the common, containing 68 acres, 3 roods; another do., 18 acres, 18 perches; another do., 31 acres; as purchasers from the devisees of Thomas Withors 8 acres, 1 rood, 20 perches; total, 126 acres, 38 perches. The city of York is divided into four wards, of which Monk Ward is one. The freemen of each of the other wards respectively have rights of common or stray and average over certain other several parcels of land situate near the said several wards respectively, in the same manner as the freemen of Monk Ward had and have over the lands in question. By the immemorial custom of the city of York, a wardmote court of the mayor and aldermen is held annually, at which court four officers are appointed for each ward, who are called pasture-masters, and who enforce the regulations under which the freemen of the wards exercise their respective rights. The pasture-masters perform the duties of their office with the assistance, and under the superintendence, of certain officers called wardens. The mayor and aldermen are ex officio wardens, and the custom is, for three of the aldermen to act as wardens of each of the said wards severally, the mayor being, during his mayoralty, a warden of all the wards. In matters of more than ordinary importance, relating to the several rights of stray, reference is made by the several wardens to the select body of the corporation, called the upper house, and consisting of the mayor, aldermen, sheriffs, and those who have been sheriffs, who possess a general control over the wardens and pasture-masters with respect to the several rights of stray. Pasture-masters have accordingly been annually appointed for Monk Ward since these acts of parliament, in the same manner as before, who, together with the wardens of Monk Ward, have, both before and since the acts and inclosure, appointed a person to be herdsman. The pasture-masters direct all the repairs of gates, fences, bridges, &c. The herdsman's duties are to look after the cattle of the freemen, impound any found trespassing contrary to the regulations, and to prevent cattle straying, &c. The herdsman resides on the lands, in a cottage built for him thereon by the pasture-masters, and for which the herdsman, in all previous assessments previously, has been assessed to the poor-rates, but these assessments have been paid by the pasture-masters. The wages of the herdsman, and all other expenses attendant upon the care and management of the Monk Ward Stray, were before, and are since the passing of the acts of parliament, and the inclosure, defrayed by an annual sum paid by such freemen of the ward for each head of cattle depastured; the amount so paid has been fixed by the pasture-masters, and paid to them by the freemen. That sum has varied according to the annual expenses, from 7*s.* to 15*s.* for each head of cattle per annum, but during 1834, and for the six or seven years preceding, 10*s.* only has been paid annually for each head of cattle turned upon Monk Ward Stray. The pasture-masters render every year an account of their receipts and disbursements for the Monk Ward Stray to the wardens of the ward, by whom such accounts have been audited. The wardens do not receive or pay any money on account of the Monk Ward Stray, nor turn any cattle thereon, nor derive any benefit whatsoever therefrom, nor do the mayor and commonalty receive any money on account of the Stray, nor turn any cattle thereon, nor derive any profit or benefit whatsoever therefrom in their corporate capacity, nor in any other manner, except as any of them may be entitled as freemen of Monk Ward. For several years subsequent to the acts and the inclosure of the allotted lands called Monk Ward Stray, large expenses were incurred by the pasture-masters in the necessary annual expenses of maintaining and improving the same, for the exclusive enjoyment of the freemen; and for raising funds requisite for such expenses, without imposing heavy burdens on the freemen, the wardens and pasture-masters did from time to time lease certain portions of the allotted lands to different persons for short terms of years, at adequate rents reserved to the wardens and pasture-masters; but no such leases have existed since 1829, the rents so reserved and received during the existence of the leases amounting in the whole to at least 2,000*l.*; and all other moneys received by the pasture-masters on account of the Monk Ward Stray have been laid out in maintaining and improving the Monk Ward Stray, except that in 1826 the pasture-masters having a balance in hand exceeding 1,000*l.* which did not seem to be then wanted for those purposes, 498*l.*, part of it, was laid out in the purchase of 5 acres of old inclosed land belonging to Mr. T., and lying contiguous to Monk Ward Stray, in the township, which 5 acres were conveyed by lease and release to the individuals who were at that time wardens and pasture-masters of Monk Ward, and to their heirs, as trustees for the freemen, and for their exclusive enjoyment; and the 5 acres were accordingly added to, and now form part of Monk Ward Stray, and are enjoyed by the freemen in the same manner as the rest; and also the sum of 279*l.*, other part of the balance, was expended in building a cottage for the herdsman, and in erecting a penfold upon and for the purposes of the Monk Ward Stray. Before the acts of parliament and inclosure, neither the mayor and commonalty, nor the pasture-masters or wardens, nor the freemen of Monk Ward Stray, nor any other persons, were ever rated to the poor in respect of the common of pasture and rights of stray or average over the lands, the subject of the acts and inclosure, nor were such parts as formed the open and uninclosed common called Heworth Moor, from which the said 117 acres, three roods, and 18 perches were allotted to the corporation, and now forming part of Monk Ward Stray, ever the subject of rate, but the allotment of 8 acres, 1 rood, and 20 perches to the mayor and commonalty, as purchasers from the devisees of T. W., was rated and paid rates to Heworth township previously to the purchase and allotment. Since the acts, and inclosure and allotment, no rate has ever been paid to the township in respect of Monk Ward Stray, by either the mayor and commonalty, or the wardens, or the pasture-masters, or the freemen of Monk Ward, but during the continuance of the leases above mentioned, the lessees or occupiers thereunder for the time being were assessed towards the relief of the poor in Heworth, the rates in respect thereof being always paid by the pasture-masters, and also the 5 acres purchased of P. T., were, previously to the purchase, rated and paid rates to Heworth. The freemen of the city of York, who are occupiers of houses within Monk Ward, have, since the acts and inclosure, had the exclusive enjoyment of the lands in question so allotted and purchased as aforesaid, called Monk Ward Stray, subject to the same regulations under which they previously exercised and enjoyed their rights of stray or average, so far as such regulations were not rendered inapplicable by the inclosure; and in the exercise and enjoyment of the rights, the freemen did, during the year 1834, turn upon the Monk Ward Stray their cattle, to the number of 200 head. In auditing the accounts of the pasture-masters by the wardens, the balance has generally been in their favour, though in two or three years, on account of the extraordinary expenses, the balance has been against them, but in either case the balance has always been carried forward to the account of the succeeding year. The ordinary expense of the care and management of Monk Ward Stray does not, however, at present exceed 50*l.* a year. The lands adjoining Monk Ward Stray, and before the inclosure forming part of Heworth Moor, have, since their inclosure, let at rates varying from 3*l.* to 5*l.* an acre, as the same are remote from or near to the city of York; and the 131 acres, 28 perches of land, comprised in Monk Ward Stray, are, as pasture land, worth to let by the year from 27*s.* to 3*l.* an acre, and would, in their present condition, let for an entire rent of at least 250*l.* by the year; but the right of common of pasture, and right of stray or average, exercised by the freemen over Monk Stray, by turning on yearly about 200 head of cattle, is worth, for every head of cattle, to each freeman turning upon the same, at least 2*l.* by the year. The questions were, whether there is such a beneficial occupation of the lands called Monk Ward Stray, or any part thereof, in the mayor and commonalty of the city of York, as to render them liable to the rate; and if there be such a beneficial occupation in the mayor and commonalty, in what amount ought they to be rated? Lord Denman, C. J., delivered the judgment. "It appears in substance, that before the passing of the 57 Geo. III. the freemen of the city of York, who were occupiers of houses in Monk Ward, were entitled to the right of stray and average over a parcel of ground called Heworth Moor, and some other parcels of ground, of which certain persons in the said act named were seised in fee. And by the said act commissioners were empowered to extinguish the said right of stray and average, and to assign in lieu thereof a parcel of land to the mayor and commonalty of the city of York, free of all manorial rights, to be exclusively enjoyed by such freemen of the said city as were before entitled to such the right of stray and average before mentioned, and in the same manner as the said right of stray and average was enjoyed. The said commissioners, by their award bearing date the 16th January, 1822, did accordingly set out to the said mayor and commonalty 117 acres, 3 roods, and 20 perches, which, together with 8 acres, 1 rood, and 20 perches, and 5 acres, (which fall under a different consideration from the rest,) amounting to 131 acres and 28 perches of land, form the subject of the present rate. These lands, it is stated, are worth 250*l.* a year to let, but in the exercise of the said right of stray and average by the said freemen, 200 head of cattle are yearly turned on the said lands, and the right in respect of each head of cattle is worth 2*l.* a year. It must be observed, therefore, in passing, that there exists in this case property clearly rateable in its nature, although it may still turn out, upon the further examination of the case, either that no person is rateable, or, as has been contended, that at all events the mayor and commonalty are not rateable. It further appears from the statement, that for the regulation of the rights of the freemen of Monk Ward, officers are appointed at the wardmote of the mayor and aldermen, called pasture-masters, who are themselves subject to other officers, called wardens, of whom the lord mayor is always one, the rest being aldermen. Then follows the statement upon which the whole question turns,—'that the said mayor and commonalty receive no money on account of the said stray, nor turn any cattle thereon, nor derive any benefit in their corporate capacity, nor in any other manner, except as any of them may be entitled as such freemen of Monk Ward as aforesaid.' Founded upon this statement, the argument addressed to us has been, that whatever may be the case with the individuals deriving benefit from turning cattle on the lands in question, the corporation is not rateable: and in support of it various cases have been cited, which, whether distinguishable from the present or not, (we think they are,) furnish instances of exemption from rateability. The cases referred to were Rex v. St. Luke's Hospital, Rex v. Field, Rex v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital, Rex v. Waldow, Lord Amherst v. Lord Somers, and Rex v. Salter's Load Sluice; to which latter might have been added Rex v. Sculcoates, Rex v. Liverpool, and Rev v. Trustees of the River Weaver, in a note to the same case. Of these cases the last mentioned seem to have the strongest bearing upon the present; the others very slightly, if at all, resembling it. The hospitals and the charitable institutions, which were the subject of consideration in the cases first alluded to, are wholly distinguishable from one where, beyond dispute, rateable property is beneficially occupied. In The King v. St. Luke's Hospital and The King v. Field, an attempt was made to rate persons occupying apartments, for the purposes of the establishment in each instance, but the attempt failed, with some warmth of expression on the part of Lord Kenyon in the latter case, because the residence of the persons being necessary, and there being no accommodation beyond that necessity, it must be considered on the same footing as that of the unhappy inmates in the one case, and the charity children in the other. The Rex v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital and Rex v. Waldow, fall under the same consideration. In Lord Amherst v. Lord Somers, the only point decided was, that the occupation of property for the public service cannot become the subject of a rate; and such was the case there, because the property in question (stables) was applied to the use of a regiment of horse guards exclusively, the plaintiff not having had a single horse kept in it. It is to be observed, however, that when in any case the accommodations are more than requisite for the due performance of public duty, such extra occupation is rateable: Rex v. Terrott. The Rex v. Salter's Load Sluice, which is the foundation upon which the others above referred to rest, if this subject had now for the first time been considered, might have created some doubt in the present case; for it is certainly true that Lord Kenyon in his judgment, and indeed very much as the reason for it, relies upon the fact that the parties rated 'were bare trustees, without any interest,' and he refers to the case Rex v. St. Luke's Hospital, as similar in principle. The Rex v. Liverpool, and Rex v. The Trustees of the River Weaver, may be considered as depending upon that case. In Rex v. Sculcoates there was the further difficulty, that no profit appeared to arise in the place where the rate was imposed. In these cases, however, the tolls or dues received were, by the acts of parliament, in each case directly applied to certain specific purposes, and diverted from the control and management of the trustees. Neither the trustees or anybody else derived any benefit from the money received. They, therefore, (the trustees) in each of those cases neither derived any benefit, nor could be considered as trustees for others who did;—a circumstance which distinguishes those cases from this now under consideration. But if the authorities to which we have lastly been referring had borne more directly upon the present case, and had admitted of still less distinction, it would have been impossible to have acted upon them without overturning others, equally well considered, as we think, and decided upon this very subject. And we are clearly of opinion, when we bear in mind the importance of abiding by those decisions, when once made and recognised, so that a corresponding practice may probably have grown up through the country, and, moreover, consider the ease and convenience of this mode of rating, when compared with the assessment of the individuals benefited, that we ought not, except under the pressure of the strongest arguments and the clearest reasons, to depart from what has been decided and done already. We shall doubtless be understood as now alluding to the cases of Rex v. Tewkesbury, and Rex v. Mayor of Sudbury, cited in the argument, and from which we think the present case cannot substantially be distinguished. In the former case the rate was imposed upon the trustees of the Sevorn Harn, a meadow in the borough of Tewkesbury, over which, before the passing of an act of 48 Geo. III., the burgesses and certain occupiers within the borough had a right of common for a portion of the year. By the said act this right was suspended, and the aftermath, over which the said right had been exercised, was vested in trustees, who were empowered to let the aftermath, and they had taken in cattle to agist at so much a head. The profits were to be divided amongst those persons who would have been entitled to right of common before the passing of the act. The trustees, therefore, in that case, received no benefit; but this court held that they were properly rated. In the latter case the rate was upon the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of Sudbury, in respect of a piece of pasture land called Portman's Croft. There, also, as in the present instance, the land was vested in the corporation, and the enjoyment of it resembled, in many particulars, what takes place with respect to the land in question. Persons entitled to turn on cattle paid a stipulated fine, according to regulations from time to time made, for each head of cattle. This payment was made to the treasurer of the corporation, and the profits, after deductions, were distributed among poorer burgesses, who had, but did not, on account of poverty, exercise a right of depasturing cattle. In that case, therefore, the trustees received money, not for their own use or benefit, but expressly for the benefit of others. This court, however, fully approving of and acting upon the authority of Rex v. Tewkesbury, confirmed the order of sessions, confirming the rate made upon the corporation. The Rex v. Watson was then, as it has now been, strongly pressed in argument; but it was there distinguished, and we think properly, because in Rex v. Watson, the decision proceeded upon the ground that the temporary ownership seemed to have been given up to the three persons mentioned in that case, and that therefore they were properly rateable, as the exclusive occupiers of a certain portion of the land. The occupation of the appellants, though not the same precisely, is similar to that in the two cases cited. The pasture-masters are appointed at a court of the mayor and aldermen. The wardens are the mayor and three aldermen. The pasture-masters regulate the enjoyment of the stray, and direct the repairs of bridges, gates, and the like: they hire a herdsman, and have paid the poor-rate for the house in which he lived. It also appears that, during the time that the stray, or part of it, was let to tenants, such tenants were assessed to the poor-rates, and the same were paid by the pasture-masters. Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the mayor and commonalty of the city of York are properly rated for the relief of the poor in the township of Heworth, within which the lands lie, except, as before mentioned, the 5 acres mentioned in the case, which are not, like the rest, vested in the corporation, and from an assessment upon which they ought to be relieved by an amendment of the rate in that respect. The question of amount is entirely for the sessions."

Rex v. Pitt, 5 B. & Ad. 565. Rate for Kyo confirmed. Case: By the 40 Geo. III. c. 25, An Act for inclosing Tanfield Moor, in the parish of Chester-le-Street, it was recited that the Marquisses of Bute and Hertford, and the Earl of Windsor, were entitled to the soil of the common, and to the quarries of stone, and all mines and minerals, except the coal mines, and that W. M. Pitt was entitled to coal mines, opened or not opened, lying and being within and under the said common, together with certain liberties for working, &c., and carrying on the collieries, and carrying away the coals, and that other persons were entitled to rights of common; and it was enacted that the commissioners, after deducting so much of the common as was directed to be set out for public highways and drains, and for a common quarry, common watering-places or wells, should set out and allot unto the Marquisses of Bute and Hertford, and Earl of Windsor, one sixteenth part of the residue of the common as a compensation for their right to the soil, which said sixteenth should be deemed, and was thereby declared, to be within the township of Tanfield; and should set out and allot the remaining part of the common among the several persons having right of common upon, in proportion to the value of their respective messuages, &c. And it was enacted, that all the allotments to be set out to the several persons having right of common upon the said moor, should be deemed and were thereby declared to be situate within and parcel of the same townships and places respectively wherein the lands or estates lie in respect of which such allotments should be made. And the lands allotted to any person or persons for or in right of their respective messuages, mills, lands, or tenements, should be held in the same manner, and be of the same nature and tenure as their respective messuages, &c., in right of which such allotments should be made. The act was not to defeat, lessen, prejudice, or anywise affect the right of W. M. Pitt, in the coal mines opened or not opened, within and under the said common, but W. M. Pitt should for ever hold, work, and enjoy them. Pursuant to the said act, the common was divided, allotted, and inclosed. At the time of the passing of the act, the whole of the common was situated within the chapelry of Tanfield. The lands or estates in respect of which allotments were set out are of various tenures, some being freehold, some copyhold, and some leasehold; and several of such lands or estates are situate within the township of Kyo, and other adjoining townships; and by the clauses in the said act before stated, such allotments became and now form part of the respective townships in which the lands or estates, in respect of which such allotments were set out, are situated, and are of the same natures and tenures as such lands or estates in right or respect of which they are respectively holden. Previous to and for some time after the said division, the coal under the said common was rated to the relief of the poor of the chapelry of Tanfield; but some time ago, the coal under the allotments set out in respect of estates in the township of Kyo, and also in another adjoining township, was rated to the poor-rates for those townships. The coal mines for which the appellant was rated are within and under allotments of the said common, allotted in respect of lands situate within the township of Kyo. Denman, C. J. "The allotments to be set out to the several persons having right of common are to be transferred to the townships and places wherein the lands lie, in respect of which such allotments are made. Now, first, it does not appear that Pitt had any right of common. The soil is reserved to him in all respects as it was before the act, and his coals were then in the chapelry of Tanfield. Then the words of the enacting clause cannot have the operation contended for." Parke, J. "Before the act, the coal and soil were all in the township of Tanfield. By the act of parliament, the allotments set out to the several persons having right of common are taken out of that parish, and are to be deemed situate in the townships and places where the lands lie, in respect of which the allotments are made: what is allotted to the Commons.—Rights of Pasture.

commoners, and no more, passes out of the township. The coals were not allotted to the commoners; the commissioners only set out the surface of the soil, which does not include the coals. It is expressly enacted that Pitt's right in them shall not be affected; but it would be so by the transfer contended for." Taunton, J. "The land substituted for the right of common is made of the same tenure and quality, and is to be deemed as having such local situation, as the land in respect of which such right of common originally existed; that is the whole enactment; and it has nothing to do with the coal. Pitt's right is expressly reserved in all particulars. I have not the smallest doubt that the coals are rateable in the same place as they were before the act. This was the construction first put upon the act, for the coals were rated in Tanfield. Why that was changed, I cannot say. The first construction was right." Patteson, J. "I agree in the general doctrine, that the owner of the surface is the owner of the soil, down to the centre; but the question here turns on the meaning of the word allotment. The act says that the allotments to the commoners shall be deemed to be situate in the place wherein the land lies, in respect of which they are made. Now what is allotted? Not Mr. Pitt's coal mines, for his rights in them are expressly reserved. It is quite clear, therefore, that the locality of his coal mines is not operated upon by the act."

Ranger of a park rateable for herbage, and the water company for their pipes under it.

Rex v. Chelsea Waterworks (ante). The company were rated for their pipes, and the ranger of the park for the herbage.

Wayleave when not rateable.

Wayleaves not.

Wayleave (being a bare easement) not rateable.

Rex v. Jolliffe, 2 T. R. 90. The lessee of a right of way (i. e. a way-leave) over the land of another, paying for it so much per ton for the goods carried over it, is not rateable as an occupier, such way-leave being a bare right of passage, which is an easement and not a grant of the profits of the land, and an easement is not rateable; the land having been before rated in the hands of the occupier of that land.

Wagon-way, with exclusive occupation of the ground, is rateable.

Rex v. Bell, 7 T. R. 598. The dean and chapter of Durham granted certain leases of lands for twenty-one years, reserving to themselves the right of granting wagon-ways over the demised premises, paying damages for the spoil of ground. The chapter then leased to the appellants, &c., certain wagon-ways over these premises, making satisfaction to the original lessee for spoil of ground; they constructed these ways as most convenient to themselves, and prevented all persons, excepting such as were authorised by themselves, from using or going upon these ways; built bridges, put timber all along the way, built two houses by the sides, erected gates, which they locked and opened only when their wagons were travelling. The ground through which the way was made had been let to tenants, who received an annual compensation from the appellants, and these tenants are rated in amount as they were before the way was made. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "I entirely agree with the opinion given in the case of Rex v. Jolliffe, but this case is very distinguishable from that. The question here is not respecting the quantum of the rate, but merely whether the defendants are or are not possessed of property that is rateable to the poor, and on that point there can be no doubt. One ground of argument is, that because the dean and chapter could only grant a way-leave, therefore nothing more than a wayleave passed to the defendants; but we are not to inquire into the titles of the occupiers. If a disseisor obtain possession of land, he is rateable as the occupier of it, without going through the different parts of the case, which show an occupation of the ground by the defendants; it is sufficient to say generally that they clearly appear to be the occupiers." The order confirming the rate must be confirmed. Grose, J. "It is impossible to read this case without seeing that the defendants have the exclusive occupation of this ground. It is stated in the case, that the defendants have inclosed the ground of the extent of five or six acres, thereby excluding 'the lessees of the dean and chapter and their under-tenants, as well as all other persons;' that they have placed gates across the way, erected a bridge, and built two houses on it, which are occupied by the servants of the defendants. They were therefore properly rated as the occupiers of this ground."—Ashurst and Lawrence, J. agreed.

A barge-way rateable, and the tolls taken, are a criterion of value.

Rex v. The Mayor of London, 4 T. R. 21. The defendants were rated for the barge-way and toll-gate in Hampton Wick, Middlesex. The appellants, by an act of parliament, purchased an ancient barge-way or towing-path within H. W. upon the Thames bank, and certain ancient tolls payable in respect of horses drawing barges along the same. The appellants leased the herbage of the way and path for a sum which was appropriated to the navigation; the lessee occupied and paid rates for the herbage. The old tolls were discontinued, and new tolls were taken for all barges navigating between London Bridge and the City Stone, according to the quantity of tonnage; 1½*d. per* ton was payable and paid to the appellants for every barge towed along a certain part of the barge-way, and H. W. is within that limit, and the tolls were collected elsewhere, and not at H. W. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The difficulty has arisen from not considering what is rated. It is not a rate on the tolls, but the close of land called the barge-way, and the toll-gate. Now the questions are, first, 'whether the property be or be not rateable?' second, 'who should be rated for it?' First, the subject-matter of the rate is real property; it is land, tenement, or hereditament, and it is liable to be rated unless it be so circumstanced that there is no occupier on whom the rate can be imposed. But here the city of London are occupiers; for the lessee's interest is confined to the herbage and pasture. And there is no doubt that they are in possession of the actual occupation of this towing-path."

Ferries.

The occupier of an ancient and exclusive ferry, not being an inhabitant resiant within the township in which one of the termini of the ferry is situated, is not liable to be rated there for any share of the tolls of such ferry.

If a ferry be real property, it is not within the 43 Eliz. c. 2.

Parties rateable in respect of tolls have occupied real visible property connected with such tolls.

Ferry and Tolls.

Rex v. Nicholson, 12 East, 330. Case:—The appellant is an inhabitant of Sunderland, which town lies close to the sea, at the mouth of the river Wear, which divides Sunderland from Monkwearmouth-shore. An ancient ferry crosses the river from Sunderland to Monkwearmoth-shore. This ferry, in 1795, was purchased by the commissioners of Wearmouth Bridge; and the ferry and the tolls thereof are leased to the appellant at a yearly rent. Two boats ply all the day, and the fare paid for a person passing in the ferry is a halfpenny each way; and of late years for convenience it has been accustomed to collect the money of the passengers as they enter the boat on either side of the river, instead of when they go out, as done formerly. There is a small boat goes during the night; and the inhabitants of Monkwearmouth-shore, who are accustomed as aftermentioned, pay the same fare of a halfpenny as persons not accustomed do, if they go over in this night-boat. The boats, when not used, have always been locked up on the Sunderland side of the water, close to the place where the passengers get in on that side. The ferry has always, until 1802, (when it was let to T. Wandless, who lived in Monkwearmouth-shore,) been let to persons living in Sunderland, and been rated in Sunderland for the whole of the ferry dues: it has at different times been also rated in Monkwearmouth-shore; but nothing was ever paid to that township until Wandless took the ferry, when the parish of Sunderland having raised his rate, in consequence of his having given an additional rent, he objected to pay, and appealed to the sessions in July, 1805, but the case was abandoned by the respondents, and Wandless's rate was amended, and reduced to half of the tolls of the ferry; and the ferry has since been continued to be rated to Monkwearmouth-shore for one-half of the tolls or ferry dues. The place where the ferry lands in Monkwearmouth-shore is of little or no value of itself, in case it was not used in the ferry-landing. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., (first stating that the case of Williams v. Jones was governed by this,) said, "The rate is here imposed on the tolls merely of the ferry: and the question is, 'whether the proprietor of the ferry, who is not an inhabitant of the township in which he is rated, be liable to be rated for such tolls received by him there?' And this being a question upon the construction of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, it is material to look to the words of it. By that statute the parish officers, by consent of two justices of peace, are directed to raise a competent sum for the relief of the poor by taxation of 'every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal-mines, or saleable underwoods in the said parish.' Now tolls (a) do not come within any one specification of occupancy described by the statute: they are not lands, nor houses, &c. If, therefore, the owner be taxable for them at all, it must be as an inhabitant of the parish out of which they arise: but there is no case in which the word inhabitant in that statute has been held to mean any other than a resident within the parish. In the cases which have occurred of rating in respect of personal property, such as Rex v. Liverpool, and Rex v. Collison, cited in Rex v. Jones, (8 East, 451, 455 (n), 457 (n),) residence was considered necessary to constitute inhabitancy. But we are reminded of cases where tolls arising from navigable canals, to which the tolls of a ferry are assimilated, have been held rateable, without any reference to the question of inhabitancy: and the Wickham case is much relied on, where a corporation was held rateable for market-tolls: but they were the lords of the soil where the market was held, in respect of which they were rated for the tolls. In Rex v. Cardington, the rate was specifically upon the sluices, on that which was local and visible property, and producing profit within the parish; and all the cases where tolls have been held to be rateable, when they are examined, will be found to have proceeded on that ground. But there is no case where tolls detached altogether from local real property have been held to be rateable per se. When, therefore, we are called upon to decide such a question for the first time, I am always disposed to go to the fountain-head, which is the act of 43 Eliz.; and looking at the words of that act, I do not find any of them which extend to rate any person not being an inhabitant of the place, nor the occupier of any of the specific kinds of property mentioned in the act. And not finding any description in the statute which applies to the case of this appellant, I cannot hold him to be rateable for these tolls." Grose, J., of the same opinion. Le Blanc, J. "The appellant is rated specifically as the lessee of the ferry for half of the tolls or ferry-dues in the township of Monkwearmouth-shore; and it is found he is an inhabitant of, and lives in Sunderland: and it is not stated that he is the occupier of any property in Monkwearmouth-shore: and that brings it to the simple question, 'whether a person residing out of the township be rateable there for the tolls of a ferry, which tolls arise and become due to him for carrying passengers and cattle from the one shore to the other, one of which lies in the township?' The origin of his rateability, if it exists at all, must be sought for in the 43 Eliz., which does not extend in terms to this case. It is contended that he is an inhabitant of that township within the act, and that he is also within it as an occupier of real property. Now when the word inhabitant is used as well as occupier, I must consider that by the former was meant a person who was resident in the place; for one might occupy without being resident, and the statute meant to include both; but this appellant is found to have been resident in Sunderland, and in that sense is not an inhabitant of Monkwearmouth. Then, as to his occupation of real property in the latter township; if this ferry and the tolls be real property, still the appellant is not the occupier of such real property, as is mentioned in the stat. 43 Eliz. But they are compared to the tolls of a canal: but in all these cases the parties claiming the tolls for which they were rated had an interest in some local and visible property within the parish, connected with their interest in the tolls. The case of the owner of the packet-boats, Rex v. Jones, comes very near to that of a person who has an exclusive right of carrying passengers and goods in a ferry-boat; but the packet owner was only held to be rateable for his profits in the parish where he resided, and where the boats were kept, and produced the profit to him; and he was considered not to be rateable in any other place to which the boats sailed where he was not resident. The appellant is not, therefore, rateable either as an inhabitant or occupier. Bayley, J. "This person is neither an inhabitant of the township within the meaning of the statute, nor an occupier of any of the species of property mentioned in it. In a statute which mentions inhabitant as well as occupier, inhabitant must mean resident, otherwise it would for this purpose mean the same as occupier. In all the cases of tolls, it will be found that the persons rated were the occupiers of lands within the place, in respect of which the tolls in the whole or in part were payable. In Rex v. Cardington, the party was rated for the sluice, of which he was the occupier, which sluice was real property; and canals are real property: they are land applied to a particular purpose, and the tolls are the profits arising from that use of the land, and are given to the proprietors as a compensation for the use of it in that manner. Here the appellant was not an inhabitant of Monkwearmouth-shore, and he was not an occupier there of any real property, for which he was rateable." Order of sessions quashed.

Ferry and Tolls.

Tolls not within the words of 43 Eliz.

(a) There had been an opinion expressed by Holt, C. J., (3 Keb. 540,) that tolls were rateable.

The owner of a ferry, residing in a different parish, but taking the profits of the ferry on the spot by his servants and agents, is not rateable for such tolls in the parish where they were so collected and where one of the termini of the ferry was situated, and on which shore the ferry-boats were secured by means of a post in the ground; the soil itself at the landing-places being the king's common highway; and the owner of the ferry having no property in or exclusive possession of it.

Williams v. Jones, 12 East, 346. Williams was the proprietor of Porthacthwy Ferry, and of the tolls thereof. It was an ancient ferry across an arm of the sea, the Straits of Menai, and the king's highway from London to Holyhead. There are five landing-places in the parish of Llandysilio, used by the ferry-boats on landing; which landing-places have, for four years, been repaired by Williams, and there is a post fixed in the ground at one of them, to which the ferry-boats are usually moored. The arm of the sea is navigable for all the king's subjects: and they have always of right landed at the several landing-places at their pleasure: and the proprietor of the ferry never had the exclusive use of any of the said landing-places; but has the exclusive right of conveying by his boats, persons, cattle, and carriages, for hire, from a part of the king's highway lying in the parish of Bangor, to another part of the king's highway, lying in Llandysilio. The ferry-boats have been worked by the proprietor's servants; and the tolls paid to his servants, sometimes upon the arm of the sea, a little before the arrival at the landing-places, and at other times upon the landing-places in Llandysilio, after the person paying the same have landed; and the proprietor's servants have paid over the tolls to his agent, residing in Llandysilio. This agent has never been rated; and has paid over such tolls to another agent at Beaumaris, out of Llandysilio. Williams never inhabited Llandysilio. Some observation was made upon the post driven into the soil; but the court considered that this did not essentially vary the question; for the owner of the ferry was not found to have any property in the soil of the highway; and supposing that he had a right to make such a special use of the highway, for the purpose of securing his ferry-boats, that did not make him the occupier of the highway, nor give him any exclusive possession of it; nor could he maintain trespass for any injury done to the soil at the landing-places, which were common to all the king's subjects to land and pass upon. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The decision of this case necessarily follows that of R. v. Nicholson, the question in both being substantially the same."

Lessee of tolls not rateable as such per se.

Rex v. Eyre, 12 East, 416. The defendant was assessed as "lessee of the tolls of the Key Bridge" at Tewkesbury, at the rent bonâ fide paid. Case:—By 48 Geo. III. c. 62, trustees are appointed for rebuilding the Key Bridge across the Avon in Tewkesbury, and for making convenient roads thereto. It enacts, that out of the first moneys arising by the tolls, or out of the first money which should be borrowed upon the credit thereof, the trustees shall repay sums advanced thereon with interest; and all the money which should come to their hands for the purposes of the act should be applied in erecting the toll-houses, and to other purposes relating entirely to the bridge and its avenues, and for no other purpose. "That as soon as the purposes of the act should be carried into execution, and the principal and interest borrowed be repaid, all the tolls imposed should cease, and the new bridge and the approaches leading thereto should thereafter be repaired by such persons as were by law liable to repair the same." The tolls are leased to the appellant. It was not proved that the appellant made any profit on the tolls; on the contrary, it is believed, that the lessee has a most unprofitable taking, and that he will not even clear his present rent. The court observed that the case was imperfect, in not stating either that the lessee was the occupier of any toll-house or dwelling-house within the parish, which was the proper subject-matter of a rate, or that he was an inhabitant of the parish, and in not finding whether the lessee did receive any profit from the tolls beyond the rent which was applicable to public purposes, but merely stating that it was believed that he did not. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "As the court had so recently decided that tolls per se were not rateable, and as the appellant was rated merely as lessee of the tolls, and for nothing else which might have given them a corporeal quality and locality within the parish, such as for a sluice or the like; and as it did not appear that he was an inhabitant of the parish, or made any profit of the tolls, there was nothing stated in the case to raise any question. And though it should turn out to be the fact (which was suggested from the bar) that there was a toll-house (a) attached to the bridge where the appellant dwelt, yet as the sending the case back to the sessions to be re-stated would probably only lead to their inserting as a fact what at present they only stated as matter of belief, that the lessee derived no profit to himself from the tolls, it was better for all parties to quash this rate, and if at any future time the parish thought they could make out a better case against the lessee, they might rate him again."

Fishery.

Fishery.

The lessee of halves with fishings in the river Severn is rateable, as possessing an interest in the soil.

Rex v. Ellis, 1 M. & Sel. 652. The defendant was rated in Westbury-upon-Severn, as lessee of all those fishings of the halves and halven-doles, with the appurtenances to the halves due and accustomed within the river Severn, between certain limits within a manor bordering on the said river, under an annual rent. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The rate has been confirmed by the sessions; we must therefore see that they have done wrong before that we determine that their adjudication ought to be quashed. I will not assume that a fishery, as an incorporeal hereditament, is the subject of a rate. The question then is, whether there be any land connected with this fishery so as to be the subject of rate. What is the thing granted? In 1625, the king grants 'all that our fishery of the halves and halven-doles with the fishings called Unlawater, with the appurtenances to the halves due and accustomed.' I could have wished that the sessions had explained to us, if any lights were afforded by the evidence, the meaning of the term 'halves and halven-doles,' which is not very familiar to us. It has been treated in argument as if it related to half of the river, and the grant being 'with the appurtenance to the halves due and accustomed,' is in favour of the construction of the half ad filum aquæ, which, according to Lord Hale, belongs, by the constant custom of the country, to the lords of the manors on either side of the river; in support of which custom he cites the Lord Barklay's case. But whatever its meaning may be, I think from the grant of 'the fishings with the appurtenances to the halves and dues accustomed,' it appears distinctly that these halves and halven-doles are of the nature of land, or some local limit within which the fishery connected with the soil is to be exercised. I cannot consider it otherwise than as a grant of something territorial. I do not found my opinion on this being a sole right of fishery, or coming within any particular description of fishery under which the soil must pass: but I think that under the circumstances we ought not to quash the order of sessions, unless we are satisfied that the sessions could not, upon any reasonable ground, conclude that by this grant of halves and halven-doles, &c., some territorial right was conveyed. A grant of soil was also inferred from the grant of royal fisheries, as the right to them is in general appurtenant to the soil, and also of the reservation of a rent, and the manner in which the right had been enjoyed." Bayley, J. added, "A mere incorporeal fishery is not within the statute."

Market Tolls.

Market Tolls.

The lessee of market tolls in gross not incident to the soil, is not rateable.

Rex v. Bell, 3 M. & Sel. 221. The Earl of Egremont is lord of the manor of Cockermouth, and owner of the soil of the streets of the town of Cockermouth. He, or his lessees, have from time immemorial collected and received certain tolls of corn sold in the market; the toll has, however, been hitherto collected at the commencement of the market out of every sack brought and exposed for sale. The earl, or his lessees, also receive payments or stallage there from persons using stalls, and exposing upon them such things for sale as are usually sold on stalls; and the earl, or his lessees, take the sweepings of the streets. The market is a market by prescription, and is holden in the public street and highway in the town of Cockermouth, where the sacks of corn are set down for sale, and the tolls are there taken. The tolls of corn are a handful out of each sack; Bell is the present lessee of them, and pays a yearly rent of 50*l.* to the earl, and as such lessee takes the tolls of corn in the market; but he is not an inhabitant of the township of Cockermouth, nor possessed of any property except these tolls. He is rated for "corn tolls." He is not the lessee of the stallage or sweepings; other persons are, who are rated for them. Lord Ellenborough. "I cannot say, upon this statement, that the appellant is an occupier of land. Would he not be equally entitled to the toll, although the sacks were not set down in the market, but were upheld on the shoulders of those who exposed the corn to sale? There is nothing to give this toll a corporeal quality." Bayley, J. "Bell is assessed in the rate for corn tolls, which, it is plain from the statement of the case, were mere market tolls, and not incident to the soil. In Heddey v. Welhouse, (Moor, 474, cited in 2 Str. 1239,) the distinction is well taken; for it is said, if the king grant a fair or market with toll certain to one and his heirs, to be holden in land, which is borough English, and the grantee die, the heir at common law shall have the market and the toll, but the youngest son shall have the stallage and pickage with the soil, by the custom." Holroyd, J. "These tolls would be equally payable if the soil had belonged to another."

The lessee of toll traverse and of a toll-house (which he occupies), is not rateable for the tolls, but for the toll-house only.

Rex v. Snowdon, 4 Bar. & Adol. 713; 1 Nev. & Man. 459. The mayor and burgesses of Newcastle claim a toll for goods brought into the town in consideration of repairing the streets and bridge. The appellant, who was not an inhabitant of St. Nicholas, was the lessee of the toll-house in that parish, at the north end of Tyne Bridge,—one of the ancient avenues of the town. The toll-house is occupied by the appellant's collector, who receives the tolls in the street, and not in the house. The appellant was rated for the "toll-house and tolls collected there." It was contended that this was a toll traverse. Parke, J. "Assuming it to be a toll traverse, the lessee is not the occupier of any part of the soil in respect of which the toll arises." As to his liability, as occupier of the toll-house, Parke, J. said, "that occupation makes him liable to be rated in respect of the profits of the toll-house; but if that were pulled down, or he did not occupy it, he would be entitled to receive the tolls. Assuming this to be a toll traverse, it would be paid for passing over the soil of another: he is rateable for the house but not for the tolls."—See Rex v. Barnes, post.

Reg. v. The Marquis of Salisbury, 3 N. & P. 476; 8 A. & E. 716. The Marquis of Salisbury was rated as the owner and occupier of Ware Bridge. Rate confirmed. Case:—Ware Bridge is situated on a public highway, across the navigable river Lea, connecting the town of Ware with a street partly in the parish of Ware, and partly in the parish of Great Amwell, and is itself in the several parishes of Ware and Great Amwell. It is a wooden and very ancient structure, resting upon piles driven into the soil of the bottom of the river, and on abutments of brick-work on the bank on either side. Attached to the bridge, and resting on piles driven also into the bed of the river, is a house used by the person who collects the tolls. The house is in the parish of Great Amwell. The occasional repairs necessary to the wood-work and frame of the bridge have, during the last twenty years, been executed by the orders and at the costs of the Marquis of Salisbury, amongst which have been excavations of the soil in the bed and banks of the river, for the purpose of driving piles and strengthening the abutments and land-ties. The planking of the carriage-way has in the same manner been repaired by the order of the Marquis; but the road itself has never been repaired by him. The tolls are regulated according to a fixed scale set out in the deeds. They are collected by J. Kent (who resides in the toll-house) on behalf of Robert Everett, who, by a parol agreement with the Marquis, has contracted for the receipt of these and certain other tolls for one year, from 1st April, 1835, at the rent of 261*l.*; one-twelfth part of which was paid at the time of the contract, and the residue of that sum was secured to be paid to the Marquis, by equal monthly instalments of 19*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, by a warrant of attorney duly executed by the said R. Everett and two sureties; but no grant or demise of the tolls had been made or executed to R. Everett. Lord Salisbury is entitled to the tolls under a grant of 6 Car. I. They are of very ancient origin. The case then set out several inquisitions, numerous ancient and other documents, the whole of which are noticed in the judgment and fully detailed in the report.—Cur. adv. vult. Lord Denman delivered the judgment. "This is an appeal against a poor-rate, to which Lord Salisbury is assessed as the occupier of land in the parish of Ware, and the land so occupied is described in the rate as Ware Bridge. It appears that Ware Bridge is partly in the parish of Ware, and partly in that of Great Amwell. It is a wooden structure, resting on piles driven into the bed of the river, and on abutments of brick-work on the banks. Attached to the bridge, and resting on piles driven into the bed of the river, but in the parish of Great Amwell, is a stand or house occupied by the person who collects the bridge tolls. The repairs of the bridge for the last twenty years have been done by the late and present Marquis; and in doing them, excavations have been made in the soil of the bed and banks of the river for the purpose of driving piles, and strengthening the abutments and land-ties. The planking of the carriage-way has been in the same manner repaired by them from time to time, but not the road itself upon the bridge. The Marquis is the grantee from the Crown, in right of the Duchy of Lancaster, of the bridge tolls, in the manner more particularly described hereafter. Upon these facts, if there were nothing more in the case, there would be clearly quite enough to warrant the sessions in finding that there was an occupation of land in the parish of Ware by the Marquis, and an occupation beneficial in respect of the tolls. The actual perception of the tolls in the parish of Great Amwell alone would be immaterial, because the land in Ware would appear to contribute towards the earning them; and the case would seem to be almost identical with that of Rex v. Barnes. (a) the difference that a road-way was placed upon the planking of the bridge, and kept in repair by others than the Marquis, whereas in the case cited, the Bridge Company made and repaired the carriage-way as well as the bridge, could not be considered material, because it would not rebut the presumption of ownership and occupation of the bridge itself and the land on which it stands, arising from the facts before stated. Two circumstances, however, were relied on to relieve the Marquis from the present assessment; the first, that by reason of a demise another person was the occupier; the second, that the nature of the toll itself, and the title under which the Marquis held it, when examined into, showed conclusively that he was not the owner of the bridge or land on which it stands, but that he had repaired the bridge only in respect of the tolls granted to him. With regard to the former, the case states the tolls to be collected by J. Kent, who resides in the toll-toll-house, is rateable in A. pro rata, although the road over the bridge was repaired by other persons.

Where the toll-traverse of a bridge is let at a yearly rent, but not by deed, the owner of the bridge is rateable.

(a) 1 B. & Ad. 113.

Market Tolls. house, on behalf of Everett, and that Everett receives them under a parol agreement with the Marquis for one year, at a yearly rent or sum to be paid by monthly instalments, secured by a warrant of attorney; and that the Marquis has executed no grant or demise of the tolls. Assuming then that the tolls are claimable in respect of the ownership of the land, there is no evidence here that the land eo nomine is professed to be demised at all; there is nothing to show that at this moment the Marquis is not in the possession of the land for the purpose of doing the repairs, indeed for every purpose consistent with the bare collection of the tolls by Everett, at the toll-house. On the other hand, though there is an agreement for a demise of the tolls eo nomine, yet, as by their nature they can only pass by deed, no interest at law has passed out of the Marquis, who must therefore be still considered in possession of them; his intended tenant being in truth only his bailiff for the collection of them. We pass to the consideration of the remaining point of the case. The question intended here to be raised is, whether the toll claimed by the Marquis be toll-traverse, or toll-thorough; in the former case, it would imply the ownership of the land, and then the repairs before mentioned would still be referable, as before they appeared to be to the ownership of the bridge and land; in the latter, no such inference would arise, and the repairs of the bridge would be explainable, as done in respect only of the toll, and as the necessary consideration to render the grant of it valid. The sessions have not found all the facts from which we might draw the legal inference, but, in addition to some facts stated, have supplied us with a considerable portion of documentary evidence. This is not the proper mode of submitting a case for our consideration, and it must not be assumed, because we enter into the examination of these documents, that we will, upon all occasions, inquire into matters of fact properly cognizable by the sessions only. From the documentary evidence it appears that the Marquis derives title to this toll under a grant from the Crown of the reversion expectant on a lease, of the honor, castle, lordship, manor, town, &c. of Hertford. Among the parcels of the grant specially set forth, are these, 'all that toll and all those tolls called traverse, and customs of the lordship and honor of Hertford, in the said county of Hertford, to be taken in manner accustomed; that is to say, of all saleable things passing through the town of Hertford, and also through the town of Ware, Bishop's Hatfield, Thele otherwise Therle, Belbar, and elsewhere in diverse places, in the said county; that is to say, for every cart, &c.,' passing over the bridges aforesaid, &c. The Marquis therefore takes this by the description of a toll called traverse, and belonging to the lordship and honor of Hertford. This grant is of the date 6 Car. I. We are also supplied with an inquisition after the death of Aymar de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, in which the toll is connected with the castle and town of Hertford, and called 'the traverse at the Bridge of Ware.' A minister's account for Hertford of the 35 and 36 Hen. VIII. describes it as 'the toll traverse of the Bridge of Ware;' and in another account of the 1 and 2 Car. I, the minister answers for 16*l.* from the farm 'of the toll travers and customs of the lordship, castle, and honor of Hertford, of all things for sale passing over the bridges of Hertford, Ware,' &c. It cannot be denied that this is strong evidence to show that the toll in question is in its nature toll traverse; it raises a strong probability that Ware is a manor within the honor of Hertford, and that the Marquis is the owner of the wastes in it: the soil therefore may well be in him, and that it is so, is consistent with the facts of repairs before stated. We think that, after this evidence, the burthen was cast upon the Marquis of meeting it by contrary evidence, and that in default of his doing so, the sessions were well warranted in considering it a toll traverse, and in confirming the rate upon him."

Whether toll-traverse, or toll-thorough.

Manor and Quit Rents.

Fines for renewal, and quit-rents, are not rateable.

Rex v. Vandewall, 2 Burr. 991. The lord of the manor was charged for the manor itself, (exclusive of the demesne lands,) consisting of quit-rents, fines for renewal of copyhold, and other casual fruits and profits. The lord was not an inhabitant of the parish. Lord Mansfield. "The rents and profits of the manor are not rateable to the poor, which," he said, "was so clear that there was no need to enter into any reasoning about it." Lord Kenyon, in Rex v. Alderbury, post, observed—"The case of the quit-rents went upon the objection of double rating the same property, in the hands of the landlord as well as the tenant."—See Carlt. 14, and Comb. 264.

Manor and Quit Rents.

TITHES. (a)

Tithes.

The 43 Eliz. enacts, that the parson, vicar, and occupiers of "tithes impropriate, and propriations of tithes," shall be rated. If it were not for this express enactment it would be otherwise, because in general no incorporeal hereditament or mere easement, however valuable, is rateable to the poor. Chanter v. Glubb, 4 Man. & Ryl. 334; 9 Bar. & Cres. 479. And no legal interest in an incorporeal hereditament will pass by demise or contract not under seal, Bird v. Higginson, 2 A. & El. 596.

Rent-charge liable to poor-rates.

Where the tithes have been commuted under the Tithe Commutation Act, "the rent-charge payable instead of tithes shall be subject to the same parochial, county, and other rates, &c., in like manner as the tithes commuted have heretofore been subject."—6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71, s. 69.

The occupier must be rated.

The occupier of the tithes is to be rated; and when they have been granted or demised to another by deed under seal or by statute, the grantee is such occupier. If tithes have been extinguished by statute, then the vicar is rateable in his character as vicar, the rent in lieu of tithes being part of his local visible personal property in the parish. And this differs from rent paid to an inhabitant landlord, because it is not previously assessed in the hand of the tenant, as the rack-rent generally is.

The vicar.

Rex v. Turner, 1 Str. 77. The vicar appealed against a rate for tithes, from which the sessions discharged him. By the Court: "The vicar is chargeable by 43 Eliz., and the sessions hath only power to moderate, not discharge." Order of sessions quashed.

Parson who lets his tithes by parol should be rated.

A parson who lets by contract, not under seal, to each parishioner his own tithes, is properly the occupier, and ought to be rated. 16 Vin. Abr. 427.

The farmer of tithes, who holds the same under a deed, and lets the tithes again, is primâ facie rateable.

Rex v. Lambeth, 1 Str. 525; 8 Mod. 61. The parson lets his tithes to farm: the farmer agrees with the tenant of the land that, in consideration of his paying so much, he shall retain the tithe and gather in the whole crop without dividing. Which of the two is chargeable to the poor-rate, as occupier of the tithes? was the question. The sessions discharge the lessee of the parson, and tax the tenant of the land. By the Court: "The order must be quashed. The farmer of the tithes is primâ facie liable to the poor-rates; and therefore, unless he can throw that charge over upon another, the tax must be made upon him. The tenant of the land in this case can never be said to be the occupier of the tithes; for he is either a person who buys the tithes, or else he is to be taken as only excused from paying any; and nobody can say, but that though the parson thinks fit to excuse a parishioner, he will still remain in point of law the occupier of the tithes. This agreement being only by parol, cannot enure as an underlease of a thing that lies only in grant. Suppose it was the case of underwoods, which are sold standing, and the vendee grubs them up; can it be imagined that makes him the occupier? Or suppose the tenant sells the whole crop standing, will that make him less the occupier of the land? If it should, it would be impossible for the officers of the parish to know whom to charge. We must take this tenant of the land to be like any other buyer of the tithes, since he has no more title to them than any stranger whatsoever; and when the parson or his farmer receives a sum of money in lieu of tithe, that is in law a receipt of the tithe: with this only difference, that it is not tithe in kind. In the case of a composition (as this is) or a modus, it was never thought but that the parson was chargeable as occupier of the tithe; therefore, there being no colour to charge the tenant of the land, the order of sessions must be quashed."

(a) Where a local act empowered trustees to raise money for rebuilding a parish church, and to make a rate for defraying the principal and interest of the sum borrowed, on the "houses, warehouses, shops, buildings, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, rated or rateable to the poor," the tithes are rateable, Rex v. J. of Buckinghamshire, 1 N. & P. 503.

Tithes.

The lessee by deed of lay impropriator is rateable, though the occupiers retain their tithes.

Chanter v. Glubb, 9 B. & C. 479; 4 Man. & Ry. 434, S. C. The plaintiff was lessee for years of the tithes of the parish of Haillard, under a grant by deed from the impropriator. He agreed by parol with the respective occupiers of lands from year to year, and they retained their tithes. The agreement was prospective, and had no reference to the produce of the year. The plaintiff was assessed upon a highway-rate in respect of his occupation of the tithes. During the argument, Lord Tenterden said, "The case of Rex v. Lambeth, (supra,) shows that the parson, though he agrees that the tenants shall retain the tithes, is the occupier within the 43 Eliz. c. 2. If there is no distinction between the words of that statute and the highway acts, that authority is decisive against the plaintiff." And his lordship afterwards added, "In strictness of language there cannot be an occupier of tithe, tithe in its nature not being the subject-matter of occupation. Giving, however, a reasonable construction to these words as used in the highway acts, we must understand the occupier of tithes to be the person who receives the tenth part of the produce of the land. Here the plaintiff was that person, and was therefore properly assessed for the repair of the highway." Bayley, J. "It is very desirable that in questions of this description there should be certainty, and that nice distinctions should not prevail. Here the money payment is the substitute for the tithe. Where the owner of the tithe grants out and conveys any of the tithe to another, that other is the occupier. Where the right continues in himself, he is the occupier. The plaintiff was therefore the occupier in the present instance." Littledale and Parke, Js. concurred. Judgment for defendant.

Lessee by deed is rateable, and not the vicar.

In Rex v. Wilson, 5 Nev. & Man. 119, Patteson J. observed, "That a vicar who has made a lease of his tithes (i. e. under seal) is not rateable."

A rector is assessable in respect of a sum of money payable on tithes in lieu of an allotment.

Loundes v. Home, 2 Bl. 1252. The rector of Crawley was rated for his tithes, payable under an inclosure act, which gave to the rector an allotment in lieu of the tithes of the old inclosures; and where the old inclosures had none, or not sufficient to make such allotment, "they should pay such annual sum to the rector as the commissioners should award, with power to distrain for the same as a landlord. The commissioners awarded that certain owners of land should pay in the whole 42*l.*; and on this sum the assessment was made. De Grey, C. J. "Nothing can be clearer than the law in this case. This is a sum payable in lieu of the tithes of the old inclosures, on account of the inability of the owners to furnish land sufficient to make an allotment. The tithes were before subject to the poor-rates, so would have allotments if made. Why then, in justice, should this sum of money be excused? It is said to be a rent; but the act has indistinctly avoided calling it by that name. It is a mere composition for tithes, and the superadding a power of distress does not turn it into a rent, but rather proves the contrary; for if it were for a rent, the distress would be incident to it, without any special provision in the act." Blackstone, J. "I do not know that it has ever been determined that no rents are assessable to the poor. The King and Vandevald extends only to quit-rents of a manor. But, admitting it to be so, this is clearly no rent, but a parliamentary modus or composition for tithes, for which the parson is liable to the poor's rate. The Queen v. Bartlett, 7 Anne, Viner. tit. Poor, 427; The King v. Lambeth, Stra. 525. The act does not say it shall issue out of the lands; but that in lieu of the tithes issuing out of the lands, the owner shall pay a sum of money, and superadd a power of distress by way of remedy. The land-owner, who pays this sum, is entitled to a rateable abatement for himself or tenant out of the poor-rate, in like manner as if he annually compounded for his tithes." Judgment for defendant.

Tithes.

Such exemption must be express; not implied from extinguishment.

Where by an inclosure act it was provided that the tithes of a certain parish should be abolished, and that in lieu of them the commissioners should award to the rector a certain annual rent, equal in value to a certain portion of the lands in the parish, to be paid by the owners of those lands in such proportions as the commissioners should award; it was held that the rector was liable to be rated to the poor, in respect of this rent or annual payment, the act not having expressly exempted it from that burden. (Rex v. Boldero, 4 B. & C. 467; 6 D. & Ryl. 557.) As to the proportion, see Rex v. Joddrell, post.

Where the tithes were "to be deemed equal in value to one-fifth part of the annual net value of the arable lands," and a corn-rent was to be settled and charged in such proportions, the rector is liable to be rated, the tithes being extinguished.

Rex v. Wistow, 6 N. & M. 567; 5 A. & E. 250. The rector of Wistow appealed against a rate which the sessions quashed. Case:—Before 1830, the rector was entitled to the tithes of corn, grain, hay, and all other great and small tithes arising within the parish. On the 3rd May, 1830, an act passed for inclosing lands in the parish, and for extinguishing the tithes therein. Sect. 25 enacts "that the commissioner shall ascertain and distinguish the yearly value of all the tithes, and of all moduses and compositions in lieu of tithes, arising out of the lands divided, allotted, and inclosed, and out of the inclosed lands, and payable to the rector; and in making such valuation, the tithes of all such lands hereby directed to be divided, &c., and of all the ancient and inclosed lands (except the inclosed fen lands) as shall be arable, shall be deemed equal in value to one-fifth part of the annual net value of the said lands, and the tithes of all such inclosed fen lands shall be deemed equal in value to one-seventh part of the annual net value of such inclosed fen lands; and the tithes of all other lands in the said parish shall be deemed equal in value to one-eighth part of the annual net value of all such other lands; and the commissioner shall ascertain the average price of a bushel of good marketable wheat, in the county of Huntingdon, for seven years next before the passing of this act, and shall ascertain and distinctly set forth how many bushels of such wheat will in his judgment be equal to the annual value of the said tithes; and after such valuation and ascertainment, the commissioner shall determine what sum of money shall be equal to the value of the quantity of wheat so ascertained by him, and such sum of money shall be charged and apportioned by the commissioner, upon such lands and tenements of each and every proprietor, and in such manner as he shall think equitable; and such sum of money, when so apportioned and charged, shall be issuing out of the lands, &c., which shall be charged therewith by the commissioner, and shall be paid and payable by the person or persons who for the time being shall be in the occupation of such lands, &c., to the said rector and his successors for ever, unless altered by the means hereinafter provided, by four equal quarterly payments, (that is to say,) on &c., the first payment whereof shall be made on 25th March, next after the execution of the award, or such earlier quarterly day of payment as the commissioner shall by such award or previous writing as aforesaid direct or appoint; and the said rent hereinbefore made payable, shall be in lieu and full satisfaction and discharge of all and all manner of tithes, both great and small, moduses, &c., arising out of all lands, tenements, and hereditaments whatsoever, in the parish of Wistow. And from and after the apportionment of the said rent, all manner of tithes, and all former moduses, &c., within the said parish, shall cease, determine, and be for ever extinguished; but in the meantime the rector shall be entitled to such tithes as he would have been entitled to if this act had not been passed." The commissioner, on 3rd October, 1832, duly ascertained and set forth the quantity of wheat equal to the annual value of the tithes, and determined the sum equal to the quantity of such wheat, and charged such sum upon the lands of every proprietor in due proportions. And he directed the first quarterly payment of such rent or sum to be made on 25th December then next, and appointed that all tithes, and all moduses, &c., within the parish, had ceased, determined, and were for ever extinguished, as and from the 29th of September then last past. The commissioner's general award was signed on the 17th of January, 1833, the previous writing of 3rd October, Tithes.

1832, being annexed thereto; and they are now both inrolled with the clerk of the peace for the county of Huntingdon, pursuant to the directions of the act. The rector of the parish has ever since been, and is now, in receipt of the amount of the said corn-rent, in lieu of his former tithes, and in October, 1834, was rated to the poor in respect of such corn-rent. The question was, whether the rector is liable to be rated for such corn-rent? Lord Denman. "I am of opinion that the objection to this order is well founded. The value of the tithe may, indeed, depend upon the meaning of the words used in the statute, 'annual net value of the house and grounds;' but it does not follow that it will affect the question of rateability, whether the land be valued with or without the deduction of the poor-rate. I do not know whether the legislature, if they had meant such a deduction to be made, would have estimated the tithe in this proportion. But I think it better to rest the decision on the more general ground, by the adoption of which, we may hope to prevent future controversy. The proper principle is to be found in Rex v. Boldero; that, if a sum of money be given to the parson in lieu of tithes which were rateable, 'that money will also be rateable, unless the liability is taken away by express words in the statute.' That furnishes a safe rule; and, applying the rule to the present case, the corn-rent, not being expressly exempted from liability, is rateable to the poor." Littledale, J. "The question turns on the expression, 'annual net value.' The poor-rate is to be deducted from the gross value of the land; but the parson's proportion of the net value will be still rateable. Suppose two parties to occupy land of precisely the same quantity and quality, requiring the same expense of cultivation, but the land of the one being tithe-free, and that of the other not. In making a poor-rate, the occupier of the tithe-free land would be assessed higher than the other; but the same quantity of poor-rate would be obtained from each land, because the tithe would also be rated, which is obtained from the land not tithe-free. There the parson has one-tenth of the gross produce, which he finds in the fields after it has been cultivated; that tenth goes to his stack-yard, and he must pay the poor-rate on it. Here, instead of that tenth, he gets a certain proportion of the net annual value; that is, of the value of the land to the occupier. The occupier has to lay out so much in cultivation before he gets the produce; this, and the poor-rate which he pays on his titheable land, will be deducted; then the question is, what he gets ultimately of the gross produce; that is, the 'annual net value.' The parson, therefore, is not rated twice over. In general, net value would be that which is left after deducting, besides the deductions I have mentioned, the tithes also; but that construction cannot be adopted here. The poor-rate, therefore, if the parson be rated for the rate which he receives in lieu of the tenth of the gross produce, will be the same on the farm which is tithe-free, and on that which is not tithe-free, as it ought to be." Patteson, J. "The last case on this question is (a) Mitchell v. Fordham. There the question was, whether the enactment, that the corn-rent should be 'free from all taxes and other deductions whatsoever, except the land-tax' exempted it from parochial taxes; and it was held that it did. That was in accordance with Rex v. Boldero, where it was decided that whatever is substituted for tithe shall be rated, unless the liability be taken away by express words. Here it is said that the 25th section does take away the liability, by the words 'annual net value of the said lands and grounds.' Let us, therefore, consider the effect of the word 'net,' as here used. It is connected with the annual value of the land only, not of the tithe. The tithe is to be deemed to bear certain proportions to the annual net values of the several kinds of land. But it is not said that the net tithe is to be deemed to be in those proportions; and, as the legislature uses the word net in one case and not in the other, I must suppose that different things are meant. Therefore the fifths, sevenths, and eighths of the annual net value of the respective sorts of land are made equivalent to the tenth of the gross annual produce of such lands. How far such an estimate is just, I will not discuss. But if this was not the meaning of the legislature, the expression should have been 'net annual value of the tithes.' It is said that the intention of the legislature was to exclude the risk of collision between the parson and parishioners. In Rex v. Lacy, Bayley, J., places some reliance upon the circumstance that the rectors' allotments were not exempted from rate. Here the same argument arises; for the rector has, by sect. 24, an allotment in lieu of the glebe, which is not exempted. In respect of that allotment, therefore, there must be the risk of collision." Williams, J. "The question turns on a certain, and, if you please, an arbitrary mode laid down by the legislature for ascertaining the value of the tithe. Its yearly value is to be deemed to be in a certain proportion to the annual net value of the lands. If the proportion be too small, that is the fault of the legislature; unless there be words expressly showing that what is received in lieu of the tithe is to be exempt from rate, many cases have decided that the composition is to follow the fate of the tithe. Here there are no such words." Order of sessions quashed.

Where tithes are not extinguished, but the owner of the land pays rent in lieu thereof, the vicar is not rateable.

Rex v. Great Hambleton, 1 Ad. & E. 14. The vicar appealed against an assessment on him "for a money payment in lieu of tithes." Rate quashed. Case:—By a local act the tithes were to be held in fee by the owner of part of the lands in the parish, and his lands were to be charged with an annuity payable to the vicar: the interest in the said title and land had now vested in Mr. Nuich, the appellant. Littledale, J. "It is plain that these tithes are not extinguished. No distinction can be taken between the lands belonging to Mr. Nuich, and those in the rest of the parish. If the tithes were extinguished, and a rent was paid in lieu of them, it would be difficult to say the vicar was not rateable for the rent. But here is no extinguishment." Patteson, J. "There is no difficulty or doubt in the question." Order of sessions confirmed.

The rector is not liable, when the rent is to be paid "free of all taxes."

The rector is in some instances exonerated from this burthen by an arrangement for the extinguishment of tithes in an inclosure act. Thus, where by such an act it was provided that a certain corn-rent, "free from all taxes and deductions whatsoever, except land-tax," should be issuing out of the lands to be inclosed and other lands in the parish, and be paid to the rector in lieu of all great and small tithes, &c., it was held that this corn-rent was not liable to be assessed to the relief of the poor. Mitchell, v. Fordham, 9 D. & R. 335; 6 B. & C. 274.

So where a private inclosure act enacted that there should be issuing and payable to the vicar out of the lands a yearly sum, "free and clear of all rates, taxes, and deductions whatsoever," it was likewise held that the vicar was not rateable to the poor in respect of the yearly sum paid to him. Chatfield, v. Ruston, 5 D. & R. 675; 3 B. & C. 863.

If tithes are extinguished the vicar is liable for the rent.

Rex v. Joddrell, 1 Bar. & Adol. 403. The tithes of a parish had been extinguished by an act of parliament, and a corn-rent given to the rector in lieu of it; and it was held that the rector was rateable for the tithes.

If one be entitled to the tithe of all fish caught in the parish, he is rateable in respect thereof.

Rex v. T. Carlyon, 3 T. R. 385. The appellants were the proprietors of one-tenth of all fish caught and brought on shore within the parish of St. Paul, for which they and their tenants were rated. The only question made was concerning the rateability of fish, being a property yielding a certain annual profit. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "This question is decided by the express terms of 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, which, after mentioning parsons and vicars in the number of the persons who are to contribute to the relief of the poor, enumerates (among other things) tithes impropriate and propriations of tithes, in respect of which the rate is to be made, and indeed the spirit of the law coincides with the words of this statute; for the legislature intended that when rates were made, every person should contribute according to the benefit which he received within the parish. Here the parties receive a certain benefit arising from the tithe of fish in this parish, and run no risk whatever. Then it is said that only property which is visible should be rated; but I think it is carrying the rule of exemption too far; for oblations and other offerings which constitute the rectorial or vicarial Oblations and other offerings are rateable.

Tithes.

dues are rateable." Buller, J. "Supposing the fishermen are not rateable, Rowls v. Gell (post), governs this, for here the persons entitled to the tithe of fish run no risk, and their profits are certain, and for that they are rateable."

Mines.

9. Mines.—Coal.

By the express words of 43 Eliz. c. 2. s. 1, every occupier of lands, &c. "and coal mines," is rateable. The express mention in this statute of "coal mines" has been considered to be a virtual exception of all other mines. The adventurers or occupiers of metallic mines, &c., are therefore not rateable. Nor the owner, though an inhabitant of the parish, if he receives a money rent, or sometimes ore; but when he receives a portion of the raw mineral without incurring expense or risk, he is then rateable, and it seems as the occupier of so much land. It is difficult to understand how the owner could be said in this case to be the occupier of land; and even if he be the occupier of land, he is the occupier of a mine, which is virtually excepted out of the statute.

Whether a particular excavation is a mine or a quarry, depends on the mode of working, and not on the mineral produced. Rex v. Dunsford, post.

The lessee of a coal mine rateable, although he derive no profit from the mine.

Rex v. Parrott, 5 T. R. 593. Case:—The appellants are in possession of the colliery (for which they are rated), under a lease, by which they were bound to work the colliery, and to pay a sixth part of the money produced by the sale of the coals, without any deduction for the expense of working; upon an average of the last three years, the appellants paid 3001*l.* 15*s.* 7½*d.* as a sixth part of the produce of the coals sold, and that they lost two and a half farthings on every ton of coals; the colliery always was and still is a losing adventure from the first of their taking it; and they must have known it at the time they took it; and their inducement for taking it was that when they had worked out the coal in this colliery, they would be able to get at coal of their own, which was adjoining; and this was a cheaper way of getting at it than any other which they could have adopted. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is said that this burthen is to be laid where the benefit arises; but that rule cannot hold in a variety of instances that might be put. Suppose a landlord makes so hard a bargain with his tenant, that the latter derives no benefit from the farm, must not the tenant be rated to the poor? The landlord certainly is not liable. This case differs from Rowls v. Gell in this respect, that was the case of lead mines, which are not rateable under the statute of Elizabeth; and there the question was, whether or not the lessee were rateable for certain annual profits which he received without any risk on his part? Of the decision in that case it is not necessary for me to say anything at present. I will form my opinion upon that question when it arises again. But here the property is rateable under the express words of 43 Eliz. c. 2. It appears in the case that there has been a clear profit of 1000*l.* a year since the lease was granted; and the question is, whether the appellants, who are occupiers of these mines, which it is admitted are rateable property, are or are not liable to be rated in respect of this property? Their objection is, that they have made an unprofitable bargain with the lessors; but we cannot examine into that; it being sufficient to make them liable, that they are the occupiers of rateable property." Order of sessions confirmed.

Coal mine ceasing to be productive, is not rateable.

Rex v. Bedworth, 8 East, 387. J. W. was assessed for a colliery, as of the annual value of 200*l.*, at 5*l.* Case:—The colliery was demised for a term of years to W., at 200*l.* annual rent, whether coal should be gotten or not: and the coals were totally exhausted, and the mines ceased to be worked. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "In Rex v. Parrott, the subject-matter itself was profitable, and produced value to the owner, though the immediate occupiers derived no profit from it. But here the mine itself is exhausted, the subject-matter of profit is gone, although the rent, which was no doubt calculated upon the probable average produce of the whole term, be still payable. But with respect to the parish, he is only rateable for the concurrent annual value during the period for which the rate is made; and when the thing which he occupies no longer affords any such concurrent value, the subject-matter of the rating is gone."

Other Mines.

Iron mines are not rateable.

Rex v. Cunningham, 5 East, 478. A rate upon "iron and coal mines" was quashed, because iron mines are not rateable, and ought not to have been rated jointly with coal mines.

Nor the machinery of an iron mine.

Rex v. Bilston, 5 B. & C. 851. The case stated that the mine engine and pit (the subject of the rate) were erected, sunk, and used by the appellants for the purpose of drawing water from iron-stone mines in their occupation. Nothing was raised from these mines except iron-stone. Bayley, J. "Here a person working his own mine has erected an engine for the purpose of working that mine, and which is of no other use: the occupier of the mine, as such, is not rateable under 43 Eliz. c. 2. In many such mines there are rail-roads which greatly enhance the value of the mine, and therefore of the land, but they cannot be rated; and in principle they are on the same footing as this engine. Suppose a conveyance or lease of this mine with the machinery had been made; it is clear the engine would have passed to the grantee or lessee: it must, therefore, be considered as part and parcel of the mine." Holroyd, J. "The engine was not profitable, but burthensome, except as it respects the mine itself: the profits of the mine are exempt from taxation under 43 Eliz. c. 2. The engine therefore is, in like manner, exempt.

Lead mines and the machinery are not rateable.

Governor and Company for smelting Lead v. Richardson, 3 Burr. 1341; 1 Bla. Rep. 389. The defendant had distrained for the poor-rate assessed on the occupiers of the lead mines lying in Alston. The plaintiffs were lessees from Greenwich Hospital; they worked the mine, but did not live in Alston; the profits of the hospital that year amounted to 1900*l.*, but those to the plaintiffs were precarious and uncertain, and some years they gained nothing; no lead mines had ever been assessed, except in an instance or two since making this distress. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The question is no more than this: whether a lessee of lead mines, whereon no rent is reserved, other than a certain proportion of the ore to be raised, is rateable to the poor under the 43 Elizabeth? Now, nothing can be clearer than that these mines are not within the letter of the statute; for the legislature could never intend by the word coal mines to comprehend other species of mines. If they had meant to include them, they would either have enumerated them, or used the general word mines. So that the expression coal mines expressly excludes mines of any other sort, as much as if they had been excepted. And there was a very good ground of exempting them; as from the nature of working them they are liable to more hazard and expense than coal mines are. And at that time, all copper, lead, and tin mines in Derbyshire, Cornwall, and Mendip in Somersetshire (which are the only counties where works of that kind were then established), were governed by particular laws; whereby any stranger, conforming to the ceremonies thereby required, was at liberty to work those mines without any reward to the owner of the soil. And as all these undertakings were attended with infinite hazard and expense, and often ruined the projectors, it is no improbable conjecture that the legislature meant for this reason, and in order to encourage them to proceed in undertakings of this public utility, to except them from any other burthen or imposition than those that the miners' law had imposed. Indeed, if a man has taken a lease of land, with privilege to dig for mines, he may be rated for the land. But that is not the present case. And where the legislature have not imposed a tax, this court cannot do it by construction. For example, the fees of a physician or lawyer are not made liable by the act, and therefore cannot be rated. Upon the whole, as there might be a very good reason for not making these mines liable, which is fortified by usage, and they are not within the letter of the act, I am clear they are not rateable." Mr. Justice Denison was of the same opinion. By Mr. Justice Wilmot.

Mines.

"There is a material difference between coals and other mineral works. Coals are easily found, but a vast deal of time and money is often spent in discovering other mines. The legislature, therefore, considered how dangerous it would be to discourage adventurers by subjecting them to a tax. (a) Another thing which convinces me that the legislature meant only to include coal mines is, that in stat. 31 Eliz. c. 7, concerning cottages, they have used the words coal mines and all other mineral works; which plainly shows they never understood that coal mines would comprehend other sorts of mines."

Landlords not resident within the parish, having leased lead mines, reserving a certain annual rent, are not assessable for such rent.

Rex v. The Bishop of Rochester, 12 East, 353. A lease of the 30th of May, 1805, was made between the Bishop of Rochester and other trustees, and A. Surtees, whereby the trustees demised "all the mines, veins, &c., parcels and wastes of lead ore and other minerals, and also all the seams of coal then open or discovered, or which should or might, during the time therein mentioned, be opened or discovered, in the township lands called Nuckton, in the parish of Hunstonworth, with full liberty to dig and search for pits, &c.; to hold the demised premises for 21 years, yielding and paying therefor yearly, during the said term, unto the said lessors, their heirs, &c., for and in respect of the said lead ore and other minerals, the clear yearly rent of 100*l.*" There were also reserved, by way of rent, certain proportions of such lead ore as should be gotten from and out of the said mining grounds. There was also a separate rent reserved for the coals when wrought, and a rent for damages done to the ground tenants. The lessees were bound to pay all taxes, parliamentary or parochial. No coal mines had been wrought within these grounds. The lessees had other lead mines in the neighbourhood, but had gotten no ore from under the grounds mentioned in the lease, and consequently no proportion of lead ore had been rendered or become due to the lessors. The lessors were rated in 50*l.*, being a moiety of the rent of 100*l.* reserved by the lease, and which was a fair proportion for that part of the mining ground which is in the parish of Hunstonworth; and the lessors, if liable at all, did not object to the fairness of the apportionment. The rate was: "Lord Crewe's trustees for certain annual rent paid them by Easterby, Hall and Co., for the liberty of opening the mines within their lands, spoil of ground, &c., 50*l.* Rate, 8*l.* 15*s.*" None of the lessors reside or have any dwelling-house in the parish. The lessees were not rated in respect of the demised mines. Lord Ellenborough. "The trustees can only be rated as inhabitants or as occupiers within the parish. We have so recently (Rex v. Nicholson, ante, 220; Williams v. Jones, ante, 222;) put a construction upon the word inhabitant in the statute of Elizabeth, as meaning a resident within the parish, that it is unnecessary to discuss the matter again; and the fact of such inhabitancy is negatived by the case. Neither are they occupiers of the property for which they are rated: so far from it, that they cannot maintain trespass for any injury done to property which they are supposed to occupy: and even if they were the actual occupiers of coal mines, they would not be rateable for them before they were worked and productive. (See Rex v. Bedworth, ante, 158.) But this is no more than a contract with tenants for the payment of a certain rent for ores supposed to lie under the surface; and if the tenants should open the ground and raise the ore, reserving a certain proportion of ore to the ground landlords, there is no occupation of anything, within the statute. If hereafter the tenants should open the ground and raise the ore, the trustees will then be entitled to certain proportions; and such profits may come within a different rule, as lot and cope: upon which no question at present arises." Grose and Bayley, Js., agreed. Le Blanc, J. "If the trustees were rateable at all, it must be as occupiers of the mines, or some proportion of them; but here they are rated as for a rent, eo nomine, for which, if they were rateable, every landlord might by the same rule be rated for his rent." Order quashed.

See Rex v. Tremayne, post.

(a) In the report of this case in Blackstone, nothing is mentioned as to these reasons, &c.; and there Lord Mansfield is reported to have said, "In Cornwall there never was a supposition that mines were rateable."

Mines.

Nor where smelted ore is reserved as rent.

Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret, 5 Maule & S. 139. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., delivered judgment. "The appellants were the owners of the lead ore in certain lead mines within the township; not owners of the soil of the wastes in which the mines are situate, but merely entitled to the lead, copper, and iron contained in the veins below the soil. By a lease of the 31st of July, 1811, the appellants leased to Messrs. Alderson all their mines of lead and lead ore, with certain smelting mills and other premises therein described, and with proper powers for working the mines for twenty-one years, yielding and paying to the appellants a certain pecuniary rent therein mentioned, and also yielding and paying, rendering and delivering, at or in the smelting-mill or place situate within the manor of Healaugh Old Land and Healaugh New Land, where the same should have been smelted, one full fifth part, dole, or share of all the best ore, earth, lead, and one full fifth part, dole, or share of all the slag or slag earth lead that should be smelted from the ore raised from the mines and premises, the same to be delivered to the appellants free and clear of all dues, duties, costs, charges, and expenses, and from the poor-rates, and all other parliamentary and parochial taxes, &c., or in respect of the said lead or lead ore so to be delivered as aforesaid, or in respect of the said mines and premises. The lease contained a covenant on the part of the lessees to deliver the fifth dole or share as often as the quantity smelted should amount to 400 pieces, or at the end of every four weeks, at the option of the lessors. The rate was imposed upon the appellants in respect of the duty lead reserved by the above lease. This case was argued before us with great ingenuity and learning, and all the authorities that bear upon the point were cited in the course of the argument. The counsel in support of the order of sessions relied on Rowls v. Gell, Rex v. St. Agnes, and Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, and contended that this case was not substantially different from that of Rowls v. Gell, which had been recognised and followed in the two other cases, and that we ought not to depart from the principle there established upon nice and subtle distinctions. We are of opinion, however, that the present case is substantially different from all of them, and that a decision against the present rate will not break in upon the principle or overturn the authority of any one of them. In all those cases the rights of the parties rated, who were the owners or lessees of the mines, and of the adventurers or miners by whom the mines were worked, depended upon the particular custom of the place; and by that custom the parties rated were entitled to and received a certain portion of the mine or mineral in its primitive mineral state; and the court, with perhaps some degree of refinement, considered the parties entitled to and receiving such portions of the minerals as being occupiers of a portion of the mines, that is, occupiers of land within the terms of the statute of Elizabeth; and in the case of the Baptist Mill Company, made, in part of the foundation of their judgment, that the adventurers did not stand in the relation of tenants to the owner of the mine, but in that of mere workmen. It is true that in Rowls v. Gell, the mineral underwent some sort of process before it was delivered to the plantiff, for the case states that the duty of lot was the 13th dish or measure of lead or ore got, dressed and made merchantable, which we understand to mean, made merchantable by scouring or dressing, a process thereby separating the ore from the other matters dug up with it from the mine, but not altering in any degree its original and native quality or character. The plaintiff in that case was also rated for cope, which is explained to be a small pecuniary payment; but no notice was taken of that circumstance in the argument or judgment, nor could it have been effectually taken, because if the plaintiff was rateable for the lot, he would of course have some rateable property within the parish, and consequently his action of trespass could not be maintainable. In Rex v. St. Agnes (post), the party was entitled to toll and farm tin, which are stated to be certain portions of the tin gotten. In the case of the Baptist Mill Company (post), the party was entitled to a definite portion of the calamine stone found or gotten within his district. In the present case, the rights of the parties rated, who are the appellants, and those of the persons by whom the mines are worked, depend upon the terms of a written contract, a lease; by the terms whereof the appellants have demised to others the whole of their mines and veins of lead and lead ore; and therefore they cannot be said to be the occupiers of any part, unless the render or reservation of one-fifth part of the lead to be smelted from the ore raised from the mines, can operate as an exception of a portion of the mines, or of the ore raised from them. A reservation of a part of the thing demised cannot properly operate as a render, and it may be admitted that it operates as an exception. See Co. Litt. 47 a, 142 a. But this is not a reservation of any part of the thing demised; it is not a reservation of any part of the ore, or of the mineral, in its natural and primitive state, but of something of a quality, name, and character, entirely different,—of a metal, produced from that mineral, by the laborious and expensive process of smelting, in which the native mineral is mixed with another matter, viz., with coal or charcoal; and by the effect of fire upon both, a metal is obtained, which is to be considered, for this purpose at least, as entirely different from either of the two, and rather as a manufacture of art and labour, resulting from the use and application of those materials, than the original earth itself. This lease puts the parties unequivocally in the character of landlords and tenants. The reasons upon which the court relied in Rev. v. The Baptist Mill Company, do not apply to this case; but it is brought substantially within the principle of Rex v. The Bishop of Rochester. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the appellants were not liable to be rated for the lead rendered to them under the lease."

Nor where the rent received is for every ton of manganese raised.

Rex v. Tremayne, 4 B. & Ad. 162; 1 Nev. & Man. 194. The owners of certain lands granted to adventurers for twenty-one years a liberty to dig for manganese, and drive adits, &c., receiving 1*l.* 15*s.* for every ton of manganese raised during the term, free of all expense of raising and dressing: all other mines and quarries were excepted. The adventurers opened a mine, and erected buildings, &c., at their own risk and expense; and they are in the exclusive occupation of them. Considerable quantities of manganese had been raised and sold by the adventurers, and 1*l.* 15*s.* regularly paid to Mr. Tremayne, the owner, for every ton so raised; and for this Mr. Tremayne was assessed. The form was: "For manganese dues." During the argument in support of the rate, it was urged that Tremayne had reserved everything but a liberty to dig. [Parke, J. "What portion of the soil does Tremayne occupy?"] He occupies the land that produces the ore. [Parke, J. "He has no right to any portion of the rude ore;" and afterwards added, "The decisions relied on, proceeded on the ground that a certain portion of rude ore was reserved to the lord. If Tremayne, as is contended, is the occupier of the mine, then as such he is not rateable."] Argument: In Rowls v. Gell (post), part was a pecuniary rent. [Parke, J. "That distinction was not pressed on the attention of the court, and the principles on which such property is rateable were not so well understood as they are now."] Without hearing the counsel on the other side, Denman, C. J. said, "The rate cannot be supported. Here the landlord receives a rent, and is not the occupier of the soil, as in Rowls v. Gell. In Rex v. St. Austell the landlord, by the express terms of the grant, was to be paid, not by money, but by the produce of a part of the mine, unless he elected to be paid in money: here he is paid by a sum of money in proportion to the weight of manganese raised, but he has no right to any portion of the ore. If we had any doubt we would permit the rate to stand, that the party rated might bring an action; but we have no doubt whatever: the order of sessions must therefore be quashed." Parke, J. "A party can only be rateable as the occupier of land. Here Mr. Tremayne is not the occupier of the soil; he receives a money rent. The case falls within Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret. It is said that no interest in the land passed, but a mere authority to the grantee to dig. That may be so; and in that respect the case resembles Rex v. St. Austell (post, 165); but then it would follow that Tremayne is himself the occupier by his agents; and if so, as the owner of mines, he is exempt from rateability by the statute of Elizabeth and the nature of the property, and he could not be rated unless for dues. The case is distinguishable from Rowls v. Gells, Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, and Rex v. St. Austell, because here the owner is not entitled to any portion of what may be called the soil. The ground of the decisions in those cases was, that the reserved ore was a portion of the soil, and that the party entitled to it was therefore the occupier; but here, if he was not entitled to that portion of the soil, he is not the occupier; and then this is like the case of Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret, where the reservation was not of a part of the soil, but of something different; and is distinguishable on that ground from Rex v. St. Austell, and the other cases, where a portion of the mineral was received." Taunton, J. "I entirely concur. The distinction is very subtle; but the cases may perhaps be reconciled by distinguishing between a reservation of a rent and a reservation of part of the soil itself. In the latter case the lessor has been considered as occupying that part of the soil which he has so reserved. Here there is a pecuniary rent reserved, and no reservation of any part of the soil. If we were to hold that Mr. Tremayne was rateable here, we should be shaking a well-established principle, that a landlord is not rateable for his rent. And, again: if Mr. Tremayne is to be considered as the occupier of the soil of the mine, and the lessees as his agents, he is not liable to be rated, because coal mines are the only mines mentioned in the statute of Elizabeth, which has therefore been construed to exclude all others." Patteson, J. "I am of the same opinion. The rule is very clearly laid down by Le Blanc, J. in Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, (post, 242): 'Where a person receives without risk part of the produce extracted from the bowels of the earth, he is an occupier of land; but where he merely receives a rent or money payment, there he is not an occupier.' Here Mr. Tremayne is not the receiver of what is extracted from the bowels of the earth, but of money; he is not liable therefore to be rated as an occupier of land." Order of sessions quashed. S. Nor the duchy lessee who has leased all his interest and reserved a money payment.

Reg. v. Crease, 3 P. & D. 434; 11 A. & E. 677. Mr. Crease was rated in St. Austell, in 40*l.*, upon an amount of 1600*l.*, as the occupier of tolls of tin. On an appeal the sessions amended the rate, by reducing the amount to 1400*l.*, and the amount of his rate to 35*l.* Case:—By indenture of the 1st August, 1815, between the Prince of Wales (Duke of Cornwall) of the one part, and Edward Smith, Esq., his royal highness "demised, granted, and to farm let unto E. Smith, &c., all that the toll and farm of tin, or tin toll, which should be gained, arise or be due in any place or places whatsoever, within the several lordships, manors, precincts, or territories, belonging to or being part or parcel of the duchy of Cornwall, in the county of Cornwall, and all profits, advantages, &c., to the said toll and farm of tin, or tin toll, within the several lordships, &c., belonging, with their rights and appurtenances, &c.; and also all the tin mines found or to be found within the several inclosed lands of the said several lordships, &c., with their appurtenances, &c.; and also all that the toll and farm of tin, or tin toll, which should be gained, arise or to be due in any place or places whatsoever within all and every the manors, boroughs, tenements and premises, thereinafter particularly mentioned, parcel of the ancient or annexed possessions of the duchy of Cornwall, in the county of Cornwall, which (with the exception of all mines and minerals) had been sold to different persons, under the authority of the Land-tax Act of the 38 Geo. III.; that is to say, within the manor of Tewington, with its members and appurtenances, whereof different parts were separately sold and conveyed on the 26th November, 1798, to &c. (mentioning the different purchasers), and within several other manors, for a term of ninety-nine years, determinable on lives, rendering a yearly rent. E. Smith covenanted that he, E. Smith, would pay all taxes, rates, &c., wherewith the demised premises were or should be charged. Then he would enter upon the premises demised, and within the same dig and search for tin, and the same tin so to be found, at his free will take and carry away, and do all things necessary to the digging and searching for, and carrying away of tin, and filling up the tin pits and shafts according to the custom of the tin works in Cornwall." The residue of the term granted by this lease is now vested in the appellant, subject to any setts or licenses granted by E. Smith. Within the parish of St. Austell are situate two of the manors mentioned in the above lease, namely, the manor of Treverbyn Courtnay, parcel of the annexed possessions of the duchy, and the manor of Tewington, late parcel of the ancient duchy of Cornwall. Within these manors respectively there are several tin stream works and tin mines, some within parts which are bounded according to the custom of the stannaries, and others within others parts which are not bounded. By the custom of the stannaries, the right of searching and working for tin is vested in the owner of the tin bounds, he paying to the lord of the manor or his lessee the customary toll, which in the manor of Treverbyn Courtnay is $\frac{1}{15}$th, and in Tewington $\frac{1}{10}$th part of the tin gained, free and clear of all risk and deductions. The yearly value derived to the appellant in the parish of St. Austell, under the above lease, is 1,516*l.* The mine from which the principal part of the 1,516*l.* is derived, is called Buckler's mine, and is situate on Boscundle Common, the whole of which is under tin bounds, and is within the manor of Tewington. This is a very ancient tin mine, and has been worked by the present adventurers since the year 1831. The remainder of the 1,516*l.* is derived from mines from which the appellant receives toll tin from the adventurers in kind. On the 17th September, 1835, an indenture was executed, by which the appellant demised to J. Rundle and J. Taylor, the adventurers in the said mine (called Buckler's mine), for the term of twenty-one years from the date thereof, the full and free liberty, licence and authority to enter into and upon all that land and ground comprised within the limits thereinafter mentioned, with full power and liberty to break and open the soil and ground, and to drive any adits and levels, and to sink any shafts, and to make any erections or buildings for digging and searching for tin and tin ore in the said premises, according to the custom of tin works in the said county of Cornwall; and also with liberty, at their or any of their free wills and pleasure, to take and carry away the same, reserving, nevertheless, unto the said appellant the liberty from time to time to enter and inspect the workings of the said mine, and to take up any adits for the purpose of working any adjoining mine, and to keep open, repair and use the same, making reasonable compensation to Taylor and Rundle for so doing, yielding, paying and delivering, during the term thereby granted unto the appellant, his executors, &c., from time to time, within six weeks after the return or sale of every parcel of tin or tin ore gotten in the said demised premises, the clear sum of 1*s.* in the pound on the gross value, according to the price of the day, of all tin and tin ore, which shall from time to time be digged, raised and gotten out of, from and in the said premises thereinbefore mentioned and described; such 1*s.* in the pound to be paid clear and free from all charges, poor-rates (if any should be payable), and all other rates, &c. The lease is still existing, and the lands and mines therein demised, including Buckler's mine, are, and were at the time of making the rate, in the possession and occupation of the said lessees, but they are not rated in respect thereof. Considerable quantities of tin have been raised by them, the whole of which has been disposed of, and sold by them as they thought fit. Since the date of the above-mentioned lease or sett, the appellant has not received any tin or tin ore in kind from the said lessees, but payment in money from Buckler's mine, according to the above reservation. All the property in the parish is assessed according to the rule prescribed by the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, and in the manner therein described. The appellant is not an inhabitant of the parish of St. Austell, nor the occupier of any land or other property therein, unless he is deemed to be such under the circumstances stated in this case. The mines in respect of which the appellant is rated are well known by distinct names, and are situated at different parts of the parish, at distances from each other, and are worked under different setts by different adventurers. If the court should be of opinion that the appellant is not liable to be rated at all in respect of his toll tin, the rate is to be further amended by striking out his name altogether from the said rate; or if the court should think he is not so rateable in respect of Buckler's mine, the rate is to be amended by further reducing the sum of 1,400*l.* to 100*l.*, and the sum of 35*l.* to 5*l.* If the court should be of opinion that the objection to the form of the rate, in not stating the names and situations of the mines, is valid, then the rate to be sent back to be amended. Lord Denman, C. J. delivered the judgment, and after stating the facts and the lease, proceeded :—"This lease is still existing, and the lands and mines therein demised (including Buckler's mine) are, and were at the time of making the rate, in the possession and occupation of the said lessees, who are not rated in respect thereof. Considerable quantities of tin have been raised, but the appellant, since the date of the said lease, has received no tin or ore in kind but payment in money, according to the said reservation. Lastly, it is stated that the appellant is not an inhabitant of the said parish of St. Austell, nor the occupier of any land, or other property, unless he is to be deemed such under the circumstances above detailed. Upon this state of facts it was contended in argument that (without reference to the lease above set forth) the toll tin is not rateable, and we were called upon again to examine the cases of Rowls v. Gells, Rex v. St. Agnes, Rex v. Baptist Mill Company, and Rex v. St. Austell, which, it was admitted, have decided that such property is rateable. Upon this point, which does not in truth affect the principal subject now in dispute, as our judgment proceeds upon another ground, we think it unnecessary to say more than that, whilst they remained unreversed by a court of error, we feel ourselves bound by the authority of cases considered and reconsidered so often and so deliberately. The conclusion therefore on this point is, that the form of the rate is right, and that in substance it is correct, at all events to the extent of 5*l.* With respect to the effect of the lease, which raises the principal point, it was urged, in support of the rate, that in truth nothing passed by it; that the whole transaction was merely colourable, and intended to exempt the property from rateability. When, however, we find it expressly stated that from the date of the lease the appellant has received no part of the produce of the mine, but a money payment only, and further bear in mind that it is not the province of this court to presume or infer fraud where none is found by the sessions, we think that this circumstance (the money payment) distinguishes this case from those above referred to, and brings it directly within the principle of Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret, and Rex v. Tremayne, which distinction is plainly pointed out by Le Blanc, J. in Rex v. Baptist Mill Company, in the following words :—'Where a person receives without risk part of the produce extracted from the bowels of the earth he is an occupier of land, but where he merely receives a rent or money payment, he is not an occupier.' The consequence is, from the form in which the question is submitted to us in the case, that the assessment upon the appellant must be reduced from the sum of 35*l.* to 5*l.*" Rate to be reduced to 5*l.*

Second point.

Crease v. Sawle, 20 L. J. M. C. 62. The facts stated in Reg. v. Crease formed, afterwards, the subject of a special verdict, which was heard in the Court of Exchequer; and the following judgment was delivered by Tindal, C. J. "The question raised by the special verdict in this case is, whether the plaintiff, who was the lessee under the duke of Cornwall, and was entitled to the toll of tin in a mine belonging to and parcel of the duchy, was rateable to the poor in respect of that toll. The toll was a certain portion of tin ore, raised within the tin bounds, and paid for by the workmen as tin in kind, without deduction or charge, or risk to the receiver. If the plaintiff was rateable, it is not material, in this action of trespass, to consider whether he was actually rated, as the occupier of the toll of tin, for a larger sum than he ought to have been rated at: the sole question in this action being, whether he was rateable in respect of the subject of the rate. The Court of Queen's Bench, in giving their judgment in favour of his liability, referring to the cases of Rowls v. Gells, The King v. St. Agnes; The King v. Baptist Mill Company, and The King v. St. Austell, expressed their opinion, that they were bound by the authority of cases so often and so deliberately considered, so long as they remained unreversed by a court of error. We feel that we are equally bound by the same authorities; and, important as it is in all branches of the law to abide by previous decisions, in none is it more important than it is in these cases. The rules which apply to the rateability of property are everywhere daily acted upon in the management of parochial affairs, and materially affect the value of estates. It would be extremely inconvenient, and indeed mischievous, to overrule a class of cases which have been much discussed and sanctioned by many eminent judges, and which are constantly acted upon, because we might not feel perfectly satisfied with the reasons assigned for their decision; and if we could permit ourselves to disregard those authorities on that account, we might feel disposed, on the same ground, to reject others who have put a construction on the statute which we might by no means be certain it ought to bear. If we were now, for the first time, called upon to explain the meaning of this statute, which would seem to have been framed with a view of rendering rateable occupiers of every description of real estate, it might be very questionable whether the occupier of mines of any description was exempt. But we think it wiser to abstain from the discussion of such questions, and to abide by the construction which the numerous decisions have given to the words of the statute, and which have been, for a length of time, constantly acted upon; and, according to those decisions, unless we were to hold that the occupier of every mine, except coal mines, is exempt, we feel ourselves equally bound to hold, that he who receives a portion of the ore in an unmanufactured state is liable to be rated. The judgment must, therefore, be affirmed."

The owner who reserves one full fifth part of the ore gotten, to be dressed, and fit for smelting at the costs of the tenant, is rateable.

Reg. v. Todd, 4 P. & D. 335; 12 A. & E. 816. The Duke of Cleveland is not an inhabitant of the township, is seised of waste therein, and of the mines and minerals within and under the same, as tenant for life, with power to lease for twenty-one years. By indenture of lease, bearing date 21st June, 1836, he demised unto a company all the lead mines or groves, veins, &c., and other ore opened or to be opened, within or under certain specified districts, together with all houses, buildings thereto belonging or otherwise occupied or enjoyed therewith, together with full power to the company, with miners and other workmen, to enter into and upon the land, and there to search for, dig, work, &c., and to do all other things necessary for winning and working the mines and premises; and also sufficient ground-room for the laying of earth, rubbish, or ore raised, and full right of way, &c., and also liberty to build on the wastes of inclosed lands adjoining the demised premises, houses, &c., for the use of the workmen, and for cleansing, washing, and dressing the ore found and raised, reserving to the duke, his heirs and assigns, full liberty, power, and authority to enter into and upon the mines and premises thereby demised, and every part thereof, by the ways after mentioned, to view the same; the mines, &c., were demised for twenty-one years, yielding, paying, rendering, and delivering during the continuance of the demise unto the duke, one full fifth part, share, and proportion of all the lead or other ore which should from time to time, and at all times thereinafter during the continuance of the demise, be won, wrought, raised, or gotten out of and from the said demised premises, or any part thereof, well and sufficiently cleansed, dressed, washed, and made merchantable, and fit for the smelting-mill, at the costs and charges of the said company, and then to be delivered at the ringsteads upon the premises, when the same should be dressed and washed as aforesaid, clear of all deductions or abatements on any account whatsoever; and that before any part or parcel of the other four-fifth parts of the said lead or other ore should be removed, carried away, smelted, or converted into any other use whatsoever without the consent of the duke, &c.

Mines.

During the period for which the rate was made, the duke received in the township from the company, one-fifth part of all the ore raised by the company from the mines in the township demised to them. The ore, previously to delivery, underwent a very laborious and expensive process, in being bruised, dressed, and made merchantable and fit for smelting, by which all foreign substances were separated from it; but the character of the ore was not otherwise altered. Lord Denman, C. J. "We are of opinion that the Duke of Cleveland is an occupier of the ore."

But the owner of the lot and cope payable from lead mines is rateable.

Rowls v. Gell, Cowp. 451. Rowls was lessee under the crown of all lead mines, with their appurtenances, within Wirksworth, with the lot or cope, and was assessed for the same in the rate of 500*l.* a-year. The duty of lot payable to the plaintiff, as lessee of the crown, is the thirteenth dish or measure of lead ore, got, dressed, and made merchantable, at all the lead mines within the soke; and cope is sixpence for every load or nine dishes of lead ore raised at such mines. These duties are paid to and received by the plaintiff without any risk or expense in working the mines, and, in that year wherein they were assessed, amounted to the clear sum of 500*l.*; but they are uncertain, and vary every year. All persons have a right to dig for and get lead ore in the said soke and wapentake, conforming to the custom there; and the miners are entitled to a certain quantity of land above and on each side of such mine. Lord Mansfield, C. J., delivered the resolution of the court. "The poor's-rate is not a tax on the land, but a personal charge in respect of the land. The present is a personal charge by reason of the annual profits which the lessee of the crown receives out of the land, and which is not charged at all before to the poor. In general, the farmer or occupier of land, and not the landlord, is liable to this tax. For it arises by reason of the land in the parish, and the landlord is never assessed for his rent, because that would be a double assessment, as his lessee had paid before. Lead mines are not within the statute of the 43 Eliz. They are in themselves uncertain, and may prove unsuccessful to the adventurers. Taxes, therefore, upon the adventurers, would be hard, and they are, therefore, excused. But he, who in case they do prove of value, receives a stipulated benefit from the profit or value of them, is not excusable on the same ground, and therefore is expressly charged to the land-tax, as that falls upon the landlord. He is alike liable to the poor-rate for his visible real property in the parish; though, where the poor-tax is a charge on the lessee, the landord doth not pay in respect of his rent. Where the adventurer or lessee of the mine pays nothing, it is no double tax in any light, because the lord pays, not for that which the lessee or adventurer is excused from paying for, but the lord pays for his own. It is not a mere casual profit, but an annual revenue, if any, and very different from the casual profits of a manor, which are not annual; for there may be none for years. But if the mine produces profit to the miner, the lord's share is certain, annual, and an annual rent is paid for it constantly. The miner is obliged to pay certain proportions to the owner of the land. What reason then is there to exempt these proportionable revenues? It makes no difference to the adventurer; it doth not prejudice or benefit him. But as such obligatory payment is in respect to the land, the landowner ought not to receive it clearer or neater than any other part of his estate, when he is at no trouble, expense, or possible risk. Therefore, we are all of opinion that the plaintiff is liable to be rated for this property."

A reason conjectured why mines are not in general rateable.

So also the owner of toll of tin, farm tin and dues.

Rex v. St. Agnes, 3 T. R. 480. This was an appeal against a rate, because Andrews and Donnithorne were not rated for their tolls of tin. The sessions quashed the rate. J. P. Andrews, as trustee of J. Enys, is entitled to a certain dish or measure arising out of certain lands and tin bounds in St. Agnes, called toll and farm tin; which toll is one-fifteenth part of all the tin gotten in the lands of J. Enys, within the parish of St. Agnes, and which said farm tin or due is one-twelfth part, after the said fifteenth part is deducted for toll of all such tin so gotten within the tin bounds in the parish; and which said dues or duties are due and payable by the laws and customs of the Stannaries of Cornwall, free and clear of all risk and deductions whatsoever; but they are uncertain, and vary every year; yet for many years last past have produced a considerable sum annually. And N. Donnithorne is entitled to a certain dish or measure called toll tin or dues, arising out of certain lands in St. Agnes, and due and payable in the manner before stated, and which toll varies, and is uncertain, but also produces a considerable sum annually. Lord Kenyon, C. J., said "he approved of Rowls v. Gell, and Rex v. Maddern, though these two persons would not be precluded from objecting to their being charged in any future rate on any ground they might think proper. But they were not parties to this case, and could not make any objection to the order of sessions, which was confirmed."

So also the owner of the lot and free share of calamine.

Rex v. Baptist Mill Company, 1 M. & S. 612. The defendants were rated in the parish of Rowberrow, for "lot, toll, and free share of the calamine, and for calamine yard and barn;—amount 9*l.*" The sessions amended the rate by expunging "the calamine yard and barn," and assessing the "lot, toll, and free share of the calamine." They were lessees of a lot, toll, or free share of all calamine, or lapis calaminaris, raised in the parish of Rowberrow, in the proportion of one part in four; they are not, nor were at the time of making the rate, in the occupation of any land or buildings whatsoever within the parish of Rowberrow, unless the court shall be of opinion, as the sessions were, that the lot, toll, and free share above mentioned, are to be considered as land; all the lessees reside in Bristol; they run no risk, nor incur any expense whatever, and have, since the commencement of the lease, received a quantity of calamine, of considerable value, as the lord's lot, toll, or free share. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If these lessees of lot, toll, and free share are rateable at all, it appears to me they must be rateable as for property falling under the description of land. There appears to me to be a demise of a specific portion of the produce of the land, or in other words, land itself, free from risk or uncertainty; it is by the express terms of the finding stated to be an interest without risk. We might, otherwise, have been pressed with the question, whether the naming coal mines in the statute, was, according to the rule, expressio unius exclusio alterius, to all intents an exclusion of other mines; or was only put for example, as the naming a class in the statute of circumspecte agatis (2 Inst. 487): for certainly the judges who have held it to amount to the exclusion of other mines, have generally coupled it with this reason, that other mines are subject to risk. Now here the portion of calamine is divested of risk; it is the clear profit to which the lord is entitled, independent of any contingency. It is not stated whether it is by agreement or custom, that the person who works the mine is bound to yield to the lord a portion. It is merely stated that the lord is entitled to one part in four. The whole is raised by the labour of the adventurer, and, when raised, the lord may be considered as working with the adventurers by the hands of the labourers; but, when raised, the lord's share redounds to him. That constitutes land, and may be fairly construed as such within the meaning of this statute. The case of Rowls v. Gell (ante, p. 241), and the other cases, do not admit of any distinction comprehending this case. This is not merely a demise of a personal chattel, of the ore after it is gotten, but of the ore which is to be gotten, and which is part of the solid mass of the land; therefore, under that description, it is assessable in the hands of the occupier." Le Blanc, J. "I concur in opinion with my lord, that this property is rateable to the poor. In Rowls v. Gell, and Rex v. St. Agnes (ante, p. 241), the rate was confined to the person in respect to the toll-dish of lead and tin raised; here the owner of the land is entitled to a certain portion of the ore when raised, which he lets, or allows persons to stand in his place as to that share; and we will not inquire whether this were a legal demise, for he authorises them to receive, and they do receive it. They stand, therefore, in the situation of the lessee in Rowls v. Gell, and the person entitled in Rex v. St. Agnes. But subsequent cases have been cited, in which it is supposed that the authority of Rowls v. Gell, and Rex v. St. Agnes has been disturbed; which supposition is only raised by laying hold of particular expressions of the court to be found there. The cases of Williams v. Jones, and Rex v. Nicholson, are totally different; for those were the profits of a ferry, arising out of a right to convey passengers over a river: it was impossible in those cases to say that the persons were occupiers of anything but the boat and tackle in which the passengers were conveyed, in the same manner as a stage-coachman is the owner of his coach; it was, therefore, impossible to make the doctrine of Rowls v. Gell bear on those cases. Viewing all the cases on the subject, and the principle upon which Rowls v. Gell was decided, and likewise the public convenience, as it regards this species of property, and not seeing that the original construction on the words 'occupier of land' may not comprehend a person so far an occupier as to receive a portion of the land discharged of any risk, I cannot say that this company is not rateable." Bayley, J. "I am of the same opinion. I cannot distinguish this from the case of granting a share in the land, which is not co-extensive with the entire interest. It is not doing any violence to this lease to consider the lessees under it as occupiers of land. I lay out of consideration all the cases in which it has been holden that adventurers are not liable." Order of sessions confirmed.

So also the owner of one full eighth share of all tin, tin ore, &c.; the same having been first spalled, picked, or otherwise made merchantable, and fit to be smelted.

Rex v. St. Austell, 5 B. & Ald. 693; 1 D. & Ryl. 351. T. Carlyon, Esq., appealed against the following assessments:—Rates on tin and copper dues, and water-courses: T. C. for Crinnis copper dues—annual return, 4080*l.*; amount taken at two-fifths, 1632*l.*; assessment at 3*s.* in the pound, 244*l.* 16*s.* The sessions struck out this assessment. Mr. Carlyon was not an inhabitant of St. Austell, nor the occupier of any land or other property therein, unless he was deemed to be such occupier in respect of the dues; by indenture made 12th January, 1811, he granted unto Rowe, &c., full and free liberty to dig, work, mine, and search for tin, tin ore, copper, copper ore, and all other metals and minerals whatsoever, in that part of his lands called Crinnis, in the parish of St. Austell, and the same to take to their own use: and within the limits of the set thereby granted, to make adits, shafts, &c., and to erect sheds, &c.: habendum for twenty-one years: yielding and delivering upon the grass, unto T. Carlyon, one full eighth part or share, or dish, of all tin, tin ore, copper, copper ore, lead, lead ore, and other metals and minerals which should, by virtue of the said indenture, be found and brought to grass within the limits thereby granted; the same having been first made merchantable and fit to be smelted and fairly divided, and laid out upon the grass at their cost and charges. It contained a covenant to pay or deliver unto T. Carlyon, or his teller or agent, the full and just one-eighth part, share, or dish, therein reserved; or pay the same in money, at the election of T. Carlyon, at such best price as the same could be sold for, within two months at farthest, after such metals should be returned and sold. The lessees were to pay all rates and taxes imposed upon the tin, &c.; and the money which should arise from the sale thereof, or the dues thereby reserved, or upon T. Carlyon, in respect thereof, and indemnify him from the same; and would effectually work the premises in the most proper and effectual manner, with a sufficient number of labouring miners, unless prevented by water or other inevitable impediment. By virtue of this grant, the mine had been worked ever since the date thereof, by Rowe, without expense or risk on the part of T. Carlyon. Works had been made, and houses built by the adventurers at a great expense; and the mine and all workings had always been, and still are, in the sole occupation of the adventurers. The mine is now declining; but considerable quantities of copper ores had, from time to time, been raised from it: the whole of which, after undergoing several processes at an expense varying from 1*s.* to 6*s.* and 7*s.* in the pound, and even to 15*s.* when cleansed for the purpose of separating them from earth and other substances, and rendering them fit to be smelted, but by which process the original and native quality of the ores themselves is not altered, had from time to time, before the same were calcined or smelted, been sold or disposed of by the adventurers, without any control or interference by Carlyon. No part of the ores raised had ever been ren- dered to Carlyon in kind; but in lieu thereof, one-eighth part of the money, arising from the sales of the ores, had been hitherto paid to him. He had been from time to time rated to the poor of St. Austell in respect of such one-eighth part of the money, and had paid the several assessments. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that in this case Mr. Carlyon is liable to be rated for the dues in question. I am unable to distinguish this case from Rowls v. Gell (ante, 241), and Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company (ante, 242), and I think, therefore, that we ought to decide conformably to those authorities. Notwithstanding all that has been urged upon this subject, I cannot distinguish between the cases where a party takes an interest under a specific contract, as in this case, and where the adventurers work under a custom previously existing throughout a district. The case is distinguishable from Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret (ante, 235), in two respects; first, because there was an actual demise in that case of all the mines, under which the possession, both of that part which was worked and that which was not worked, passed to the lessees; but here there is an express reservation of part. In the second place, the share reserved to the lord in Rex v. Earl of Pomfret was of smelted lead; but here the reservation is of part of the native mineral. On these grounds, it seems to me that we ought to decide in favour of the rate; and I do that with the less reluctance, because it is still open to the party to institute an action against the person who may levy for the rate, and so to bring the question before a higher tribunal." Bayley, J. "We ought to lay out of the question the circumstance of this being a failing mine. For it is a beneficial and useful property to the person on whom this rate has been made; and it was held in Rex v. Parrott, that a coal mine, whether profitable or not, is still rateable. In Rowls v. Gell it was first decided that a party was rateable for lot and cope. It is said, indeed, that the party rated there was a lessee. That distinction makes no difference, for if the lot and cope had not been rateable in the hands of the original proprietor, it would not have been so in the hands of his lessee. The true ground of that decision was, that the party was there considered as an occupier of the land. Rex v. St. Agnes (ante, 241), proceeded on the same ground; and in Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, (at the time of which decision this court were peculiarly familiar with the words of the act of parliament,) it was determined that the lessees under the lord of the manor of his lot and free share of calamine were liable to be rated as occupiers of land; and the decision went on the ground that the lord of the manor would, but for the lease, have been rateable for it also, for the court considered him as occupying the land by the hands of the adventurers. The latter were to work the mine, and he was to receive part of the ore gotten, and the court considered him as joint occupier with them. In Rex v. The Bishop of Rochester (ante, 234), the mine was let; and whether it was worked or not, still the bishop was completely out of possession of it, and the adventurers worked for their own exclusive profit. There the rent reserved was a money-rent, and the relation between the parties to the contract was that of landlord and tenant, and all that the bishop of Rochester had was the reversion of the land. But in this case the adventurers have not the sole and exclusive occupation of the mine; they have only the sole and exclusive privilege of working it. This is not the conveyance of any interest in the mine till it is actually worked. It is a privilege only to dig for ore, and then on the terms of leaving a certain portion of that ore in a fit state for the landlord. It seems to me, therefore, that, according to the authorities to which I have referred, Mr. Carlyon must, in this case, be considered as the occupier of land, and therefore, that he is liable to the present rate." Holroyd, J. "In the view I have taken of this case, I entirely agree with the rest of the court. The case of Rowls v. Gell, although it was doubted by Lord Kenyon in Rex v. Parrott, seems to me to have been well decided. It was confirmed by Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, from which I cannot distinguish this case." Best, J. "If it were true that we must either overrule Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, and the cases confirming the decision, or the case of Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret, I should be inclined to support the former. But it is not necessary, inasmuch as there is a material distinction between them. Here it seems to me to be clear that Mr. Carlyon is an occupier of land. All that the adventurers take under the indenture, is a licence to enter and dig and take away the minerals. But when they have so done, and the minerals are brought to grass, a division of the ore between them and the landlord takes place. This, then, is the same as if, instead of working for wages, they worked on condition of being paid by a certain share of the produce." Order of sessions quashed.

Limestone mines are not rateable.

Rex v. Sedgeley, 2 B. & Ad. 65. The Earl of Dudley was rated as the owner and occupier of lands in Sedgeley, containing strata of limestone, and also of the works by and out of which the limestone is raised. The strata of limestone under these lands lie in a sloping position, and one stratum distinct and a considerable distance from the other, in the same manner as coal, ironstone, &c. The strata frequently crop out or terminate at the surface, and deepen in the opposite direction. Those parts of the strata which cropped out or terminated at the surface were worked by the appellant and his predecessors, in quarries, by day-light or open work, following the course of the strata as far as was practicable. The continuation of these strata, which were being worked at the time the rate was made, lie forty or fifty yards below the surface of the ground, and are worked in large excavations by means of pit shafts, steam engines, &c., in the same way as coal, ironstone, and other minerals, and no part of the limestone is now gotten in quarries or by open work. The produce is in part drawn up the pit shafts and in part sent off by an underground level or tunnel. The only difference between these lime-works, and coal and ironstone mines, is the position of the strata, the material gotten out, and the greater excavations in the former than in the latter. The only way into these mines or works is down the shafts or through the tunnel, which is wholly underground, a great part of it being upwards of fifty yards below the surface of the ground, the deepest part being at its junction with that part where the limestone is gotten. The limestone is gotten in large excavations made in the direction in which the strata run, which excavations communicate by headways or gate roads with the bottom of the shafts, and the works are lighted by candles or lamps, no part being open to daylight. The working requires experience, and is carried on by persons who are brought up to the occupation, and are called limestone miners or limestone getters, as often one as the other. The limestone is conveyed along railroads from the part of the works where it is gotten, through the gate roads, one part to the bottom of the pit shafts, and the other part to the level or tunnel. That which is taken to the bottom of the pit shafts is drawn up by the steam engines, and the other part is sent off in boats along the tunnel. By far the greater portion of the limestone gotten by the appellant, is sold in its raw state to the iron-founder for smelting iron, but a small portion (which by agreement is taken at a hundredth part of the whole) is burnt into lime by the appellant on his own land. There is no difficulty in finding the limestone, the pits being sunk, engines erected, and levels and tunnels made, and the mines or works opened and in operation. The profits of the appellant are certain, though subject to variations in consequence of frequent breakings off of the strata, and their being thrown into different directions: these increase the difficulty and expense of working, and render a fresh opening necessary. Limestone strata were lately found and worked in an adjoining parish to Sedgeley, at a depth of more than a hundred yards below the mines of coal and ironstone. The coal and ironstone in that case were first gotten, and afterwards the limestone was worked by means of the same pit shafts which were sunk down to it. "Mines of limestone" are expressly mentioned in local acts of parliament in the neighbourhood. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "We are of opinion that this property is rateable. I take it to be now established as law, that the expression of 'coal mines' in the 43 Eliz. has the effect of excluding all other mines, according to the maxim 'expressio unius.'" And then, after adverting to the dicta by which this rule was established, and the inconvenience of departing from it, unless positively wrong, his lordship added, "The only remaining question will be whether the property in limestone, which has been rated, is properly a limestone mine; and this perhaps is rather a question of fact than of law. The description of the manner in which this stone is obtained and raised, namely, by sinking shafts perpendicularly down to the stratum, which lies considerably below the surface of the ground, and then working the stratum by roads and gate-heads, with the necessary provision for air, and raising the stone to the surface by machinery, or carrying it underground to a tunnel, is the exact description of the present usual mode of mining, of the mode used in obtaining coal, and of the mode used in obtaining ironstone. Ironstone obtained in this manner has been held not to be rateable: why then should limestone be? What difference is there between the two? The only difference that has been suggested is, that ironstone contains a quantity of metal and is procured for the sake of the metal it contains. But, if the existence of metal be necessary to constitute a mine, salt-works, from which salt is obtained in the way that this stone was obtained, will not be mines; nor indeed will coal-works be mines, though in the statute itself they are so called. And to deny the character of a mine to the works in question, would, as it appears to us, be to depart from the ordinary and proper meaning of that word in the English language." Order of sessions confirmed.

Salt works.

Whether a mine or quarry is a question of fact for the sessions only.

Rex v. Dunsford, 4 N. & M. 349; 2 A. & E. 568. The appellant was rated for a stone quarry; it was freestone, and brought out through a level; the stone was raised by cranes and rollers; no steam engine was used, nor are there any air-tunnels. Lord Denman said, "The case of Rex v. Sedgeley is quite binding; but the question here is whether the sessions have taken it as a guide. It is a question of fact. The principle of law is that the mode of getting, and not the nature of the article, constitutes mine or no mine. But it seems to follow that the application of the principle to the facts must be made by the sessions. If they had said this was a mine, I should have considered myself bound by the finding. They have confirmed the rate and called the property a quarry, but have also stated the facts, and put the question whether this excavation is exempt. They have studiously avoided any finding. The answer of the court is—we will not decide the question of fact. The sessions must decide whether, applying the rule of Rex v. Sedgeley, this excavation is a mine or not." Littledale, J., concurred that this was a question for the sessions. "I do not see how a court, as a matter of law, can say whether the mode of operation is such as to constitute the excavation a mine; that depends on a variety of circumstances. I see no difference between this quarry (for it seems to me to be clearly a quarry, though doubtful whether it is a mine) and a common open quarry, except that it is underground and approached by a level; and I do not know how we, as a matter of law, can say this is a mine." Williams, J., concurred. Case sent back to the sessions.

Lime-works, slate, potter's-clay, held to be rateable.

Lime-works, in Rex v. Alderbury, 1 East, 534, slate-works, in Rex v. Woodland, 2 East, 16, potters' clay-pits, in Rex v. Brown, 8 East, 528, were held rateable, but no question was made whether these excavations were mines or not. In Rex v. Brown, there were strata of potter's clay, in the parish of Church Knabe, in Dorsetshire. They had been opened for more than a century, and potters' clay dug and exported from them for the supply of different potteries. The clay is found at a considerable depth under the surface of the ground. The clay-pits are in some instances worked by the owner of the land, and sometimes they are deemed distinct from the lands, at a rent.

Clay-pits worked as Mines not rateable.

Clay-pits worked as mines are not rateable.

Rex v. Brettell, 3 Bar. & Adol. 424. Appellants were rated to the poor for clay pits, which were excavations underground, from whence glasshouse, pot clay, and fire-brick clay were extracted. A perpendicular shaft was sunk from the surface of the land, for the purpose of raising the clay out of the strata, which was done by a steam engine and other mining apparatus. The excavations were like those which are made for working coal and metallic mines, and the mode of raising the clay was the same as that used in a coal mine. Held, that the pits so assessed were clay mines, and therefore not rateable. Lord Tenterden. "I see no reason for departing from the opinion which I delivered in Rex v. Sedgeley (ante, 245). The only difference between that and the present case consists in the character of the commodity obtained; the mode of obtaining it is the same. Now that case establishes, that in order to determine whether an excavation in the earth constitutes a mine or not, we are to look to the mode in which the article is obtained, and not into its chemical or geological character. Here, as in Rex v. Sedgeley, the substance is obtained by what in the ordinary, and indeed in every sense of the word, is mining. That being so, these clay pits are mines, and consequently are not rateable to the relief of the poor." Littledale, J. "I think we are bound by Rex v. Sedgeley, and that the mode in which the substance is obtained decides the question." Parke and Patteson, Js., concurred.

Underwoods, saleable.

UNDERWOODS, SALEABLE.

The occupier of "saleable underwoods" is rateable. 43 Eliz. c 2, s. 1.

Saleable Underwoods are rateable at all times, and not only when they are cut.

Rex v. Mirfield, 10 East, 219. The woods which were the subject of the rate were underwoods, which were usually sold and cut down once in twenty-one years, and then, and not before, were profitable to the appellant. These underwoods had not been cut for ten years, and were then standing to complete the twenty-one years' growth; and the question was, whether these woods were saleable underwoods, and liable to be rated every year according to the annual average, or only when cut down and sold? Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The question is, whether these are saleable underwoods, except in the year in which they are cut down? The word saleable has not a very definite meaning. It may mean when they are in a fit state for sale, referring to the time when they are cut, or it may mean such as are intended or destined for sale, in contradistinction to such as are to supply the land with estovers for fuel, and other purposes of the estate. In the former of these cases they would be rateable only in the year in which they were cut; in the latter, they would be rateable at all times; and, we think, after a full consideration of the subject, that the latter is the true meaning. If they are rateable at all times, they will contribute according to their value, in exact proportion with the rest of the property in the parish. But if they were rateable only in the year in which they are cut, they will contribute a very different sum from what they would do by contributing annually." His lordship here illustrated it by figures, and added, "As to the rating it annually, the objection to this is, that the property ought not to be rated until the produce of it has been severed from the land, and until it has supplied the occupier with the means of paying. But it is not necessary that any of the profits should have been actually reaped or taken from the property during the period for which the rate is made; but the property is at all times rateable according to the improvement in its value, or in the rent which might fairly be expected from it. Instances continually occur in which the occupier is rated, though he has derived no profit during the period for which the rate is made. A new tenant upon an arable farm reaps none of the produce till the autumn, and yet he must pay up to that autumn, according to the value of his estate. He must pay beforehand for the future probable produce. His farm is constantly in a progressive state towards producing profit, and he pays for that progress. So underwoods are annually improving in value, and the rates the occupier pays is for that profit. This may, probably, be hard upon tenants for life; but if the law has thrown this burthen on the property, they must take it with that burthen. We think the law has so thrown it, and the property is liable to be rated at all times when rates are made."

Underwoods.

Firs and larch planted with oaks for the purpose of sheltering the latter, and cut from time to time, as the oaks grow larger and require more space, but when once cut not growing again, and some of them yielding a profit by sale, are not saleable underwoods, the primary object of planting them being to protect the oaks, and not derive a profit from them per se by sale. Semble. That they are not underwood at all.

Rex v. Ferrybridge, 2 D. & Ryl. 634; 1 B. & C. 375. Appeal against a rate in respect of woods and plantations. The appellant is the occupier of 650 acres of land. In 1785 and 1786, 340 acres of it were planted with oak and ash closely intermixed with Scotch firs and larches. At different periods portions of the firs and larches were cut down for the purpose of thinning the plantations, and some of these thinnings were sold under the name of fir and larch poles, but the greater part were used in the erection of buildings. Considerable thinnings of the firs and larches have been made within the last four years, and produced a profit; many of them were of the height of from thirty to forty feet, and contain from ten to twelve cubic feet of wood, and were thirty years old. This wood is cut without reference to size, in order to allow room for the ash and oak to spread: the purpose of introducing firs and larches into those plantations being to keep the same thick and sheltered, and to make a profit by cutting the firs and larches from time to time, when the oak and ash, by reason of their growth, require more space. Fifteen years ago, eighteen other acres, and five years ago, seventeen other acres of the said land were planted in a like manner. The eighteen acres have been thinned by cutting out a portion of the firs and larches, but no profit was derived by such thinning. The seventeen acres have not yet been thinned. The roots of the firs and larches which are cut die in the ground and produce no shoots. The whole of the land so planted hath been always rated to the relief of the poor. Bayley, J. "The st. 43 Eliz. does not throw the charge of maintaining the poor on the occupiers of every species of property, but only on the occupiers of property of certain particular descriptions there specified, and amongst others it speaks of the occupiers of saleable underwoods. The legislature does not use the word 'underwoods' (a) per se, but 'saleable underwoods:' and they have not in this or any former statute affixed any definite meaning to the term 'underwood.' If they had done so, we should feel ourselves bound to adopt that as the meaning of the word in construing the present act. It has been said that all wood comes within the description either of timber or underwood, and therefore, that as firs and larches are not timber, they must be considered as underwood. It is not necessary to decide whether this be correct, because by the statute of Eliz. saleable underwoods only are subject to be rated to the relief of the poor. It may, however, be observed, that if all wood which is not timber be underwood, it would follow that horse-chesnuts, limes, plane-trees, and aspens would come within that description. Yet surely it would be a perversion of language to call such trees underwood. Generally speaking, that term is applied to a species of wood which grows expeditiously and sends up many shoots from one stool, the root remaining perfect from which the shoots are cut, and producing new shoots, and so yielding a succession of profits. It is probable that this is the description of coppice and underwood to which the statute of Eliz. applies. But it is not necessary to decide that, inasmuch as that statute also requires that it should be saleable underwood, and the word saleable in Rex v. Mirfield (a) has been held to denote such as is intended or destined for sale, in contradistinction to such as is to supply the land with estovers for fuel and other purposes of the estate. It does not therefore come within the description of saleable underwood, unless the prospect of deriving a profit by sale was the main object of the proprietor when the plantation was made. There are some species of wood, such as hazel, which are valuable only as underwood, and which must have been planted originally for the purpose of acquiring profit by sale. But of all plantations, fir is perhaps the least valuable, being chiefly, I believe, intended for protection rather than profit. It is found as a fact in this case, that these firs and larches were planted principally for the purpose of affording protection to the oak and ash. The latter were the most valuable. The first two were cut only

(a) P. 247.

(a) See a learned argument on the legal acceptation of underwood, in a note to this case, 1 B. & C. 379; and of the meaning of Gros Bois, Loxon v. Pryse, 5 Jurist, 310.

Underwoods.

for the purpose of thinning the plantation. Some indeed were sold, but the greater part were used in the erection of buildings on the estate. Here the trees when cut were thirty feet high, which to be sure does not accord with one's notions of underwood. Nor could they have been planted with a view to a profit by sale, for if so the cuttings would have taken place with reference to their size; but here, the cuttings were made in fact merely for the purpose of thinning the plantations, and with reference to the main object, the encouragement of the growth of the more valuable trees. It is quite clear, therefore, that profit was not the sole or even principal object for which the firs and larches were originally planted; and if so, they are not saleable underwoods within the meaning of the 43 Eliz. It seems to me, that it would be most mischievous if property of this description was liable to be rated. It is an object of national policy to encourage the growth of timber. The grower of timber gives up a present profit with a view to future advantage, and it is fit that he should be encouraged to do so. If this be rateable property, then, according to Rex v. Mirfield, it must be rateable annually to the relief of the poor, though it should not happen to be cut more than once in twenty years. The grower, therefore, will be subject to an annual charge long before he can derive any profit. That would operate as a great discouragement to the growth of timber: and I cannot therefore think that the legislature meant to subject property of this description to such an annual charge. The object of the statute was to subject to the rate all such property only as yielded a succession of profits. I am therefore of opinion that whether this be underwood or not, at all events it is not saleable underwood, and therefore not rateable to the relief of the poor." Holroyd, J. "I am also of opinion that the firs and larches mentioned in this case are not saleable underwoods within the meaning of those words, as used in the 43 Eliz. The word 'underwood' must be there taken to be used in its popular sense, unless it be shown to have been used differently by the legislature in that or other statutes. According to its popular meaning it signifies coppice, as distinguished from haut bois. Admitting, however, that these firs and larches were underwood, I am clearly of opinion that they are not saleable underwoods within the meaning of the statute of Eliz. The general subject of rate in that statute is property yielding renewable profits; for even coal-mines when worked may be said in some sense to yield a succession of profits. Underwoods cut at stated periods do yield a succession of profits from time to time, though not annually. This is clearly not wood of that description, for when it is once cut, the root is destroyed, and there is no succession of profit. In order to ascertain whether these be saleable underwoods, the object for which they were planted, and the mode of management, ought to be taken into consideration. It appears that, upon one occasion, even though eighteen acres were cut, no profit whatever was thereby produced; and that is a strong circumstance to show that the cuttings were not made with a view to sale, but to encourage and preserve the oaks and ashes. I am therefore clearly of opinion that these firs and larches are not saleable underwoods within the meaning of the statute of Eliz." Best, J. "In the reign of Eliz., underwood was probably more generally used for fuel than at present; it yielded also a profit at certain intervals, though not annually. The legislature, too, have not merely used the term underwood, but have qualified it by the term saleable, thereby meaning that species of underwood which is generally produced for the purposes of sale, which is cut down at stated periods, produces new shoots, and thereby yields, at certain intervals, profits coming as nearly as possible to annual profits. It appears that the cuttings did actually yield some profit, but they are not necessarily rateable on that account. The property ought to be of that description for which the owner is likely to derive a profit. It has been argued, that as these firs would be titheable, they are therefore subject to be rated to the poor; but that by no means follows; for by the 45 Edw. III. c. 3, gros bois of the age of twenty years, in respect of which the clergy had claimed tithe under the name of sylva cædua, is expressly exempted from tithe. Now, gros bois means timber; and by the common law includes oak, ash, and elm; and by the custom of the country, in particular places, many other species of trees. Every species of wood which is not timber by the common law or by custom, is titheable. By the statute of Eliz., no species of wood but saleable underwood is liable to be rated to the relief of the poor. It has been said that sylva cædua and underwood are synonymous. In Ford v. Rackster (4 M. & S. 137), however, Lord Ellenborough, delivering the judgment of the court, says 'Sylva cædua and subbois, or underwood, are not, it should seem from 45 Edw. III. synonymous; for subbois is stated to be comprehended in it, not to be it itself, or to be the same thing with it. Sylva cædua seems to comprehend, vi termini, besides underwood, all such wood as is occasionally cut, either in body, branch or root, with the statutable exception only of gros bois, properly so called, when it is of that age at which it is by the 45 Edw. III. exempt from being tithed, i. e. of twenty years or upwards.' Underwood, therefore, is one species of sylva cædua, and possibly the firs and larches may be sylva cædua, though not underwood. It is, however, unnecessary to decide in this case whether these firs be underwood or not. It is sufficient to say that they are not saleable underwoods, and therefore that they are not rateable to the relief of the poor." Order of sessions confirmed.

Whether the woods are saleable underwoods or not is a question of fact for the sessions.

Reg. v. Narberth North, 1 P. & D. 590; 9 A. & E. 815. This was an appeal against a poor-rate, whereby the appellant was rated for "Cannaster Wood." Rate quashed. Case:—The appellant is the owner and occupier of Cannaster Wood, in the parish of Narberth North, of the extent of 350 acres, or thereabouts. The wood consists chiefly of oak, but a few ash, alder, and beech trees, grow therein. The oaks do not grow from acorns, or original or maiden trees, but from old oak stools belonging to trees that were last felled about 1786. About that year the wood was cut down by the then proprietor, and at that time they were cut from old stools. Since that period they have again sprung up from the old stools, but no regular cutting has taken place until within the last four years. Several of the trees grow from the same stool. They are called poles, and are used for colliery purposes, and for fire-wood. The appellant, during each of the last three years, has cut down portions of these poles and sold them. The mode of treating them while felling, is to cut off at the stump the worse shoots, and leave the best and most promising shoot to stand for further growth. These poles are sold by the dozen, and not by admeasurement, as large timber is sold. They have been occasionally waste-weeded by cutting down the crooked shoots to improve the trees that remained; waste-weedings are permitted to lie on the ground to rot. The trees or poles cut down by the appellant had been growing for fifty years. The bark is stripped from the poles and sold by the ton, and the poles thus stripped are sold for the use of collieries by the dozen. The sessions considered that these trees were not "saleable underwood." Littledale, J. "No case has been decided exactly like the present. The first question is, whether this is underwood at all; and I should consider all such small growths as were never likely to grow into timber to be underwood. If, for instance, ash or oak are treated in such a manner as shows that they were not planted with a view to become timber, but were cut down at stated periods for hop-poles and other purposes, I should consider them to be underwood. The trees in the present instance, I should suppose, were never intended to grow up to timber; and, from the facts stated in the case, I should say they were underwood. The next question is, are they saleable underwood? All wood that is or may be sold, is in one sense saleable; but I apprehend the meaning of the expression in the statute applies to that description of underwood only which yields a succession of profits; and that must depend on the mode in which a plantation is managed. All the particulars which determine whether the underwood is saleable or not, ought in fact to be determined by the sessions. In Aubrey v. Fisher, 10 East, 446, the question was left to the jury. So in this case, the question turned on peculiar circumstances, and was left to the decision of the sessions, and I cannot say they have decided wrong." Williams, J. "The sessions intended, no doubt, to leave a question for our decision; and if they came to a wrong conclusion, we are at liberty to reverse it. It has been contended that these plantations yield a profit, and are therefore rateable; but that is not sufficient, for timber does so likewise, which is confessedly excluded. I agree, however, that the nature of the tree does not determine the question; for if oaks were cut down every twenty-five years, they would no doubt be rateable. The treatment of the plantation, therefore, by the owner, must be the point looked at. If so, the question may be asked, where the limits are to be placed as to the periodical cuttings, which distinguish underwood from timber? If ash may be cut down every fifteen years, and the slower-growing oak every thirty or forty, and both be applied to the same purposes, can one be said to be underwood and not the other? No case draws any such distinction. If, then, there is no rule of law to determine what shall be underwood or what not, there is nothing to prevent the sessions from determining the question of fact according to the treatment of the wood by the owner. They have done so in this case, as the jury did in Aubrey v Fisher, and I concur in thinking their decision ought not to be disturbed." Coleridge, J. "I am of the same opinion, although I have come to it with some difficulty, owing to the previous decisions. On inquiring into what is saleable underwood, we have to determine whether it is underwood, and whether it is saleable. Without pretending to be a naturalist, I should say that any shoots growing from old stools, in plantations, among other trees, constitute underwood, and therefore I do not quarrel with the decision in Rex v. Ferrybridge, (a) which determined that firs and larches are not underwood, because they do not grow from stools, but when cut down their boles rot in the ground. The court, however, went out of their way in that case, to lay down definitions of underwood, which I think are not applicable. I think that these poles were underwood. Then are they saleable underwood? No doubt they are, for they are actually sold; but, according to Rex v. Ferrybridge, we are told to look at the purpose for which they are planted and cut down, and that, if profit is not the principal object of the cutting, they are not rateable. But look at the different copses throughout the country, which are growing from old stools, or as firs and larches in plantations, which every one knows are ordinarily planted as nurses for other trees. In the lapse of a few years they are capable of yielding great profit; on principle, therefore, one would conceive that such growths should be rateable. But the original purpose of planting in either of these cases does not include the profits actually received. Mr. Williams (in support of the rate) went near to give the proper definition of saleable underwood, in stating it to include all such growths as are capable of reproduction, and of being treated by their owner so as to yield a succession of profits. And I agree that with such plantations the owner shall not be allowed to avoid the rate, by any irregular mode of directing the cuttings. But let us look at the facts of the case. The wood, it appears, was cut down fifty years ago, and lately there have been regular cuttings for the last three or four years; but these cuttings do not appear to have been for the mere purpose of getting a profit, but from the additional motive of improving the plantation. These are the facts, and upon these the sessions do not find that anything has been done out of the ordinary course adopted in that county by woodcutters, to avoid the poor's-rate, which they ought to have done in order to bring the case within the argument of Mr. Williams. They have therefore concluded that this is not a case in which there is such a calculable succession of profits as to justify a rate. Now I do not say the sessions have come to a right conclusion, and if I had had to decide, I might probably have adopted a different view; but as it is a pure question of fact, unless we can see that the sessions were wrong in point of law, we ought not to disturb their decision. To that extent only my judgment goes." Order of sessions confirmed.

Underwoods.

7. Exemption from Rates.

7. Exemption from Rates.

Property, which may be the usual subject-matter of a rate, is often exempted by express provision; and when tolls are so exempted, the land is so also; and when the value of land, &c. which had previously been rated, is enhanced in value by improvements carried on under acts of parliament, it is frequently provided that the rates shall be imposed according to its former and not according to its improved value. The following cases are examples of each of these classes.

Churches and chapels are exempted from poor-rates.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 30, it is enacted, that from and after the first day of October, 1833, no person or persons shall be rated or liable to be rated, or to pay to any church, or poor-rates, or cesses, for or in respect of any churches, district churches, chapels, meeting-houses, or premises, or such part thereof as shall be exclusively appropriated to public religious worship, and which (other than churches, district churches, and episcopal chapels of the Established Church) shall be duly certified for the performance of such religious worship, according to the provisions of any act now in force: Provided always, that no person or persons shall be hereby exempted from any such rates or cesses for or in respect of any parts of such churches, district churches, chapels, meeting-houses, or other premises which are not so exclusively appropriated, and from which parts not so exclusively appropriated, such person or persons shall receive any rent or rents, or shall derive profit or advantage. Sect. 2 further provides, that no person shall be liable to any such rates or cesses, because the said churches, district churches, chapels, meeting-houses or other premises, or any vestry-room belonging thereto, or any part thereof, may be used for Sunday or Infant Schools, or for the charitable education of the poor.

If exclusively appropriated.

May be used for Sunday schools

Land and buildings occupied by scientific and literary societies are also exempt.

By 6 & 7 Vic. c. 36, it is enacted, that after the 1st Oct. 1843, no person shall be assessed or rated, or liable to be assessed or rated, or liable to pay to any county, borough, parochial or other local rates or cesses, in respect of any land, houses or buildings, or parts of houses or buildings belonging to any society instituted for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively, either as tenant or as owner, and occupied by it for the transaction of its business, and for carrying into effect its purposes; provided that such society shall be supported wholly or in part by voluntary contributions, and shall not, and by its laws may not make any dividend, gift, division or bonus in money unto or between any of its members; and provided also that such society shall obtain the certificate of the barrister or lord advocate, as therein mentioned.

If supported by voluntary contributions.

And duly certified.

Mode of obtaining the certificate.

Sect. 2 enacts, that before any society shall have the benefit of this act, such society shall cause three copies of their rules, signed by the chief officer, and three members of the committee, and the clerk, to be submitted, in England and Ireland, to the barrister appointed to certify the rules of the friendly societies, and in Scotland to the lord advocate, to ascertain if the society is entitled to the benefit of the act; and the barrister shall give a certificate on each of the copies that the society is entitled to the benefit of the act, or shall state in writing the grounds on which the certificate is withheld, one copy to be returned to the society, one to be retained by the barrister, and one to be transmitted by the barrister to the clerk of the peace for the borough or county where the land, &c. is situated, and shall be by him laid before the recorder or justices at the quarter sessions, or adjourned, next after fresh copy shall have been so certified and transmitted; and the recorder and justices shall confirm the same without motion, and it shall be filed without fee.

Alterations of rules to be certified.

Sect. 3. If the rules shall be altered, as to the property or constitution of the society, the alterations, within a month, must be submitted to the barrister and filed as before; in the mean time, the society to have the benefit of the act as if no alterations had been made. If the barrister refuses to certify, then, subject to the appeal, the society shall not have the benefit of the act from the time of alteration.

Sect. 4. Fee to barrister not to exceed one guinea.

Fee.

Sect. 5. If the barrister shall refuse to certify, the society may submit the rules to the quarter sessions, together with the reasons assigned, and the justices or recorder may order the same to be filed; and such filing shall have the same effect as if the barrister had certified.

Appeal against refusal.

Sect. 6. Any person assessed to the rate from which the society shall be exempted, may appeal against the certificate of the barrister to the quarter sessions, within four months after the first rate made after the filing of the certificate, or within four months after the first rate made, or after the exemption has been claimed; the appellant to give to the clerk of the society, twenty-one days previously to the sitting of the court, notice in writing of the intention to, and the grounds of appeal, and within four days after, notice to enter into a recognizance before one justice, with two sureties, to try the appeal and abide the order of the court, and pay such costs as may be awarded; and at such sessions, after proof that the notice and statement have been given, the appeal shall be heard, according to the grounds of appeal, and not otherwise; and if the certificate shall appear to be granted contrary to the act, the sessions may annul it and award costs to the party appealing or appealed against, and the determination of the sessions shall be conclusive.

Appeal against certificate.

By 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 57, it is enacted, that "No tolls to be taken at any gate erected or to be erected by the trustees or commissioners of any turnpike road, nor toll-house erected or to be erected for the purpose of collecting the same, nor any person in respect of such tolls or toll-house, shall be rated or assessed towards the payment of any poor's-rate, or any other public or parochial levy whatsoever."

Tolls and toll-houses of turnpikes are exempted from poor-rate.

Rex v. The Trustees of the Dover Road, 1 N. & P. 157; 5 A. & E. 693. Trustees were appointed under a local act for making a road, and they were empowered to purchase lands, which should vest in them, and to take tolls thereon, and apply the receipts to the payment of the interest of the shareholders, &c. Lord Denman, C. J. "I do not apprehend there can be a turnpike-road in the kingdom, if this is not one, both in the popular and legal sense of the term. If that be so, the tolls taken on this road fall expressly within that clause of the General Turnpike Act, which exempts such tolls from poor's-rate. If any difficulty had been pointed out in carrying that clause into effect, by showing that its provisions are inconsistent with the provisions of the local act, we might have been compelled to look more closely into the two statutes; but to speculate now on supposed inconsistencies which may exist between other provisions of the two acts, would be to enter upon the province of legislation, with which we have nothing to do." Patteson, J. "It seems to me the only question is, whether Dover Street is a turnpike-road or not; if it be a turnpike-road (of which there can be no doubt), then the provisions of the General Turnpike Act are applicable to it as far as they can be applied. Whether all the provisions are applicable or not is immaterial to the present question." Williams, J. concurred. Coleridge, J. "I am quite of the same opinion. The basis of the argument to-day has been founded on a supposed difference between the situation of these trustees and the ordinary trustees of turnpike-roads, in order to show that the latter are not rateable, because they are mere trustees for the public. But how would that argument apply to a case which must constantly arise, when a mortgagee of tolls brings ejectment, and obtains possession of the toll-houses and tolls. It cannot be said that he is not a beneficial occupier; but could it be contended that he is not expressly within both the words and the provisions of the 51st section of the General Act?" Order of sessions quashed.

Trustees of a local act for making a road, who are also enabled to take tolls, are not rateable.

Nor a mortgagee of tolls, &c., in possession.

Rex v. Calder and Hebble Navigation, 1 B. & Ald. 263. By 9 Geo. III. the proprietors were empowered to take certain duties "which should at all times thereafter be exempted from the payment of any taxes, rates, assessments, or impositions whatsoever." There was no express exemption of the land taken for the navigation, as land. The proprietors had built a house, which was occupied by their servant, and for which they agreed to pay a proportion of the rate, resisting only the rate upon the land covered with water and the towing-path, from which the proprietors derived no emolument, but the rates, &c. It was held that the company were not rateable for the land; some doubt was entertained whether as tolls were at that time held to be rateable eo nomine, it was not the intention to exempt them only; but, as Abbott, J., observed, "It appears that the rates and duties form the only profit arising out of the land. These the legislature has expressly exempted from the payment of the poor-rate, and the only profit of the land being exempted, it would be a strong thing to say that the land itself should still continue subject to the rate. At the time of passing this act, tolls eo nomine were considered rateable, but I can find no instance in which the tolls having been rated, the land has also been rated in respect of any other profit;" and after alluding to the oldest case on tolls, Rex v. Wickham Market, 3 Keble, 540, and Rex v. Cardington, Cowp. 581, he added, "if, as it appears from these cases, by the word 'tolls' may be meant the thing in respect of which the tolls are received, the exemption of tolls by the legislature is an exemption of that in respect of which they are receivable."

empted, the canal itself is exempted.

Lands embanked from the river Thames are exempt from poor-rates by the 7 Geo. III. c. 37.

Rex v. London Gas Company, 8 B. & C. 54. In a rate made within the parish of St. Bride, the London Gas Light Company was rated by the 7 Geo. III. c. 37, for houses, sheds, and premises. The premises consist of a wharf, buildings and premises abutting on the river Thames, near Blackfriars Bridge, held by the company under a lease granted by the New River company, a part of which premises is in St. Bride, and liable to be rated thereto, and the remaining parts of such buildings, with the wharf and premises, covering and comprising a space of 22,642 feet, superficial measure, and which the company claim to be exempted from the rate, are built upon ground and soil which were formerly part of the ground and soil of the river Thames, and were inclosed and embanked by the New River Company, and became vested in the Gas Company as lessees for a term yet unexpired, of the adjoining wharf and ground in front of which the said ground and soil of the said river were so inclosed and embanked. The inclosure and embankment were made by the New River Company under the act 7 Geo. III. c. 37, by which, (after reciting that it would tend to remove many inconveniences if the ground and soil of the river Thames between certain limits, including the land in question, was inclosed and embanked,) it was enacted that it should be lawful for the mayor and council to inclose and embank the said ground. The owners of wharfs abutting on this ground were authorised to inclose that part of it opposite their premises at their own expense, giving certain notices to the town-clerk; and by the 51st section it was enacted, that the ground and soil of the said river so to be inclosed and embanked in the front of every such wharf, should vest in the owner of such adjoining wharf, free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever. By the 52nd section certain quit-rents were imposed upon the land so to be inclosed; and a quit-rent, amounting to 23*l.* 11*s.* 8½*d.* per annum, payable by virtue of the act for the land in question, was redeemed by the New River Company, in 1769, for 471*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* An act was passed in the 39 Geo. III. "for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor of the Parish of St. Bride," by which the overseers were required "to make one general equal pound-rate or assessment for and towards the relief of the poor, and other the ends and purposes of the act, upon all and every person and persons who did or should inhabit, hold, occupy, possess, or enjoy, any land, house, shop, warehouse, coach-house, stable, cellar, vault, or any other building, tenement, or hereditament within the said parish, and on every other person and persons who by law was, were, or should be chargeable or liable to be assessed for or towards the relief of the poor." In the 7 Geo. IV. an act to amend this act was passed, but the 35th section, relating to the poor-rates, was the same as in the former statute. The New River Company, whilst in possession of the ground and soil for which the exemption is now claimed by the Gas Company, were several years regularly rated in respect of the same, and of the buildings erected thereon, and paid their rates until 1825, when a new and higher assessment having been made, they objected to the rate, and claimed a total exemption. The question was, whether the land, comprising the space of 22,642 superficial feet, the wharf and premises, and the said buildings erected thereon, and which are assessed in the said rate upon the annual rental of 400*l.*, are liable to be rated? Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The question in this case is, whether certain property built on land embanked in pursuance of the 7 Geo. III. c. 37, is to be exempt from poor-rates? That act contemplated an undertaking likely to be productive of public benefit, and certain inducements were held forth to the city to carry it into execution; and it provided that the land so embanked should vest in certain persons, 'free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever; and the question is, whether by those words the land is exempt from poor-rates? It has already been decided (a) that it is exempt from the land-tax, and I know not upon what principle that decision could proceed, if it be not exempt from poor-rates also. It is said that an aggregate sum was imposed upon the district for land-tax, which was afterwards subdivided amongst the individuals having property there; and that it was immaterial to government how the division was made, provided the whole sum was raised. It was also said that the act of parliament, being in its nature private, must be considered as a bargain between those who were parties to it, and that the city at large might in expectation of benefit from the embankment have consented that the land should not bear any part of the land-tax. But that argument is equally applicable to the present case. The poor may be substituted for the government; the whole sum to be raised for them is first calculated; and the amount to be raised remains the same, whatever be the property in the district liable to contribute. Again, the embankment might be beneficial in a peculiar manner to the parish as well as to the city at large, and the inhabitants of the parish might, on that account, agree that it should be exempt from poor-rates. If the premises in question were exempt from this burden by the 7 Geo. III. c. 37, I think that no alteration has been made by the 39 Geo. III. and 7 Geo. IV.; for the object of those statutes was only to provide a new mode of making and raising assessments for the relief of the poor, and not to bring in any new matter as the subject of assessment which was not so before they passed. They merely enumerate more specially the same descriptions of property that were mentioned more generally in the stat. 43 Eliz. The recent acts were passed alio intuitu, and we ought not in justice, as we are not bound by any rule of law, to make them applicable to any new thing. We were then pressed with the case of Perchard v. Heywood (8 T. R. 486), where it was held that houses built on this land were liable to house and window-tax. But that was a very different case. The object of the tax was to raise as large a sum as possible for the use of the public, and the amount raised would have been lessened had any houses been exempted, whereas the amount raised for land-tax or poor-rate would not; and I think that the decision as to the land-tax ought to guide our judgment on this occasion. One or two very recent cases are analogous to this. In Chatfield v. Ruston, (3 B. & C. 863,) where a private inclosure act secured to the vicar of a parish a certain yearly sum of money, 'free and clear of all rates, taxes, and deductions whatsoever,' it was held that he was not rateable in respect of that sum to the relief of the poor; and in Mitchell v. Fordham (6 B. & C. 274), it was held that the words 'free from all taxes and deductions whatsoever except land-tax,' gave the like exemption from poor-rates. For these reasons I think that the premises in question are exempt from poor-rate, and that the rate must be amended." Bayley, J. "I am of the same opinion. The cases cited by my Lord Tenterden are in point. Besides, the house and window-tax was a new one imposed after the exemption was given; and the exemption may be considered analogous to a covenant to pay taxes which applies to old taxes or others substituted for them, but not to taxes entirely new, unless there are express words to give it such extensive operation." Holroyd, J., concurred. Rate to be amended.

7. Exemption from Rates.

Where a statute directs that the canal shall be rated as the adjoining land, the value arising from tolls must be excluded.

Rex v. St. Mary's, Leicester, 6 M. & S. 400. The Leicestershire and Northamptonshire Union Canal Company were empowered by statute to make a canal, to purchase land, and erect buildings; and it was enacted, that such lands and buildings should be rated "in the same proportion as other lands and buildings adjoining to or lying near the same are or shall be rated." The company have a toll-house in St. Mary's, at which a considerable part of the tolls are collected, and they were rated for them, the same becoming due and payable in the parish. The court were of opinion that tolls, per se, were not rateable but only in connection with some local real property, and that there was no doubt upon the construction of the statute; that it had prescribed a special and definite mode of ascertaining the value of these lands, which excluded the consideration of the tolls. Order confirmed for reducing the rate to the value of adjoining lands, exclusive of tolls.

Partial Exemption from Rates.

In several local acts it is enacted that the land used for canals, &c. shall not be rated according to its improved value, but upon a rate fixed by the particular statute.

The Worcester and Birmingham Canal to be rated only as the adjoining land.

Rex v. St. Peter, Worcester, 5 B. & C. 473; 8 D. & R. 331. By 31 Geo. III. c. 31, s. 77, it was enacted, that the company should be rated to all parochial taxes in respect of their lands, &c., in the same proportion as other lands lying near the same should be rated, and as the same lands would be rateable in case the same were the property of individuals in their natural capacity. By 38 Geo. III. c. 31, s. 20, it was enacted, that the company should be rated to all parochial taxes in respect of the lands used by them for the purpose of the said navigation, in the same proportion as other lands and buildings adjoining or lying near the canal should be rated; but it was further enacted, that it should be lawful for the company to agree with any owner of lands adjoining their lands, taken for the purpose of the said navigation, for an exemption from all rates and taxes in respect of such lands, and for charging the same upon the adjoining lands of such persons; and in all such cases the parochial taxes, rates, &c. which might be thereafter charged upon or payable in respect of the lands so taken for the purposes of the said navigation, should be rated and charged upon such adjoining lands, and upon the owners and occupiers thereof, and the lands of the company should be exempted and discharged therefrom. Bayley, J. "This case is perfectly clear. It is in effect decided by the Grand Junction Canal Company's case, and Rex v. St. Mary's, Leicester. These cases establish this principle, that, unless there is some clause of exemption in the act of parliament, land taken for the purpose of a canal will be rateable, not according to the value of the land when it was taken for a canal, but according to the value which it has acquired from being used for a canal. But canals are supposed to be of public benefit, and therefore some canal acts have clauses of exemption, so as to leave land upon the same footing in this respect, as it was when taken for a canal. It has been argued, that the true construction of the clause of exemption is that the rates are to be equally laid upon all the property assessed, and that it is only confirmatory of the common law in that respect; but in construing statutes, we are bound to give statutable effect to the words used, and so construing them, I think that the effect of the clause is to exempt the company from being rated for the increased value of the land by the canal."

Partial exemption from Rates.

So also the Grand Junction Canal Company.

Rex v. Grand Junction Canal Company, 1 B. & A. 289. A canal act directed that the company should be rated for all lands and buildings in the same proportion as other lands and buildings lying near the same, and as the same would be rateable if they were the property of individuals in their natural capacity; and a subsequent act directed that all rates and assessments upon the personal estate of the company should be assessed in every parish in proportion to the length of the canal in such parish. The Court of K. B. held that the company were liable to be rated for their lands, &c. only at the same value as other adjacent lands, and not according to the improved value derived from the land being used for the purposes of the canal. Bayley, J. "It has been urged, that the legislature only meant to regulate the proportion in which the canal was to be rated to the other lands adjacent, as, for instance, if those lands were charged with three-fourths of the rack-rent, then the canal also was to be three-fourths of the value, and so on in any other case. Now it would have been quite useless to introduce any provision to that effect, for in all cases that mode must be adopted." Abbott, J. observed, "that the rate was bad in point of form, as the statute directs it to be made on the rates and personal estate of the company, and the present rate was on the canal."

So also the Chelmer and Blackwater Navigation.

Rex v. Chelmer and Blackwater Navigation, 2 B. & Ad. 14. Case:— By the 33 Geo. III. c. 93, power was given to make and maintain a navigable communication between Chelmsford and Collier's Reach, in or near the river Blackwater, and the company were authorised to purchase lands for the purposes of the act; and the navigation and works were not to be subject to the control of any commissioners of sewers, or to any law relating to sewers. And it was enacted that the company "shall and may from time to time hereafter be rated and charged to all parliamentary and parochial taxes, rates, and assessments, for or on account of any lands or grounds to be purchased or taken, or of any warehouses or other buildings to be erected by them in pursuance of this act, in the same proportions as other lands, grounds, and buildings adjoining to or lying near the same are or shall be rated and charged." In pursuance of this act, the company completed the navigation by deepening and cleansing, and in some places widening the channel of the river Blackwater, and by occasionally making cuts or deviations from the line of the river. These additional cuts, and the towing-paths along the whole line of navigation, were made upon lands purchased and held by the company under the act. It was admitted that for these new cuts and the towing-paths, or the profits arising from them exclusively, and not for any profits arising from the old bed of the river, the appellants were rateable. In the parish of Heybridge the new cut leading to what is termed the sea-basin is something more than a mile and a half in length. In the other parishes through which the navigation passes the new cuts are of much less magnitude than in Heybridge, having been taken for the purpose of making locks and wears, the expenses of keeping up which are much greater than the profits accruing to the company in those respective parishes, from the land so taken, exclusive of the old bed of the river. If the company were to be rated for the new cuts, and for the wharfs and buildings occupied by them in the parish of Heybridge, according to the profits arising to them therefrom within the parish, the court found the sum of 187*l.* 3*s.* ought to be the sum inserted in the rate instead of 800*l.* But if the company were to be rated for their new cuts, wharfs, and buildings in the parish, without reference to navigation profits, in the same proportions as other lands, grounds, and buildings adjoining thereto in the parish of Heybridge, then the court found that the sum of 35*l.* ought to be inserted in the rate instead of 800*l.* The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the appellants were exempt from any rateability in respect of the land taken and used by them for the purposes of the navigation as aforesaid, beyond the value of the adjoining land? If so, then the sum to be inserted in the rate was to be reduced to 35*l.*; otherwise to stand at 187*l.* 3*s.* Lord Tenterden, C. J., delivered the judgment. "The question in this case is upon the meaning of the words, 'in the same proportion as other lands, grounds, and buildings adjoining to, or being near the same, are or shall be rated or charged;' whether, in assessing the lands and buildings of the company, their value is to be estimated according to the value of other adjoining lands and buildings, or the assessment is to be made upon that proportion of the actual value (say three-fourths or four-fifths) upon which the other lands and buildings are assessed. I propose to consider the matter, first, without reference to any of the cases that bear upon the question; and secondly, with reference to those cases. The first thing that strikes the mind upon the latter construction of the act is, that it supposes the legislature to have contemplated, that property is not rated according to its actual value, but according to some part only of that value. In fact, this mode of rating is sometimes adopted; but I conceive the law generally assumes that all rateable property is to be rated according to its actual value. The statute of Elizabeth does not point to any other estimate. If all the property of the same kind in a parish is rated only upon some definite part of its actual value, the effect is the same as if the rate were upon the entire actual value, and no occupier of such property has any ground of complaint. If, in making the assessment, the rent is first considered, and then the rate upon land is made on a certain part of the rent, and the rate upon houses on some greater part of, or the whole rent, which is sometimes done, this is not properly a rating upon a part only of the value, but upon all the supposed real value; because, in estimating the value of land, it may be reasonable to make a greater deduction from the rent than is made from the rent of houses, on account of the greater expense (of cultivation and repairs) in the case of lands than in the case of houses. The act of parliament upon which the question arises, was passed for the purpose of making a river navigable. It was foreseen that this object could not be effectually accomplished without making, in some places, new cuts and channels deviating from the ancient course of the river, erecting locks or wears in some places to overcome the inconvenience of natural falls and changes of level, and erecting buildings for the residence of lock-keepers or collectors of tolls, or for warehousing merchandize, and power is therefore given to the company to purchase land for these purposes. It was well observed in the argument at the bar, that the ground taken for locks or wears would be productive of no value in the hands of the company, there being no lockage dues, but only a mileage toll. The company are not rateable in respect of the ancient course of the river, for the soil thereof is not vested in them, nor are they properly the occupiers thereof, but entitled only to the privilege of using it in the nature of an easement. No rate can be imposed upon tolls eo nomine, so that if there should happen to be in any parish no new cut or channel made, nor any profitable building erected, but land should be bought for locks and wears which are in themselves unprofitable, it might be contended that the company would not be rateable at all for the land so taken, and the rateable property in the parish would be pro tanto diminished, and the parish therefore would lose by the project authorised by the statute; while in another parish where land should be taken for a new cut or channel, or the erection of a profitable building, the amount of the mileage toll for passing along such new cut or channel, or the profit of the building, might be greater than the value of the neighbouring land, or the profit of similar buildings, and in this instance the parish would gain by the project. Whereas, if the land taken and buildings erected throughout the whole line are estimated and rated according to the value of the adjoining land and similar buildings, no parish will either lose or gain by the project, but every parish will be in the same situation as if the act had not passed, or nothing had been done under it. So, also, if the whole undertaking should prove unprofitable, as some projects of this kind have done, and the amount of the mileage toll, or receipts of the buildings erected, should be less than the value of the neighbouring land or of similar buildings, no parish would become a loser by the diminution of the value of rateable property within it, at whatever period of time such diminution might happen to take place. And if we suppose the legislature to have intended to prevent loss or gain to the parishes, and to leave all in the same state and condition as if no land were taken or building erected by virtue of the act, we must construe the words in question to mean, that the land and buildings of the company shall be estimated for the purpose of rates according to the value of other land and buildings adjoining or near: that the value shall be taken according to that rule, without regard to any increase or diminution of actual value. And the words used may certainly very well admit of this sense and construction. It may be observed, also, that this is an affirmative clause of the act, intended to designate the rating; and if it mean only that the company shall be rated on the same part of the value of their property as the adjoining lands and buildings, it will be quite useless and ineffectual, because a rate on a different part, whether greater or less, would be bad, being manifestly unequal and unjust." After some remarks on the cases of the Leeds and Liverpool Canal Company, St. Mary Leicester, the Grand Junction Canal Company, St. Peter the Great, and King's Swinford, the learned Judge observed—" The two cases of the Grand Junction Canal and St. Peter the Great are plain authorities in favour of it, there being no substantial difference in the language of the statutes. In this case, therefore, the rate must be reduced to 35*l.*, that is, to the value of the land and buildings of the company, estimated according to the value of the adjoining lands and buildings, and not according to their actual productive value to the company." Rate reduced accordingly.

Proprietors of the river Dun navigation are not rateable.

Rex v. Barnby Dun, 2 A. & E. 551, N. & M. 436. Case:—The river Dun navigation commences in Tinsley, two miles east of Sheffield, and proceeds in an easterly direction down the course of the river Dun to Holmstile in Doncaster, and thence, in an easterly direction, through the township of Barnby Dun, to Fishlock Ferry, whence it communicates with the river Ouse. By 12 Geo. I. c. 38, "for making the river Dun navigable from Holmstile in Doncaster, to Tinsley, a township near Sheffield," certain persons were appointed undertakers of the navigation, and empowered to make the river navigable from Holmstile to Tinsley, to make new cuts through the adjoining lands, and to receive certain rates and duties of tonnage. By 13 Geo. I. c. 20, "for improving the navigation of the river Dun from Holmstile to Wilsick House, in the parish of Barnby Dun," similar powers are given to certain other persons as to this part of the river. By 6 Geo. II. c. 9, the two navigation companies are united into one, by the name of "The Company of Proprietors of the Navigation of the River Dun," and all powers given to the separate navigation companies are vested in the united company. In this act is a clause "that the company shall not be taxed or assessed for the same, or the profits thereof, at any place or places except Sheffield or Doncaster aforesaid;"—at which places it was provided that books of accounts should be kept. Under 13 Geo. II. c. 11, "for improving the navigation of the River Dun from Wilsick House, in Barnby Dun, to Fishlock Ferry," the navigation was continued to its present eastern extremity, and the Stainforth Cut (176 yards of which are in Barnby Dun) was made. By 2 Geo. IV. c. xlvi., reciting that it would be advantageous to abandon the existing navigation in certain parts, and to make and maintain other cuts or canals in lieu thereof, the company are empowered to make certain cuts or canals, with proper towing-paths, and, among others, a cut or canal from the lower end of an existing cut at Barnby Dun, to the upper end of Stainforth Cut: And in consideration of the expenses of making such cuts, &c., the company were authorised to receive rates and duties over and above all other rates and duties allowed to be taken by the former acts: And it was enacted, "that the intended cuts should be considered and taken as part of the navigation of the river Dun, and that all and every the provisoes, directions, restrictions, penalties, and forfeitures, by the acts above-mentioned, respecting the boatmen employed on the said river, the owners, commanders, masters, or rulers of boats, keels, or vessels, or other persons employed thereon, or passing the locks of the said river, or making obstructions thereon, or in any other respect relating thereto, or for the benefit or protection of the said navigation, and all other powers and authorities therein contained, should extend and be applicable to the said cuts, &c., as fully in every respect as if the said cuts, &c., had originally been part of the river Dun navigation, and had been inserted in the several acts." Under this act, the new cut in Barnby Dun was completed in 1830. The navigation company was rated for the new cut or canal, land covered with water, basins, towing-paths, locks and tools, and other works." The rate is fair, supposing that the company are liable to be rated at all. The township of Barnby Dun is co-extensive with the parish. The navigation through the township consists entirely of land, the length being: The old cut 308 yards, the new cut 3498 yards, part of Stainforth cut 176 yards; total in Barnby Dun 3982 yards. The bed of the river is not used as a navigation. Previous to the completion of the new cut the company had been rated, and had paid rates in Barnby Dun upon a sum of 66*l.* 5*s.* Upon the completion of the new cut, the company were rated upon 173*l.* 5*s.*, upon which assessment they have paid one rate. The company also, in December, 1831, paid a highway composition in Barnby Dun upon the same assessment. Land was purchased by the company for making the new canal in Barnby Dun. The company is rated, by mutual agreement, in the adjoining township of Kirk Sandell upon 90*l.* It is also rated in the adjoining township of Stainforth and in other townships. It is not rated in Sheffield;—indeed no part of this navigation is in the township of Sheffield, neither is it rated in the township of Tinsley, where it terminates. It is rated in the township of Doncaster upon 247*l.* 10*s.* The entire length of the navigation of the river is thirty miles, of which length at least twelve miles are canals or cuts. The questions for the consideration of the court are, first whether the company is liable to be rated in the township of Barnby Dun at all; and, secondly, if so liable, upon what sum or in what manner, ought it to be rated in that township?—Lord Denman, C. J. "I confess that a good deal of doubt has existed in my mind in the course of this argument. I am so very unwilling that any of these cases should be decided on general views of utility, which may vary in every court before which cases happen to come, that I am extremely anxious to see how the words of the statute will decide the case; and I think that the words of this statute are sufficient to decide that this company is exempt from the payment of rates in respect of the land in question, which land was taken under the powers of the act of 2 Geo. IV. It is true that words could hardly be less pertinent for the purposes which they really meant to carry into effect, than those employed in the first section of 6 Geo. II. giving the exemption itself. They say, 'That the company of proprietors, their successors or assigns, or any of them, shall not be taxed or assessed for the same, or the profits thereof, at any place or places, except Sheffield or Doncaster aforesaid,' (those places at which the accounts were to be made up; but I think I cannot in any way connect the rateability with the mere making up of the accounts). It seems to me, that though there are no words immediately preceding that clause, which can be properly referred to by the words 'same or the profits thereof,' yet we are bound to suppose that the legislature must have meant by the words 'same' such of the before-mentioned articles as were capable of producing profits that might be rated. In that sense we must hold that the words 'taxed or assessed for the same' refer to the navigation which was regulated by this act of parliament. Then the question is, whether the exemption so given is extended by 2 Geo. IV. to those lands which the company is enabled to take for the purposes of that act? The object of that act is to enable the company to 'abandon the existing navigation in certain parts, and to make other cuts in lieu thereof;' and the company are empowered to make such cuts, with proper towing-paths and so forth, and among others the cut in question. Then, in consideration of the expense the company shall be at in making the new cuts, &c., they are allowed to take certain additional rates and duties; and then it is further enacted, that the intended cuts and canals, alterations and works, shall be considered and taken as part of the navigation of the river Dun. Then there are other words, as to the effect of which I think very considerable doubt may be entertained. These first words, however, appear to me to be sufficient to establish the right of the company to exemption in respect of their newly-acquired lands, just in the same way as if they had possessed them under the act containing the original exemption clause. For, when it is said 'that the said intended cuts, &c., shall be considered and taken as part of the navigation of the river Dun,' we are then bound to say, that these cuts, being a part of the navigation of the river, the privileges of exemption, which the company possessed in respect of the original works, are conferred upon them in respect of those which are substituted. [The Solicitor-General suggested that there were parts of the navigation made between 6 Geo. and 2 Geo. IV. which were admitted not to be exempt, and which had always been rated.] At present the question is confined to the lands that were taken under 2 Geo. IV. and I am proceeding on the principle that those lands are distinctly substituted for, and put in the same situation as the lands that were exempted under the original statute. It seems to me, therefore, that the sessions have done right in quashing the rate, and that we must confirm their order."—Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion. It seems to me that the original exemption in 6 Geo. II. is sufficiently extensive to exempt this land from poor-rates, except so far as they are to be taken in Sheffield and Doncaster. It seems to be admitted that the words, 'taxed, or assessed' are sufficient to exempt from poor-rates, as was decided in Rex v. London Gas Light Company. If that be so, the question is as to the construction of 2 Geo. Geo. IV. which authorises the company to abandon certain parts of the existing navigation, and to make new cuts, &c., in lieu thereof. It appears to me, that as this cut was merely a substitution for what was before exempted, it ought to be governed by the same rules, and subject to the same exemptions. I do not mean to say that this would be so, if there were no clause in 2 Geo. IV. enacting that the intended cuts, &c., should be considered and taken as part of the navigation of the river Dun, &c. It is admitted that this clause does not in express words confer any exemption, but the question is, whether the effect of the whole of those words taken together, though the particular word is not used, does not give an exemption? It seems to me, that it gives exactly the same exemption as the previous statute gave as to the original works. Though, generally speaking, where the parish are entitled to rate any portion of land, that right is not taken away, unless there be some express reason for it, I do not apprehend that it is necessary to use in distinct terms the word 'exemption.' If, upon a fair construction of the act, the exemption appears, the right of the parish to rate the particular land is effectually taken away, though the word 'exemption' be not used. It seems to me, therefore, that as this cut is a substitution for the bed of the river, it is governed by the same rules as the original navigation, and that the company are exempt." Williams, J. "I am entirely of the same opinion. I agree that it is not desirable in these cases to attempt to lay down any general rules, because the question must depend upon the language of the acts of parliament in each case. It is undoubtedly true, that it is incumbent on the appellants to show that by some express clause they are protected from rateability; otherwise it would follow as a matter of course that the statutory liability would be imposed upon them, and they would be subject to be rated for this cut. Therefore, the matter comes to this single question, whether the two acts of parliament taken together do constitute that exemption? The words, 'the same, and the profits thereof,' which are found in the clause of 6 Geo. II. can with no propriety be referred to any thing but the navigation. This clause must, in my opinion, be understood as constituting an exemption from being assessed to the poor-rates in the township of Barnby Dun. Then comes the second question, namely, Whether the new works, made under 2 Geo. IV. are in like manner exempt? and I own, if the question had stood upon those general words, 'provisoes, directions, instructions, penalties, forfeitures,' &c., there not being introduced into the clause the word 'exemption,' I should have had great difficulty in saying that these words touched the question of exemption from taxes or assessments. But it seems to me to be quite clear, from the other words which have been referred to, that the intended cuts, &c., did, when they were made, become identical with the original navigation of the river Dun. This consideration disposes of the question; and I am of opinion, that as the original navigation was exempt, so also are the substituted cuts and canals."

The Leeds and Liverpool Canal Company are rateable for their canal as land, so also as to the branches.

Reg. v. Leeds and Liverpool Navigation Company, 2 N. & P. 540; 7 A. & E. 671. By the 10 Geo. III. c. cxiv., a company was empowered to make a canal and take tolls, and by s. 49, it was enacted, "that the said tolls shall at all times hereafter be exempted from the payment of any taxes, rates, assessments, or impositions whatsoever, any law to the contrary notwithstanding, other than such taxes, rates, &c. as the land which shall be used for the purposes of the said navigation would have been subject to, if this act had not been made." The 23 Geo. III. c. xlvii., repealed this act, and incorporated another navigation with the above, and contained a similar exempting clause as to the tolls to be taken. By the 59 Geo. III. c. cv., the company were empowered to make a cut, and all the exemptions in the former act were extended to the purposes of that act; and by s. 17, the lands, houses, wharfs, warehouses, and other houses of the company were to be rateable to the poor, as lands, &c. of a like quality, where the same shall be situate. Held, that the land occupied by the original line of the canal was to be rated as land, without reference to its use as a canal, according to the annual value of the adjoining land at the time of the making the rate: and that the lands mentioned in s. 17, meant the land of the canal covered with water; and that the branches of the canal must be considered as part of the whole navigation, and were rateable on the same principle. The 23 Geo. III. c. xlvii., s. 31, which contained the exempting clause from rates and taxes of the tolls of the canal, excepted therefrom quays, wharfs, warehouses, or other houses. Held, that wharfs erected by the company on their branches, were to be rated according to their annual value to let.

The wharfs are exempt.

Lands are not exempt, although they were devised to the parish, subject to that condition, and although they had not been rated for many years.

Reg. v. Ellis, 7 Jurist, 107, 11 L. J. 20, M. C. J. Drake, who died in 1713, by his will gave to the township of Keighley certain messuages and land in Keighley, for the maintenance of a sufficient and unmarried qualified schoolmaster for teaching of children residing and dwelling within the town and parish of Keighley, in the English, Latin, and Greek tongues; the schoolmaster to teach children within the town of Keighley, free and without any other reward or stipend, and have the rent and profits of the messuages, land, and closes, yearly paid to him by the feoffees. And, he added, "it is further my desire that the town and parish of Keighley aforesaid will exempt, free, and discharge my said messuages, barns, and buildings, lands and tenements in Keighley aforesaid, of and from the payment of all lays, taxes, impositions, and assessments whatsoever." And he gave the residue to be laid out in lands for the use of the schoolmaster. The township of Keighley has been hitherto in the enjoyment of the property so devised by J. Drake for these benevolent and charitable purposes; and during all the time, the property has been exempted from parochial assessments; and there was a contract with the tenants, on the supposition of the exemption. The funds had been applied according to the trusts of the will. It did not appear whether the town and parish of Keighley were co-extensive. Cur. adv. vult. Patteson, J., after adverting to some formal objections (see post), said:—"I come now to the merits of the case, and I cannot see any real doubt upon it. Assuming that the desire expressed in J.

Partial exemption from Rates.

Drake's will of 1713 amounts to a condition, it is one which the law will not allow to be performed; and the present inhabitants of the township of Keighley are in no way bound by the acts of their predecessors in this respect. Even if the rents were appropriated to the aid of the poor, I should think the condition void, to the extent of not exempting the land, much more when it is for the maintenance of a schoolmaster, by which the poor and other inhabitants do not necessarily receive any benefit. I do not profess to determine what effect the nonperformance of the condition may have on the rights of the trustees or the parish to the land in question; but I am very clear that the condition cannot legally exempt the beneficial occupier of the lands from being rated to the poor in respect of them. The devise is of certain premises to the township of Keighley 'for the maintenance of a sufficient and unmarried and qualified schoolmaster for teaching of children residing and dwelling within the said town and parish of Keighley, in the English, Latin, and Greek tongues, which said schoolmaster for the time being shall always teach and instruct children within the said town of Keighley, free and without any other reward or stipend whatsoever, and have the rents and profits yearly paid him at Whitsuntide and Martinmas by my executors and feoffees hereinafter named.' The will then names feoffees, and provides for a succession of them, and gives them power to suspend the master for misconduct, and to make leases and other powers. It then goes on: 'And it is further my desire, that the town and parish of Keighley aforesaid will exempt, free, and discharge my said messuages, &c., in Keighley aforesaid of and from the payment of all lays, taxes, impositions, and assessments whatsoever.' It then gives the residue of his personalty to his executors, 'to be by them laid out in lands to and for the use, behoof, and maintenance of such a schoolmaster as is aforesaid mentioned, to teach and instruct within the town of Keighley aforesaid:' but nothing is said about any exception of such after-purchased lands. The lands in respect of which the rates were made, are not in the occupation of the schoolmaster, but of a tenant. It appears that they have never been rated. It does not very distinctly appear whether they are the lands actually devised by the will, or lands purchased with the residue of the personalty; but I will assume that they are the lands devised by the will. There is some little confusion in the will in using the expressions town of Keighley and parish of Keighley, the township being a part only of the parish, and maintaining its own poor; but I do not think that material. I decide upon the broad ground, that the assent of the inhabitants of the township immediately after the death of the testator, cannot make a compact binding on their successors: and that the lapse of time during which no rate has been made cannot make that valid which was not so originally. As I entertain no doubt on the subject, I think that the rule for a mandamus must be made absolute." Rule absolute.

8. Property rateable by Local Acts.

8. Property rateable under local Acts.

Besides the statute of Elizabeth, local statutes are frequently passed, either enlarging or limiting that statute; and where the local act uses different languages from the 43 of Eliz., the local act is not to be construed as if the language was the same. "The 43 Eliz. uses language applicable generally to the kingdom at large. The 9 & 10 Will. III. (local act) having in its view the town of Hull only, would naturally suit its expressions to the state and circumstances of that place; and where we find a deviation from the language in the stat. of Eliz. the presumption is, that the deviation was intended, and that a different system was thought better for Hull, and that the language therefore proper for such system was used." C. J. Abbott. Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 3 B. & C. 516; 5 D. & R. 359.

Property rateable by Local Acts.

Non-resident owners of stock in trade and ships are rateable in Hull.

One ground of appeal in the above case was, that persons non-resident in Hull, but having shops and stock in trade, were not rated. Also, that the overseer had omitted owners and part-owners of ships, which were registered at Hull, and usually traded to and from that port, and were within the port at the time when the rate was made. The 9 & 10 Will. III. (local act) enacted, that the rates should be raised by taxation of every inhabitant, and of all lands, houses, tithes impropriate, appropriation of tithes, and all stocks and estates within the town. Upon this, C. J. Abbott, in giving judgment, said, "It was most properly admitted in argument that 'stocks and estates' must include all stock in trade and personal property. 'Stocks' could have no other meaning, and 'estates,' placed as it is in the clause, must extend to personal estates. This statute, therefore, has these two effective words, which are not to be found in the stat. of Eliz. and these two words remove from this case all distinction between residents and non-residents: under the stat. of Eliz. there is no word applicable to personal property: and it was only on the ground of his being an inhabitant that any owner of personal property could be rated for it, because there is no word to include him except the word inhabitant. Under that statute, therefore, there was necessarily a distinction between residents and non-residents, because the resident was rateable for his personalty within the place, the non-resident not. The distinction, however, under that statute, applied only to those kinds of property which the statute did not specify: for the occupier of lands, houses, &c., and whatever the statute enumerated, was rateable, whether he were resident or not. In this statute, 9 & 10 Will. III., what was defective in this respect in the stat. of Eliz. is supplied: the rate is to be not only upon every inhabitant, but upon all stocks and estates. Lands, houses, and tithes, are all rateable according to the general principles of rating, whether the occupier be resident or not; and it is impossible upon this act to say that lands within the town shall be rated, but that stocks and personalty shall not. The stocks and personalty are not rateable elsewhere, they have all the benefit of the town, and there can be no reason, therefore, when there are words sufficient to include them, they should not be included. We are therefore of opinion that the stock in trade, and ships yielding profit, are liable to be rated."

Waterworks not a tenement within the meaning of a Manchester act.

Rex v. Manchester Waterworks, 3 D. & R. 20; 1 B. & C. 630. The facts of the case will be found in the judgment of the court delivered by Bayley, J. "The question in this case was, whether the company of proprietors of the Manchester and Salford Waterworks, in respect of their trunks, pipes, and other apparatus for supplying the towns of Manchester and Salford with water, were occupiers of what, within the meaning of the statute 32 Geo. III. c. 69, is a tenement. By that act, the commissioners thereby appointed are authorised to ascertain the sum to be raised by rate or assessment on the several inhabitants of the town of Manchester and Salford, and to raise such sums from time to time, by rate or assessment, upon all the tenants and occupiers of all messuages, houses, warehouses, shops, cellars, vaults, stables, coachhouses, brewhouses, and other buildings, gardens or garden ground, and other tenements in the towns of Manchester and Salford. The statute does not adopt the language of the 43 Elizabeth, 'lands and houses,' but enumerates the different properties which I have specified. It does not use the word 'land,' which is used in the statute of Elizabeth, but it uses the word 'tenements,' which the statute does not use. The decisions, therefore, upon the statute of Elizabeth will not govern this case, unless the word tenements here is used in as comprehensive a sense as the words lands there. This is an act for cleansing, lighting, watching, and regulating the streets, lanes, passages, and places within the towns of Manchester and Salford; and a chief object appears by the recital to be, to provide for the peace, security, and accommodation of the inhabitants of the towns and of persons resorting to and passing through them. The occupier of any messuage, dwelling-house, warehouse, or other building, or of any other tenement within either of the towns, of the yearly value of 30*l.* is a commissioner. The word 'tenement' occurs in this part of the act, and is altogether associated with words which denote buildings. Section 39, which gives the power of rating, directs the commissioners to ascertain every year the sums to be raised by rates on the inhabitants of Manchester, and by rates on the inhabitants of Salford, as if inhabitants were to be the persons rated; and in addition to such words as denote buildings, and the general word tenements, introduces the words 'gardens and garden grounds, and other tenements.' By section 40 the demand of the rate is to be left at the dwelling-house or tenement occupied. And by section 43, it is recited that several messuages or dwelling-houses, warehouses, or other buildings or tenements in these towns, are let out in lodgings or tenements to divers tenants, and that it would be difficult to rate the occupiers, or recover their rates, and provision is made for rating the landlord of every such messuage, &c., of the yearly value of 4*l.* 10*s.* or upwards, which shall be so let. There are some of the instances in which the word tenement is used in this act; and from these instances and the object of the act, it may be collected in what sense it uses that word. The omission to use the obvious and general word 'lands,' and yet introducing 'gardens and garden-grounds,' implies, that 'lands' in general were not intended to be rated. The object of the act was, to give security and accommodation to the residents and to their property. The inhabited houses, therefore, and every thing connected with residence or trade, as they were to have the advantage, were to be liable to the charge. The houses, warehouses, shops, and all other buildings, were to be rated, because they all had protection. But why were gardens and garden grounds to be included, if lands in general were not? Possibly, because the produce thereof was of value, and was a probable object of depredation, and the general lighting and watching of the towns would give so much additional protection to this species of property, as might properly make it the subject of charge. Gardens, therefore, and garden grounds, may, on this account, be distinguished from other descriptions of land, and may be subjected to this charge, whilst land in general is exempt. Pasture ground, for instance, stone quarries, and other kinds of real property, though included in the 43 Elizabeth, as affording income, and supplying, therefore, the means of contribution, are omitted in this act, because such property derives no equivalent or material protection from it. Upon the ground, therefore, that this statute does not use the comprehensive word land, and uses the word tenement in a very limited sense only, and not in a sense to include the property in question, we are of opinion that this property was not liable to be rated, that it ought to be expunged from the rate." Order of sessions quashed.

Lord of a market in public street not rateable, in Manchester.

Rex v. Mosley, 3 D. & R. 385; 2 B. & C. 226. The lord of the manor was rated under the same act for market sites and profits. The market was held in the open street, and it was contended that this was a tenement. But the court said, "The meaning of the word tenement as used in this act, had been under their consideration on a former occasion; and that they were satisfied that it was intended to be applied to those things only which were ejusdem generis, with those particularly enumerated, and was not intended to be used in the larger sense sometimes given to it: that the subject of the present rate, not being of the same nature as any of the descriptions of property specified in the act, was not liable to be rated." Order of sessions quashed.

The lessee of a private box in Drury Lane theatre is rateable for a tenement, in St. Martin's in the Fields.

Reg. v. St. Martin's in the Fields, 2 G. & D. 426. A. B. Coutts was assessed for a private box in Drury Lane Theatre. Rate amended by striking out the assessment. Case:—The box is in the parish, and the rate was made pursuant to a local act of 10 Geo. 3, c. 75, whereby the overseers, &c. are empowered to make rates for the relief of the poor, "upon every person or persons who do or shall inhabit, hold, occupy, possess or enjoy any land, house, shop, wharf, warehouse, or any other building, tenement or hereditament, or any other person or persons who by law is or are chargeable and assessable for and towards the relief of the poor, s. 13. By an indenture, in 1795, R. B. Sheridan and T. Linley, proprietors of the Theatre, in consideration of 6000*l.*, paid by Thomas Coutts, did demise, &c. a box to him for 100 years, with the exclusive use of the same. The lease was similar in its terms to the subsequent one. T. Coutts occupied the box pursuant to the lease, until 1812, when the theatre was destroyed by fire. In 1812 a new theatre was erected under the powers of two acts of the 50 and 52 Geo. 3, by which the proprietors of the theatre were incorporated; and in 1812, an indenture was executed between the committee of the theatre and T. Coutts, by which, in consideration of 3000*l.* paid, the committee did lease to T. Coutts an entire box in the theatre, on the ground tier, and also the small room communicating therewith, and the exclusive use thereof, with full liberty of ingress and egress every evening upon which any public entertainment, theatrical or musical, should be exhibited in the theatre, or for any number of persons by his order, not exceeding in any one night the number of eight; reserving to the said company free liberty to paint and make alterations in the front of the box, and subject to such regulations by the committee as should be made by them respecting other private boxes in the theatre; but so as such regulations did not prevent T. Coutts from enjoying the exclusive use of the box and room; to hold the same for eighty-two years, at the yearly rent of one penny. There were covenants for quiet enjoyment, and by the lessors, to preserve the box and room for the sole use of T. Coutts, and to repair the same; and in case of fire, to provide a box in another theatre. T. Coutts took possession of the last-mentioned box, room and premises, and, during his life, had the use and enjoyment thereof, and the appellant, at the time of the making of the rate, had and now has the use and enjoyment thereof, according to the said indenture. The box and room are upon a level with the stage, and form a component part of the theatre, which is in the occupation and under the management of parties to whom it is let by the company of proprietors. The occupiers and managers have access to the box and room from the other parts of the buildings by internal doors, of which they keep the keys. The approach to the box and room from the street is by an outer door, which opens to a staircase, by which staircase persons going to the other private boxes in the theatre, some of which are let nightly by the occupiers and managers of the theatre, ascend to those boxes. The outer door next the street, and also the staircase, are under the controul of the occupiers and managers of the theatre, and the door is closed and fastened by them at all times, excepting during the hours of performances. The performances usually continue from seven o'clock in the evening until twelve at night. The question is, whether the appellant is liable to be assessed in respect of the box.—Lord Denman delivered the judgment:—This box was demised to the late Mr. Coutts, under an act for rebuilding the theatre, for a long term of years. The lease grants an exclusive right to occupy the box and a small room adjoining, whenever any performances take place, and a private entrance to the same in common with other private boxes. We are of opinion that the box in question is a tenement within the meaning of the act, and that it is held and occupied by the appellant so as to make her liable to be rated. The words are too large to admit of any other construction, and none of the cases referred to at the bar lead to any different conclusion. It is argued that the proprietors are rated for the whole theatre, and that, if the appellant be also rated, the same premises will in effect be rated twice over. But this consequence by no means follows. The proprietors are rated in respect of their general possession of the theatre, of which the box in question forms a very small part, the rent being only one penny per annum, and may fairly be considered as not taken into account in rating the proprietors; whereas the appellant is rated in respect of this particular box. If, however, the consequence did follow, it would show only that the proprietors were rated too highly, not that the appellant is not liable at all, which is the question submitted to us.

Rex v. Trustees of Shrewsbury, 3 B. & Ad. 216. This was an appeal against a paving rate, assessed on appellants as occupiers of gas pipes. Case:—The company was established, and empowered to break the soil and lay pipes, &c. by 1 Geo. IV. c. lvi. By the paving act of 1 & 2 Geo. IV. it was enacted, "That the charges and expenses of lighting, paving, cleansing, watering, watching, widening, altering, improving, and regulating the said streets, squares, highways, lanes, and other public passages of the town of Shrewsbury, and otherwise putting this act into execution, shall at all times be borne and defrayed by the tenants or occupiers of all the houses, shops, malt-houses, granaries, warehouses, coach-houses, yards, gardens, garden ground, stables, cellars, vaults, wharfs, and other buildings and hereditaments, not only within the outer gates and walls of the said town of Shrewsbury, but also within any part of the said town which the river Severn encompasses, meadow and pasture ground excepted." And the trustees under the act were empowered to make rates upon the tenants and occupiers of all such messuages, houses, shops, malt-houses, &c. (as before, with the same exception), for the purpose of defraying those expenses. In pursuance of the power so given, the company were rated as above mentioned. They have no property within the outer gates and walls, or within any part of the town encompassed by the Severn, except the pipes and apparatus, specified in the assessment. Cur. adv. vult. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "It was admitted that if this had been a poor rate under the statute of Elizabeth, there could have been no doubt that the Gas Light Company would be liable; nor can there be any doubt that the word 'hereditament,' in its large and extensive and ordinary sense, will include the ground and soil in the several ways, lanes, and other places in which the pipes and apparatus belonging to this company are fixed. But it was contended, that the term, as here used, was to be construed with reference to the words among which it was found, and must be applied to hereditaments of the same kind as those particularly enumerated, such as coachhouses, gardens, and so on; and reliance was placed on a case decided not long ago, Rex v. Manchester Waterworks (ante, 262), where the word used was 'tenement,' which is also a term of very large import. In that case it was held by the court that the word should be restrained in construction to tenements of the same kind as the particular ones before enumerated; but there is in this act a circumstance which was not found in the other, the exception, namely, that the act shall not extend to meadows and pastures. Now it is certain that meadows and pastures would have fallen within the meaning of the word 'hereditament,' if they had not been excepted; it was argued, therefore, that this special exemption of meadows and pastures showed that the other word had been previously used in its larger sense. On the other hand it was contended, that these words had been introduced merely ex majori cautelâ. Upon the best consideration we have been able to give this case, we are of opinion that we ought not to consider the exception of meadow and pasture ground as made only for greater caution, but are bound to look upon it as introduced by way of special exception, and so to construe the clause: and, consequently, everything not so specifically excepted must be understood to fall within the general liability. We therefore think that the court of quarter sessions were wrong in striking out the company's name from the rate, and that the rate on them ought to have been allowed." Order of sessions quashed.

8. Property rateable by Local Acts.

Gas pipes are "hereditaments" within the Shrewsbury act.

As to the import of the word building in a local act for paving, see Brown v. Lord Granville, 10 Bing. 70.

Colebrook v. Tickell, 6 N. & M. 483; 4 A. & E. 916. By a local act for Whitechapel, the rector, churchwardens, overseers, and vestrymen, are authorised to make three distinct rates upon all persons who shall inhabit, hold, occupy, possess, or enjoy any land, house, shop, warehouse, or other building, tenement, or hereditament, that is to say, one rate for the relief of the poor, another for the repair of the church, and another for cleansing and lighting the streets, and repairing the highways of the parish,—such last-mentioned rate to be a pound rate upon the annual rent or value of all messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, as should be held or occupied within the parish: it was held, that the word "hereditament," as used in the former as well as the latter part of the enactment, means such hereditaments only as are the subject of actual corporeal occupation, and that therefore no incorporeal hereditament is thereby made rateable. To render an incorporeal hereditament rateable, the local act should be clear and express.

Tithes.

Where by a local act all hereditaments liable to the poor-rate were made chargeable to the repairs of a new church, tithes are rateable. Reg. v. Jus. of Buckingham, 6 A. & E. 388; 1 N. P. 503.

Land adjoining a canal, which has not been converted into a wharf, cannot be rated as such, although timber is permitted to be landed there (a).

Rex v. Regent's Canal, 9 D. & R. 760; 6 B. & C. 720. By the act under which the company was established, it was provided that lands, whether covered with water or not, and dwellings, wharfs, &c. belonging to the company, should be rateable to the poor, the lands according to their quality, and the dwelling-houses, wharfs, &c. according to the nature and respective uses thereof, in like manner as lands, houses, wharfs, &c. of a similar kind in the several parishes where they were respectively situated. The company had, on the margin of a large basin, a piece of land adjoining the private yard of a timber-merchant. This piece of land next the basin consisted of natural ground; it was not faced with brick or timber, and the ground below the water gradually sloped down to the bottom of the basin. The timber-merchant landed his timber upon this piece of land, and it was there marked and measured by the revenue officers. No acknowledgment or rent was paid to the company for this privilege of landing the goods there, but their rates and duties were increased, a greater number of ships entering the basin in consequence of this privilege: held, that this piece of land was not a wharf within the meaning of the act of parliament, and was not liable to be rated as such to the relief of the poor.

Stock not money at interest.

Rex v. Maddermarket (ante, 149). By a local act, inhabitants were rateable for money out at interest: but it was held that money vested in the stocks is not within the statute.

Local act of London Dock Company.

Rex v. St. George, Middlesex, 9 East, 127. By the construction of the local act, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 47, the London Dock Company are liable, even during the first twelve years of their establishment, to be rated for the fair annual value of their warehouses and other works which are finished and productive, though all the works directed by the act be not completed. But such completed works must, under such circumstances, be rated for their value at the rate of 8½*d.* in the pound, and being the rate calculated upon by the legislature to raise 139*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* per quarter upon 3966*l.*, the average rental for ten years preceding the act of parliament, on the premises destroyed by the company in making their works: and which quarterly sum the company were, at all events, bound to pay to the parish during the twelve years, or until the works were completed, whether those works were productive or not. But when productive beyond that sum, the surplus is to be taken in the first instance by the company, in order to reimburse themselves what they may have advanced to the parish to make good the deficiencies, before any such productive surplus existed, until the company shall be reimbursed; therefore, until these purposes are effected, a rate made on the increased real value of the dock premises at more than 8½*d.* in the pound, or a rate of 8½*d.* in the pound on the old average value of the premises before the erection of the company's works, and below the increased value of the new works, is in either case bad.

The company are not rateable for any portion of the dues payable by ships on enter-

Reg. v. The Bristol Dock Company, 1 G. & D. 76; 1 Q. B. 535. Lord Denman. "This case comes before us upon an appeal, by the Bristol Dock Company, against a rate made for the parish of Clifton, wherein the Company was assessed for 'Cumberland bason, entrance to bason, quay-walls, (a) Another question discussed at great length in this case was, whether the land was rateable at its improved value.

wharfs, locks, and dock gates.' It appears from the case that the company was formed under an act of parliament, for the improvement of the port and harbour of Bristol, and invested with various powers for effecting such purposes. The company purchased about eleven acres of land, in the parish of Clifton, and made the works upon which the assessment has been made. It is further stated, that the port of Bristol extends over more than thirty parishes, including Clifton, and that the tolls and dues, in respect of which it is sought to assess the appellants, are imposed upon every vessel entering the port of Bristol, and are collected in different parts of the port of Bristol, out of the parish of Clifton. It is stated, however, that no part of the tolls or dues, except the sum of 311*l.* (as to which no question arises), is received by the appellants within the parish of Clifton, and further, that in many (if not most) of the parishes, composing the port of Bristol, the company has no property whatever. Upon this state of facts, we have to consider whether the company ought to be rated in respect of the property above described, in the same proportion 'as other land in the immediate vicinity, in its original state as meadow or pasture land,' or with the addition of all or some proportion of the tolls and dues so collected within the port of Bristol. This question divides itself into two parts: first, whether by virtue of the act the company is made rateable in the latter manner; and, if not, whether it be so by virtue of the law generally applicable to the rating of property of this description. The first question turns upon the 64th section of the act, which especially refers to the manner in which the company is to pay land and other taxes; the other sections to which we were referred in the argument, respecting principally, if not entirely, the manner in which the act was to be carried into effect. By sect. 64, after reciting that by the making the bason, new course of the river, and other works, certain lands in Clifton, &c., which at that time paid parochial taxes, would, during the intended works, and for many years after, be rendered unproductive and incapable of being rated in aid of the parochial taxes, by which means a greater burthen must be laid on other lands in the same parishes, it was enacted that the appellants should become chargeable with all such land and parochial taxes as the same lands and premises then were or might thereafter be subject to, and that the fund of the company should become liable to pay such taxes then charged, or thereafter to be charged. We think that this enactment falls much short of charging the company with liability in respect of the tolls and dues in question. For, first, if it had been meant to charge the company with such additional liability, it is hardly probable that the property would have been described as 'rendered unproductive and incapable of being rated' during the work, and for many years afterwards. Because the nature of the work (as described in the act) being to make a more commodious communication with the port of Bristol, and generally to improve the same, if the tolls and dues therein received had become liable to the rate, some profit at least must have been expected, immediately upon the completion of the works and the use of the bason entrance; and indeed the act gives the tolls to commence at the end of twelve months from the commencement of the works. Moreover, the mode of rating upon the then state of the property is expressly declared to be the mode to be adopted 'for ever thereafter.' The question then is, whether this property be liable to be rated at the increased value, independently of the operation of this said act. Upon this point, since the decision of Rex v. Nicholson and Williams v. Jones, the principle upon which the rate upon tolls is to be imposed has been fully established, though the application of that admitted principle to each particular case may not always be easy; it is this, that the tolls are rateable as profits of land, occupied within the parish, for which the rate is imposed, and agreeably to it water companies have been rated, (Rex v. Corporation of Bath). So also gas light companies (Rex v. Birmingham Gas Light Company), and canal companies (Rex v. Woking). In all these cases, and in many others, to ing the port, but only for the basin as ordinary land.

8. Property rateable by Local Acts.

8. Property rateable by Local Acts.

which, in a matter not now to be disputed, it is not needful to refer, the rate is imposed in respect of profits arising within the parish. Whether this principle, so established in these cases, would, without further authority, necessarily exclude the consideration of profits arising elsewhere, it is not necessary to consider. Because we find the principle, so extended, expressly recognised, and the reasons for it most fully given, especially by Bayley, J. and Littledale, J., in the case of Rex v. Coke, where the tolls of a light-house were held not rateable, because they accrued out of the parish. It was further added, by both those learned judges, that in the cases to which we have above generally referred, 'the profits have arisen, and the use of the thing out of which they have arisen has been in the place where the rate is made.' This question again came before this court in the case of Rex v. Aire and Calder Navigation, and the same principle was again recognised by the court, in a short judgment, probably because the subject was considered as exhausted by the reasoning of the two learned judges above referred to, which was expressly brought under notice and relied upon in the course of argument. Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the assessment should be reduced to the sum of 3*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, being after the rate of 1*s.* in the pound on 67*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, 'the present rateable annual value of the property in question, as land.' "

9. Principle of Valuation.

Rate to be made on the improved value.

Every rate should be equal, and made upon the improved value of the property, unless a local act otherwise directs. The rent is in general the fair criterion of value, but a deduction is generally allowed for the annual expense of repairing houses.

By the parochial assessment act, the rate is made on the net annual value of all hereditaments, subject to deductions specified in the act. See the statute in Appendix.

A rate apparently unequal will be quashed by the Court of Queen's Bench, but inequality will not be presumed.

An unequal rate on lands and houses is not illegal.

Rex v. Brograve, 4 Burr. 2491. Land was assessed at three-fourths of the yearly value, and houses at a moiety. It was said that this was apparently unequal, as the assessment was on the value and not on the rent. The proportion had been agreed on at a vestry. Lord Mansfield said, "he did not see any apparent inequality. He thought it right and proper, that there should be a difference made between lands and houses; for, there are several charges incident to houses (as repairs, window-taxes, and such like deductions and outgoings). The justices have thought it an equal rate: and all the parish were of that opinion in the year 1764." Yates, J. "The court cannot enter into the inequality of it, unless it appears to us to be self-evidently, necessarily, and unavoidably unequal."

Nor though they are rated alike.

Rex v. Butler, Cald. 93; 1 Bott, 127. The case stated that for some years farms, consisting of land and houses, had been assessed at 1*d.* in the pound, and dwelling-houses by themselves at three farthings in the pound. That from 1777 to 1780, both lands and houses were rated at 1*d.* in the pound. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The question before the court is, does the rate upon the face of it appear to be equal or unequal? Unless it is manifestly unequal, the court will presume it equal. Circumstances may vary the value of different estates; and if this plainly appear, then what is said in Rex v. Brograve (ante, 182,) applies: but you take advantage of an obiter saying of the court in that case, when the true legal ground of the authority is decisive against you." Rate affirmed.

A rate of two-thirds of the rent of land, and one-half of houses

Rex v. Tomlinson, 9 B. & C. 163; 4 M. & R. 169. A rate was made in Stoke-upon-Trent, on the farms, lands, tithes, and market tolls, at two-thirds of their estimated net yearly rent payable to the landlord, but houses, potworks, and every other description of building, and collieries and coal mines were assessed upon only one-half of their estimated net yearly rent. The lessees of certain water-works were assessed in respect of their water-works and water-pipes upon only one-half of their estimated yearly rental value: but the rate was amended as to them, by assessing them upon two-thirds of such rental value, being in the same proportion as land. The question for the court was, whether, as the occupiers of farms, &c., are assessed upon two-thirds of the rent, the occupiers of collieries and coal mines ought not to be rated in the like proportion upon two-thirds of their rent. Bayley, J. "The question was whether this rate was upon an unequal and consequently an unjust principle. It estimated the value of all property according to the net yearly rent; but it fixed the rate according to two-thirds of the rent in the case of lands, &c., whilst it fixed it according to one-half only in the case of houses and collieries: and whether this made the rate necessarily unequal was the question. It was not disputed but that the sessions were in general the proper judges of value; but it was insisted that if they fixed the proportions by a wrong rule, this court might and ought to interfere. And if the proportions have been fixed by a rule which we can pronounce to be wrong, we are of opinion our interference is requisite. Can we then pronounce the rule acted upon in this case to be wrong? It was almost admitted that there might properly be a distinction in the proportions between houses and land, though it was urged there could not be one between land and collieries; but when the consequences of this admission were seen, the admission was withdrawn. We are however of opinion that there may properly be a difference in the proportion of the annual rent upon which houses and lands are to be rated, it belonging to the sessions to fix the precise proportion. We also think that houses and collieries may be classed together. The rate is to be made on the occupier according to the annual profit or value which the subject of occupation produces; and it makes no difference in the amount of the rate whether the occupier be tenant or owner. In the case of houses, the annual profit or value is always a part only of the annual rent paid to the landlord. Some portion of that rent ought to be set apart to form a fund for repairing or rebuilding, when necessary; in other words, to maintain or reproduce the subject of occupation, a much less part, if any, of the annual rent of land is wanted for either of those purposes, and the whole in some cases, or nearly the whole in others, is annual profit or value. This difference is mentioned by Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Brograve. In the case of collieries also, a part of the annual rent must be appropriated to repair and replace the works and engines, and in that respect they are in the same situation with houses. The sessions were therefore warranted in making a difference in the proportion of rating, with reference to annual rent, between houses and collieries on the one hand, and land on the other; and it is impossible for us to say that the proportion which they have fixed is not the right one. It was urged in the argument that the sessions have fixed the rate according to unequal proportions of the net rent, and it was contended that by the words 'net rent,' was meant the clear annual rent, after every deduction, including therefore the part to be set aside for repairs and reproduction of the subject of the rate, and consequently that the rate was unequal. But we cannot attribute any such meaning to these terms for the purpose of invalidating the rate. We think they mean only that part of the rent which goes into the pocket of the landlord, and which is the rent paid by the tenant, after deducting taxes and charges of collection; and this construction will support the rate. If the rate has been according to different proportions of the clear annual profit or value of the subject of occupation, it would have been otherwise; but annual rent is not annual profit or value. We are therefore of opinion that the order of sessions should be confirmed." Order of sessions confirmed.

property are assessed be apparently unequal, (viz. one-half of the realty and one-fortieth of the interest of the personalty at 4 per cent.) the court will quash such poor rate.

If by a local act, land and stock are to be rated in equal proportions, an unequal rate will be quashed.

Rex v. Fakenham, 4 Dougl. 261. A local act for Norwich directed the rate to be made on the occupiers of land, &c., and on all persons using and having stocks and personal estates, &c., in equal proportion, according to their several and respective values and estates. A rate therefore on one moiety of the rack-rent, and one-fortieth part of the supposed stock and personal estate, is manifestly bad.

A person must be rated according to the improved value of his property.

Rex v. T. Mast, 6 T. R. 154. T. Mast appealed against a poor rate for the parish of St. Neot's, in which he was rated at the real annual value of his estate; W. Fowler was rated at 29*l.* per annum, but the real annual value, in consequence of improvements made by him, was 175*l.*; he occupied, besides, other lands and property in the parish, for which he was rated after the same manner. Gorham was rated in the same way. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The assessment for the relief of the poor ought to be so contrived that each inhabitant should contribute in proportion to his ability, which is to be ascertained by his possessions in the parish. Every inhabitant ought to be rated according to the present value of his estate, whether it continue of the same value as when he purchased it, or whether the estate be rendered more valuable by the improvements which he has made upon it. If a person choose to keep his property in money, and the fact of his possessing it be clearly proved, he is rateable for that: (a) but if he prefer using it in the amelioration of an estate or other property, he is rateable for the same in another shape. Suppose a person has a small piece of land in the heart of a town, which is only of small value, and he afterwards build on it, he must be rated according to its improved value, with the building on it. In short, in whatever way the owner makes his estate more valuable, he is liable to contribute to the relief of the poor in proportion to that improved estate; and whatever be the proportion of rating in a parish, whether to the full value or otherwise, the rate must be equally made on all persons; there cannot be one medium of rating for one class of persons, and another for another class. Now here it appears that the appellant was rated at the full annual value of every thing that he possessed, while other inhabitants were not rated at a third of their estates. With regard to the discretion of the justices, if indeed they had confirmed this rate generally, without disclosing to us the grounds on which they proceeded, we could not have quashed the rate, because the inequality does not appear upon the face of it; but they have disclosed those grounds; and, on the case as stated, it is impossible not to say that they have made a mistake. This rate appears so defective throughout, that it cannot be amended." Ashhurst and Grose, Js., of the same opinion.

Though the rent may be less.

Rex v. Skingle, 7 T. R. 549. William Hill and John Bull occupied lands of a greater annual value than the rent reserved by the lease, but the rate was made according to the rent which was the annual value at the commencement of the lease. The court were of opinion that the case was too clear for argument, and that the rate ought to be regulated according to the improved value.

The profits of a mineral spring are part of the produce of the land, and the occupier is rateable upon the value of the whole.

Rex v. Miller, Cowp. 619. Lands with buildings thereon, and a well of mineral water thereout arising, called the Cheltenham Spa, were demised to W. M. at a yearly rent of 100*l.* The lands and buildings, independent of the well, were of the annual value of 20*l.* Rent paid for the mineral water, 80*l.* The profits of the mineral water arise from the sale thereof, and the company resorting thereto, which is very various and uncertain. W. M. was rated to the poor at 100*l.* a year. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Nothing can be plainer than the present case. This is not a rate upon the profits of the well, but upon four acres of land, let to the defendant at 100*l.* a year; and the value arises partly from the buildings, and partly from the spring that produces the mineral water. Therefore, the profits of the spring are part of the produce of the land. In Worcestershire and Cheshire, where there are salt springs, the rent of the land is increased considerably on that account. So here, the consideration of the well increases the rent. It is part of the produce of the land, and therefore, as such, ought to be rated."

Land, the annual value of which is improved by a spring of water, is liable to be rated at the aggregate annual value of the land and spring together.

Rex v. The New River Company, 1 M. & Sel. 503. In a rate for Little Amwell, the New River Company were rated for land in Chadwell Mead. They were incorporated June 21, 1619, for conveying water from a spring in Chadwell Mead, in Little Amwell, to London and Westminster; and they supply a great part of the same with water, by a cut called the New River, leading from the spring to a reservoir at Islington, whence it is distributed by pipes over the metropolis, and from which the company receive considerable profit beyond the sum at which it is rated. The water of the New River is derived part from the river Lea, and part from a spring rising in and inclosed in a basin in Chadwell Mead, which is the subject of the present rate, and is the freehold of the Company, and in their occupation. The quantity of water derived from each of these sources is nearly equal. That part of Chadwell Mead which is occupied by the company, and is the subject of the rate, contains about two acres: it consists solely of the basin in which the spring rises, and so much of the cut from thence, called the New River, as lies in Little Amwell, where it joins the water taken from the river Lea, and from thence it continues to run with the said water so taken from the river Lea in one joint course to Islington. The land alone, without the spring, and not covered with water, is of the annual value of 5*l.* The whole profits of the company arise from the sale of the water, no part of which is distributed, nor is any money received for it, nor is any due in Little Amwell. If the advantage which the company derive from the use of the spring may by law be included in the rate upon the land, the land and spring of water together are of the annual value at which they are rated. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This is a rate imposed on land, including a spring of water, as being of the aggregate annual value of 300*l.* The case finds 'that the land alone, without the spring, and if not covered with water, is of the annual value of 5*l.*; but if the advantage which the company derive from the use of the spring may by law be included in the rate upon the land, the land and spring together are of the annual value at which they are rated.' Much of the argument against this rate seems to be built on a perversion of the terms of this finding. I am at a loss to discover between this case and Rex v. Miller, any other distinction than that which has been alluded to, viz. that the quality of the two waters is different, the one being a mineral, and the other plain water. It has been assumed, indeed, that in that case all the profits were received in the parish where the land lay: but the case does not warrant any such conclusion; and we know perfectly well that the mineral water in question, in that case, is disposed of in great quantities at distant places. It may be said also, that in this case the owners of the property are also the occupiers, but there the property was in the occupation of a tenant; to which the answer has already been given, viz. that the circumstance is no otherwise material than as it affords a more easy criterion for ascertaining the annual value. Here, then, is land and water inclosed in a basin upon the land, which falls within the legal description of land; and although a considerable portion of the profits of such water is derived from pipes, through which it is distributed to other places, yet it is found that the water has a certain ascertained value at the fountain head: and in cases of this kind it is enough to ascertain the local value of the property, without inquiring whether it yields a return on the spot. A degree of confusion has arisen from comparing this to the case of tolls upon canals, whereas they are essentially different; for tolls are an incorporeal hereditament, and have no local corporeal existence, so as to be the subject of rate until they become due. Then we have been pressed with the case of Rex v. Sculcoates, where it was holden that the commissioners in whom a drainage was vested were not rateable, but that was so holden upon the principle that where there is not a scintilla of benefit derived from the occupation, the property is not rateable there the commissioners were merely servants of the public, having no divisible fund in their hands either as trustees or to their own benefit, and deriving no advantage from the drainage, and the only persons benefited by it were the owners of lands in other parishes In Rex v Bath it was assumed in the decision that the water was the subject of rate in the parish where it was impounded in the reservoirs, the only question there being, whether the corporation were rateable in that parish to the extent of all the profits received by them, or whether the rate ought not to have been framed with reference to the contributory profits derived to the company in other parishes Without going farther into the several cases upon this subject, and feeling no disposition to overrule the case of Rex v Miller, I think there is no doubt that the sessions have come to a right decision The property is locally valuable in the parish where it is rated, although that value is derived from extrinsic circumstances, and although the profits are actually received elsewhere" Grose, J "I cannot distinguish this case from the common case of land on which corn grows In such case the land is assessed according to its value, and that value is estimated according to that which it produces so here the land produces a spring, and the value of it is to be computed according to the benefit which the spring produces to the company" Le Blanc, J "The question is, whether in estimating the value of land, something which is peculiar to the land, and makes it more profitable to the occupier than if it were away, can be taken into consideration and that question has already been determined in Rex v Miller, which as it seems to me, cannot be distinguished from the present case. Does it make any difference to the occupier whether he takes the profits of his land by selling the produce on the land itself, or by disposing of it elsewhere? Suppose a man occupying land out of which he digs brick-earth, and converts it into bricks in an adjacent parish, would he not be liable to be rated as for brick land, in the parish where the land lies, in the same manner as if he had sold the bricks in that parish?" Bayley, J "I think it is clear that the company are liable to be rated for the spring, which is part of the produce of the land The company have the means of carrying this produce to market, where it affords a beneficial return, and it can make no difference whether they convey it along a canal, or in carts and waggons, or by any other mode. Perhaps it may be fair that in fixing the quantum of rate on this property, respect should be had to the benefit which results to the company in the different parishes through which the water is conveyed But this observation applies only to the quantum, with which we have nothing to do" Order of sessions confirmed

The profits of the steelyard of a weighing machine are rateable as arising from the house itself the machine being annexed to the freehold

Rex v St Nicholas, Gloucester, Cald 262, 1 T R 723, n The mayor and burgesses were possessed of a house in St Nicholas, in Gloucester, and erected a machine in a street by the said house for weighing waggons, carts, &c, for which they received 2*d* per ton for what was weighed there, but persons were not compellable to weigh their carriages, &c The steelyard, part of the said machine, was in the said house, which was called the engine house the house, exclusive of the profits of the machine, was worth 5*l*, and the profits worth about 40*l* a year the mayor and burgesses were rated "for the machine-house, 24*l* 1*l* 16*s*" Per Lord Mansfield, C J. "The nature of the thing shows that the machine is annexed to the freehold, they are one entire thing, and are together rated by the common known name (the machine-house), which comprehends both The steelyard is the most valuable part of the house the house therefore applied to this use may be said to be built for the steelyard, and not the steelyard for the house the clear profits are undoubtedly rateable but a liberal allowance ought to be made for wear and tear, labour and attendance" Willes, J said, "If the machine be appurtenant to the building, its clear profits are undoubtedly rateable. If a billiard-table stand in a house, and the house should, in respect of such table, let at a higher sum, it would be rateable, while the table continued there and was so let at the advanced rate." Rate affirmed.

The profits of a house having a carding-machine are rateable.

In Rex v. Hogg, Cald. 266; 1 T. R. 721. A house wherein there was a carding-machine for manufacturing cotton, being let together with the machine as one entire subject, (the building being worth only two guineas a year by itself, but together with the machine rated at 36*l.*,) was properly rated as one subject. The engine was not fixed to the premises, but capable of being removed at pleasure. Ashhurst, J., considered the house and engine as one entire subject, and therefore rateable as such. Buller, J., considered them rateable both on that ground, and also because the engine was permanent property, visible, and yielding profit. Grose, J., agreed upon the same grounds.

But if the principal is exempt so also is the machinery attached to it. Rex v. Bilstin, (ante, 233.)

The Hull Dock Company are rateable, although the expenditure in repairs "during the period for which the rate was made," exceeded the amount of the duties received.

Rex v. The Hull Dock Company, 5 M. & Sel. 394. This company was rated for dock and wharf at 2,240*l.* in the parish of Sculcoates. By 14 Geo. III. c. 56, for making public quays or wharfs at Kingston-upon-Hull, for the better securing his Majesty's revenues of customs, and for the benefit of commerce in the port, for making a dock with works, for the accommodation of vessels using the said port, the dock company were required to make a dock, and also a quay or wharf, and other works, and to repair and cleanse them. Duties on ships lading or unlading in the port, and wharfage rates on goods landed on the quay, were granted to the company. Besides the emoluments arising from the dock dues, the company derive considerable emoluments from the rent of warehouses which they have erected, agreeably to the directions of the act. The warehouses are in the town of Hull, and not in the parish of Sculcoates. Two-third parts of the dock are situate within the parishes of the Holy Trinity and St. Mary, in Hull, and the remaining third is in the parish of Sculcoates. In 1814, the dock company rebuilt the lock and entrance basin, under the advice of their engineer. On the 2nd of May, 1814, the ships were removed out of the dock, and the execution of the works commenced, and continued until the 31st December last. The expenditure of the company in respect of these works, from the 20th of September, (being the day when the rate was made to commence,) to the 31st of December following, amounted to 5,483*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, and the receipts of the company, in respect of the duties and wharfage rates during the same period, amounted only to 2963*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.* The further estimated expenditure of the company in respect of the works, from the 31st of December to the 20th of March, (when the six months for which the rate was made would expire,) would be 1193*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*, and the receipts of the company, in respect of the duties and wharfage-rates, would be 97*l.* only. The chief part of the expense was incurred in respect of the lock and entrance basin, which are situate in the town of Hull, but are essentially necessary to that part of the dock which is situate in Sculcoates. The parishioners of Sculcoates have, in assessing the dock company to previous poor-rates, annually made a deduction of the company's expenditure in respect of the ordinary repairs of the dock, from the gross annual amount of the company's duties and wharfage rates. The sums stated in the account of expenses were all necessarily expended in making the repairs in question, and provided the dock company is entitled to deduct the same from their gross receipts, there are not any net proceeds whatever for the use of the company. The company did not, in consequence of the rebuilding of the lock and entrance basin, become entitled to any greater or other duties or wharfage rates than they were before entitled to. The question was, whether the company were liable to be rated for the six months for which the rate was made. Lord Ellenborough: "The act of parliament does not require the company to make a dividend at all events, nor does it say that they shall divide to the extreme limit of the moneys received. Suppose an application to be made to this court for a mandamus, to compel the company to make a dividend of the whole balance in their hands, if the company were able to show that the expense of the necessary repairs of the basin for the ensuing year would be likely to absorb the whole or the greater part of this balance, would the court grant such a mandamus? And if the company were in any one year to do so improvident an act, as to make a dividend to the uttermost penny, not reserving anything for prospective demands; as there is a provision in the act, (s. 37,) enabling them to make calls from the proprietors for the necessary purposes of the act, the consequence would be, that instead of reserving out of the funds in hand, sufficient means to cover these expenses, they must call upon the proprietors to refund what they had improvidently distributed among them. The language of the act is, 'that the company shall have power to make such calls of money from the proprietors of shares, to defray the expenses of, or carry on the works authorised by the act, as they from time to time shall find wanting and necessary for those purposes.' So that the company may call upon the proprietors of shares to refund what they have received. There is no question as to the rateability of this property; it has very properly been admitted that it is rateable. The question therefore is, whether a rate can be imposed in respect of property which is generally rateable, but the profits of which, owing to certain incidental and necessary expenses, have been for a time exhausted. As to which it is to be observed, that a rate is not always imposed on property in the particular year in which it makes a productive return, for if that were so, there could be no rate in respect of saleable underwoods and the like property, which are productive only after a series of years, except in those years in which the profits arose. But in Rex v. Mirfield, (a) (ante,) it was decided, after much consideration, that saleable underwoods were rateable annually, in proportion to their value, though they should happen not to be cut down more than once in twenty-one years. In the present case, the company have no money in hand, but they have a property which upon an average is productive. To hold that in every case where property is rateable, an account is to be taken for the particular period for which the rate is imposed, of the precise amount of its productiveness, and that if there is the smallest decrease, the rate is to be reduced pro tanto, would, in my judgment, be infinitely inconvenient. Every house must then have its separate assessment, in order to let in the particular deductions belonging to each; and this mode of assessment would be open to every species of fraud, because the largest deductions would be attempted to be thrown on periods of the greatest pressure. It appears to me that this rate is well imposed, and that the average profits of the company are not liable to be merged in the partial expenditure of any particular period." Bayley, J. "The case does not state that this property, communibus annis, is not productive of profit, but only that during this particular period it was not profitable. It appears that the company are in possession of property which is primâ facie rateable: the rate therefore is well imposed, unless the property is to be exempted on the ground of its not being profitable at the particular period for which the assessment is made. As to which Rex v. Mirfield is a clear authority, that the principle which is to govern is, whether it be profitable communibus annis." Abbott, J. "I think the company cannot relieve themselves from this rate, by showing that on occasion of some extraordinary expenditure during the particular period for which the rate is made, that which would have gone to the account of profits has been otherwise consumed. To hold any such rule would, in my opinion, be productive of great inconvenience; for by the same rule I know not what answer could be given to the farmholder or householder, if they were to claim a similar exemption, because of the extraordinary expense which they had incurred in the maintenance or improvement of their house or land." Holroyd, J. "I am of the same opinion. The only doubt which I have entertained has been on s. 22, which obliges the company to repair the dock and other works, and if under that section the specific rates had been, so far as they were required, appropriated to that purpose only, I should have entertained considerable doubt whether any property vested in the trustees could properly be made the subject of rate, beyond the surplus which might happen to remain in their hands, after satisfying the expenses attending the maintenance and repair of the works, but the case is not so, for I find by s 42, the duties payable by virtue of the act are vested in the company, as their own proper moneys, and for their use, in consideration of the expenses incurred by them in making and maintaining the works, and by s 53 they are to take an account annually, and declare what dividend shall be made, so that they stand in the same situation with any other canal company"

Rent the criterion, without reference to the sum expended in rendering it so profitable

Rex v Attwood, 9 D & R 328, 6 B & C 277 The appellant, Attwood, was proprietor and occupier of a coal mine, upon which he had expended 10,000*l* in planting the mine and setting it to work It had been at work one year and a quarter, and the value of the whole coals raised did not exceed 5000*l*. The full value of the annual produce, after deducting expenses of working, amounted to 428*l* 9*s*, at which sum it was rated Other appellants were rated for other mines upon the annual sums paid by them for royalties or rent, the produce of the mine, being less respectively than the sums expended in setting the mines to work Abbott, C J "We are all of opinion that the owner and occupier of a coal mine should be rated at such sum as it would let for, and no more As to the other points, the first was, that the rate should not be imposed upon the coal produced, because that was part of the realty It is the first time that such a proposition has ever been submitted, although many coal mines in various parts of the country have constantly been rated, and the argument in support of it is wholly untenable The legislature has expressly made coal mines rateable, and they must be rated for what they produce, viz the coals Slate quarries and brick earth are also exhausted in a few years, but nevertheless the rate is always imposed upon that which is produced The other argument was, that the rate could not be imposed until the expenses of planting the mine had been recouped But I cannot discover any distinction between expenses incurred in bringing a mine to a productive state, and in building a house. The attempt to distinguish them is perfectly novel, and if a house is to be rated as soon as built and occupied, it must follow that a coal mine is rateable as soon as it is set at work and produces coals, although it may happen that the expense of sinking it may never be recovered If the tenant of a mine expends money in making it more productive, that is the same as expending money in improving a farm or a house, in which cases the tenant is rateable for the improved value" Rate upon Attwood ordered, and the residue confirmed (a) stock in trade, and the profits of other manufactories in the parish of B. were not rated to the poor: Held, that the company were not rateable to the amount of the profits of their trade, but for a sum equal in amount to that for which the premises would let to other persons willing to carry on the same business.

sent of the commissioners, broke up the soil in the streets, and fixed therein the apparatus for the conveyance of gas. The company carry on a considerable manufacture of coke and gas upon these premises, and derive a profit from the sale of each of these articles. The coke is conveyed from the premises of the company to the purchasers by carts, and the gas by trunks and pipes. Gas and coke are both manufactured from coal at a great expense of fuel, and the machinery and apparatus necessary for the manufacture of these articles are also very expensive, and require frequent renewal. Stock in trade, and the profits of the manufactories in the parish of Birmingham, are not rated to the poor in this rate. The premises, pipes, &c., mentioned in the assessment, if rated to the poor as other land within the parish, i. e. if the profits from the sale of gas are not included, are worth 200*l.* per annum, but are worth 800*l.* if the profits from the sale of gas are included. If the court should be of opinion that the profits accruing to the company from the sale of gas are not rateable, or that they can only be rated as the profits of a manufactory, the rate ought to be amended by inserting 200*l.* in lieu of 800*l.*, and 5*l.* in lieu of 20*l.* Abbott, C. J. "The question proposed to us is not, whether the company be rateable for their buildings above ground, or their pipes under ground, but to what amount they are rateable. I am of opinion that the amount in respect of which they are rateable is the sum for which the buildings, trunks, and pipes would let to a person who is willing to carry on the business there. It appears from the statement in the case, 'that the premises, trunks, and pipes, if rated to the poor as other lands in the parish, that is, if the profits arising from the sale of gas are not included, are worth 200*l.* per annum, but if the profits are included, then they are worth 800*l.* per annum.' I am of opinion that the profits are not in this case rateable. If they were, a blacksmith's forge might be rated, not at what it would be let for, but at the sum which the blacksmith acquires by it. The distinction between the cases cited and the present is, that here the profits rated are those of a manufactory, which are obtained by applying the skill and industry of men to capital brought from a distance for that purpose. They are very different from the profits of canals or of mineral waters, which are natural products arising within the parish, and rendering the land in which they are situate the more valuable. For these reasons I am of opinion that the rate must be amended by inserting 200*l.* as the value of the buildings and pipes, and 5*l.* as the sum to be paid." Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the company ought to be assessed, not at a sum equal to the annual profits of their trade, but at that sum which the buildings, trunks, and pipes would produce to them if let at an annual rent to persons willing to carry on the trade, or that rent which the company would be forced to pay if the premises were not their own property." Holroyd, J. "I am of opinion that the rate ought to be amended, as it is stated that in this parish the profits of other manufactories are not rated. In the case of a canal, the land and the water are rated; and here an attempt is made to rate the pipes and the gas; but that cannot be done. The proper criterion for the rate to be imposed upon these lands and buildings is the rent at which they could be let to a person willing to carry on the business." Best, J. "I think that such a construction ought to be put upon the statute of Eliz. as to include the largest portion of productive property, because I feel that the poor-rate, and various other burdens, press heavily upon the landed interest. This rate, however, cannot be supported; it is an assessment upon the profits of trade. Now that is not a correct mode of assessment. Besides, a rate even upon the net profits of any undertaking must be unjust and unequal in a place where similar profits and stock in trade of others are not generally rated. The profits of this company are very different from the tolls of a canal. When a canal is once formed and filled with water, it produces to the proprietor, without anything further being done, a permanent profit in the shape of tolls; but the gas company could obtain no profit by merely laying down these pipes for the conveyance of gas through the streets. The gas must afterwards be manufactured by the company at a great expense, and sent through those pipes before they will be entitled to any recompense. The gas company stand, therefore, in the same situation as any other manufacturer who produces by artificial means a saleable commodity. Now the profits of such a manufacturer could not, with justice, be rated to the relief of the poor in a parish where other profits and other stock in trade are not rated. I think, therefore, that the company ought to be assessed at that annual sum for which the premises and pipes would let to a person willing to carry on the trade." Rate amended.

Where some lands are rated according to the rent, in rating other lands according to their value, the poor rate must be deducted.

Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 5 D. & R. 359 ; 3 B. & C. 516. The appellants were assessed in respect of profits arising from dock dues and wharfage rates received by them. Their net profits for the year amounted to 8900*l.*, after making a fair allowance in respect of repairs and all other expenses incidental to and necessary for making the property profitable, but without making any deduction for poor-rate, which, according to their assessment, amounted to 2225*l.* In giving the judgment, Abbott, C. J., said, "As to the question, whether the rate upon the company should be according to the full amount of their profits, without making any deduction for the sum they are liable to pay for poor-rate, we think that the rate ought not to be so made. This property is to be charged according to its worth and value, in like manner and in the same proportion as other real property is charged in the same rate. If other real property is charged only at three-fourths, or any other part of its value, after making deductions of the same nature as those which have been made in the case of the company, (a) the company ought to be charged in the same proportion. If other real property is charged according to the rack-rent actually paid by the occupier, and according to a rent so estimated, where the occupier is not a tenant at such rent, there will even be in those cases a virtual allowance in respect of the poor-rate, such rent being in reality only part of the worth or value of the land. The whole worth or value is made up of what is paid in rent and what in rates, and other outgoings. Land intrinsically worth 40*l.* can only pay a rent of 30*l.*, if it is to pay 10*l.* per annum in other ways ; and in estimating a rent to the landlord and tenant, look to the value of the thing on the one hand, and the outgoings on the other ; and the outgoings must be deducted from the value before the rent can be fairly fixed. Wherever, therefore, the rate is according to the rent, which is generally the case, an allowance is virtually made for the poor-rate ; and if this rate is made according to the rent, the company should have the allowance. The mode of estimating the allowance is a different thing ; that suggested in the case is clearly wrong, for if 2225*l.*, the present rate, is deducted from the 8900*l.*, the rate upon 6675*l.* only, will leave part of the rateable proportion of 8900*l.* (b) free from rate. The allowance must be so made that the sum upon which the annual rates are made may, with the amount of the rates, make up the 8900*l.* The sum, according to the present rate, will be 7120*l.*, and the sum to be paid by the company will be 1780*l.* The process of calculation must be adapted to the amount of rate. It is sufficient for us to propound the rules, leaving the process of calculation to others."

The occupiers of a canal, who are also carriers, are rateable only according to the tonnage.

Rex v. The Trustees of the Duke of Bridgwater, 4 Man. & R. 143 ; 9 B. & C. 68. In this case the defendants were rated in proportion to the full amount of the gross receipts as owners as well as occupiers of land taken for the canal, towing-paths, warehouses, wharfs, &c. ; whereas the occupiers of farms and premises in the same parish were rated only in proportion to the rent paid by them respectively. Bayley, J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said, "The same principle of rating must be (a) The proportion here would not be necessarily correct. If the landlord keep the premises in repair, the rateable value would be less than the rent, for an allowance was made to the company in this case for repairs.

(b) It will be observed that the court were of opinion that the assessment of 2225*l.* on the company was too large, and ought to be reduced to 1780*l.* This latter sum only thus became payable out of their profits, and ought to be deducted.

adopted whether the party be owner and occupier, or occupier only. I lay out of consideration the fact of the trustees being carriers, because their occupation only is to be considered. The profits of carrying goods are the profits of their trade. The tonnage is the profit of the land occupied by them. The principle of our decision in this case is, that the same rule is to be applied to all occupiers, and that the rent or sum at which the land will let, is the criterion of the value of the occupation."

The annual value, communibus annis, and not in a particular year, is the criterion of value.

Rex v. Chaplin 1 Bar. & Adol. 926. The appellants were rated upon the annual rental of 299*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* as occupiers of lands taken for the Louth canal towing-paths, &c. with the profits arising therefrom. Rate confirmed. Case:—By 3 Geo. III. c. 39, commissioners were empowered to make a navigable canal from the Humber to the Ludd, and to continue it to Louth, and for that purpose to borrow money upon the security of the tolls. The commissioners borrowed 28,000*l.* at 5*l.* per cent., and expended the same in making the canal. This act was repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 30, and the canal, with the soil thereof, and the towing-paths, locks, and appurtenances, were by the last act invested in commissioners, who demised the canal and soil thereof, together with the tolls, dues, proceeds, and forfeitures imposed and authorised by that act, to the appellants for forty-eight years from the 24th of June, 1828, subject to the payment thereout of the interest on 28,000*l.*; in default of which payment the commissioners might require the collectors to pay such interest out of the money that might then be in or might thereafter come to their hands; and the collectors were to be allowed such payment in account with the lessees, the tolls being appropriated in the first instance to the satisfaction of this charge. The canal passes through twelve parishes, and one-fifth of the whole extent lies in the respondent parish of Tetney. The lessees are further liable to all the expenses of maintaining and repairing the canal and its works, collectors' salaries, &c. (The case then went into details as to the expense of the canal, the receipts, and the mode of collection.) The annual earnings of the whole canal are 3418*l.* 8*s.* of which the proportion corresponding to the length of the canal in Tetney, namely one-fifth, would be 683*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.* The annual earnings of the canal in Tetney are 788*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* or three-thirteenths of the earnings of the whole canal, upon which three-thirteenths the present rate was imposed. If the court should be of opinion that the rate ought to be imposed on one-fifth instead of three-thirteenths, the rate was to be reduced accordingly. The appellants claimed the following deductions; 1400*l.* being the interest on the mortgage debt of 28,000*l*; 341*l.* 16*s.* 9½*d.* as the reasonable profit to a tenant to occupy, at ten per cent. on 3418*l.* 8*s.*; a further deduction on account of average annual expenses for repairs, &c. which on the whole canal amounted to 881*l.* and of which 163*l.* were incurred in the respondent parish; and a further sum on account of poor's-rates and other parochial taxes, which on the whole extent of the canal amounted to about 100*l.* The preamble of the 9 Geo. IV. recited that the commissioners under the former act having borrowed the sum of 28,000*l.* and having incurred considerable expense, and being in want of funds, entered into an agreement with C. Chaplin, (for the good of the navigation, and as the only means of raising the necessary funds,) that the canal and navigation, subject to the orders of the commissioners, with all the tolls and all the estate and interest of the commissioners, should be vested in Mr. Chaplin, his executors, &c. for ninety-nine years; and he agreed to accept the trust, do the works to be ordered by the commissioners, pay all the interest of the money borrowed, at five per cent., by half-yearly payments, and make some other advances. The statute then recited, that doubts had been entertained as to the authority of the commissioners to make such agreement; that C. C., and those claiming under him, had, after the said agreement, and on the faith of it, expended considerable sums (in particular, two sums of 7000*l.* and 4000*l.*) on the navigation; that the agreement was entered into by the commissioners bonâ fide for the benefit of the public, and was in fact beneficial to the public at the time it was made; and the benefit accruing therefrom to the C. C. and those claiming under him had not been disproportioned to the risk run by the C. C.; that the agreement had been acquiesced in by all parties for nearly fifty-one years, and it would be for the benefit of the public that the same should be sanctioned for the remainder of the said term of ninety-nine years, but subject to a reduction of the tolls of the navigation by one half, as to some articles, and one-third as to others. The commissioners under the new act were therefore empowered to grant to the persons entitled to the beneficial interest under the above agreement, and their executors, &c. a lease of the navigation and tolls for forty-eight years, being the residue of the term of ninety-nine years in the agreement mentioned; provided that the lessees for the time being should be subject to all the payments, rules, regulations, &c. mentioned in the former act. Under this enactment the demise stated in the case was made. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The rate must go back to be amended. In cases of this kind, which have hitherto occurred, the canal has been in the hands of the original proprietors, and the object has been to ascertain what it would be worth to let, which has sometimes been difficult. But here the canal is actually let, and therefore there is no occasion to speculate on that point. The 1400*l.* interest is in effect a rent, though there is no actual payment to the lessors. The tolls are appropriated to the purpose stipulated by them, and in case of default they may call upon the collectors to make good the payments out of the moneys in their hands. It was contended that this was a beneficial lease; but taking the several recitals of the act 9 Geo. IV. c. 30, together, I think that does not appear. The commissioners in the first instance assigned the canal to Mr. Chaplin, for the good of the navigation, and as the only method for raising the money necessary for putting it into repair; and the act recites that he and those claiming under him did in fact lay out considerable sums of money upon it, that the bargain was beneficial to the public, and is likely to be so if continued; and it states that the benefit as yet derived from it by the lessees has not been disproportioned to the risk originally run; but lest the lease should become too beneficial during the remainder of the term, the tolls are reduced. I think then there is no ground for saying that the 1400*l.* is not such a sum as may be properly considered the value of the navigation, and as three-thirteenths of the profits arise in the parish of Tetney the rate must be laid on three-thirteenths of 1400*l.*" Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion as to the argument which is drawn from the amount of present earnings. It might as well be said that where a farm is let, the year's profit on each particular crop is to be taken into consideration in fixing the rate. In the case of a property so lately let, the actual rent is the best criterion of value; perhaps it might be otherwise, if the letting had been ten or twenty years ago, and it appeared that the profits had very materially increased or diminished since." Taunton, J. "The tolls of a canal, like the profits of land, are to be valued at what they would let for communibus annis, and it has I believe been held (a) that no difference is to be made, because in one particular year there was a loss. In ascertaining what a property is worth to let, the best criterion in general is what it actually does let for. When, therefore, in this case, the value was estimated from the earnings of a single year, a wrong basis of calculation was taken. Here is a rent spreading itself over a period of forty-eight years, and the produce in one is no proof what the average will be. Here in point of form there is no rent, but a payment of interest; it is however in the nature of rent. Instead of the lessee's paying 1400*l.* a-year to the proprietors, and their handing it over to the mortgagee, the lessee pays it to the mortgagee at once." Patteson, J. "Where the land is not actually let, it becomes necessary to calculate what a tenant would pay for it where it is let. The actual rent is the criterion, unless it can be clearly shown that that is too small; but that is not ascertained by inquiring whether the property was more or less beneficial in a particular year." Rate to be amended.

Interest on a mortgage is rent.

ant was lessee and occupier of a coal mine or colliery. In this year he paid royalty to his landlord for a mine rent upon the coals raised the sum of 802*l.* 8*s.*, which sum was a fair mine rent for a tenant to pay upon the quantity of coals raised in that year. The defendant some time since erected several steam and other engines in the colliery, which are used solely in draining the mines and raising the coals to the surface; he also laid down a railway, which is solely employed in facilitating the carriage of the coals. This forms the machinery with which the mines were worked, and without which there could be no coal raised and no mine rent, and it was assessed at 187*l.* 10*s.*, in addition to the above sum, making together 989*l.* 18*s.* It was calculated that this latter sum would be a fair rent for the whole colliery and machinery, if now let to a sub-tenant. Bayley, J. "I have no doubt that the defendant ought to be rated for his engines and railway. Whether the sessions have made proper deductions we are not to decide. The only point for our consideration is, whether the defendant ought to be rated for the engines and railway. If the owner had occupied the mine, he would have been liable to be rated according to the improved value of the property; and where the owner of a mine fixes an engine, or otherwise by expenditure of his capital raises the value of his property, he will be rateable for the value of the property so improved by his expenditure. If it be leased to a tenant who is to incur the same expenditure of erecting an engine, the owner will receive a less royalty; but as a greater quantity of coal will be raised, the tenant will be thereby remunerated for his expenditure, and I think the tenant being the occupier, is liable to be rated for such improved value." Littledale, J. "It is immaterial, with reference to rateability, whether the landlord or tenant erect an engine or lay down a railway. The bargain between the landlord and tenant may be varied on that account, but the occupier of the property is rateable in respect of its improved annual value." Parke, J. "The question left to us is, whether the defendant be liable to be rated for improvements? I think he clearly is. It is found by the sessions that the value of the property is raised by the improvements from 802*l.* 8*s.* to 989*l.* 18*s.* Whether the amount of the rate is precisely what it ought to be, it is not for us to determine. The sessions seem to have estimated the value according to the sum at which it would let to an undertenant. That perhaps may not be the correct principle on which such property ought to be rated. The annual value is part only of the annual rent: some portion of that rent should be considered applicable to repairing and replacing the engines. In Rex v. Tomlinson this distinction was taken. The only question for us however is, whether it be right in principle to rate the lessee in respect of an annual value increased by reason of improvements made by himself? I think he was properly rated for the improved value." Order of sessions confirmed.

Annual value part only of annual rent.

Houses to which machinery is attached, and which increase their value, must be rated according to such increase.

Rex v. Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas Company, 6 A. & E. 634; 1 N. & P. 691. The company were rated for their premises in Oxford-street, and their mains and pipes within the parish. Rate confirmed. Case:—A local act of 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 67, for regulating the poor, directed a valuation to be made, which was so made in December 1833. Many persons named in the notice of appeal occupied houses, &c., to which pipes, steam engines, and other machinery for carrying on trade were affixed to the freehold. If such pipes, &c. ought to be estimated as forming part of the annual value of the house, then the value would be increased beyond what they are rated for. The pipes, &c. were omitted in the valuation. The gas of the appellants was not manufactured in Birmingham, but conveyed there by pipes. They have no property in the land in the streets where the pipes are laid, only a licence from commissioners in whom the soil is vested. The shares of the company were declared to be personal estate (a). The premises of the company in Oxford-street in the parish were valued as other land and buildings in the parish. The gas-holder, formed of brick and iron, sunk into the ground, was valued as a warehouse. The mains and pipes and land occupied by them were valued at the annual value at which they would let for the purpose of a pipe-way, 20*l.* per cent. being deducted for the wear and tear, as was allowed for repairs of houses. The mains were considered as depositories. Lord Denman, C. J. "This rate is bad, on a ground which makes it unnecessary for us to discuss any other. It is expressly found that houses, to which machinery is attached, are not rated according to the increased value arising from the machinery. Such machinery constitutes a mode of occupying: that really is clear from the beginning to the end of all the cases on the subject. This principle has never been called in question; and, even where the machine has not been attached, a house has been held rateable in respect of it, if the value of the house was increased by the machine. In a case argued in last Hilary Term (a) the principle was never doubted; but it was only attempted to show that it did not apply to the particular case." The other Judges concurred.

(a) The next case.

The value of the machinery attached for manufacturing purposes must be valued without considering whether that machinery be real or personal property.

Reg. v. Guest, 2 N. & P. 663; 7 A. & E. 951. This was a rate for Merthyr Tydvil. The appellants are the lessees and occupiers of the Dowlais Iron Works in Merthyr Tydvil, and, as connected with the iron works, they are also lessees and occupiers of certain mines and coal mines. One portion of the coal mines, in the occupation of the appellants, is situated in Merthyr Tydvil, and the other in Gellygare, the adjoining parish, and the latter portion is brought from Gellygare by an underground adit, the mouth of which is in Merthyr Tydvil. It was objected that the coal brought from the mines in Gellygare was not chargeable in Merthyr Tydvil. The sessions allowed the objection, and amended the rate. The appellants furthor objected to the amount of the rate upon their iron works, because several engines and other machinery, used for working the iron mines, mentioned in the said rate, and also the several engines and other machinery used in manufacturing iron from the iron-stone, were not fixed to the freehold, so as to be regarded as real property, and personal property was not charged to the poor-rate. The mode of erecting such engines and machinery was: The soil is first excavated for laying down foundation walls of strong masonry; into these walls, when built, are introduced balk and other strong timber, which are covered and secured by bolts and other contrivances to and by an iron platform; upon this platform are placed frames of wood and iron, which are inserted into the walls of the buildings in which the engine and machinery are inclosed; these frames then serve as the foundation of the engines and machinery, which are attached to the frames by cotterells or keys and jibs, in such a manner as to be tightened or slackened, or altogether removed at pleasure; such removal may be effected from and out of the buildings which inclose them, without injury either to the engines or machinery, or to the buildings or the soil, and without displacing any part thereof. The machinery thus described is referred to in schedule No. 2 of the annexed rate. The iron mines occupied by the appellants are situate in Merthyr Tydvil, and within a short distance from the works, engines, and machinery comprised in the rate. As to such of the engines as are applicable to the working of the iron mines, whether such engines are fixed to the freehold or not, the sessions allowed the objection and amended the rate accordingly, and no question is raised as to such amendment. The sessions, with the amendments before mentioned, confirmed the rate, subject to the opinion of this court. The schedule was set out, and the following is a specimen of the items:—

9. Principle of Valuation.

The question was, whether the appellants were liable to be rated for the various properties referred to in the schedule No. 2. Cur. adv. vult. Lord Denman, C. J. "This was an appeal against a rate, on the ground that many articles of machinery, employed by the appellants in their manufactory, were personal property, and not subject to be rated. The sessions proposed numerous questions to us, but we did not think their statement so full as it might have been, and we desired to see a copy of the rate, in the hope that we might be enabled, from the description there given, to specify the articles that ought to be included. In this we are disappointed, and can only direct that the rate should finally stand on the general principle which we have lately had occasion to lay down (a), that real property ought to be rated according to its actual value, as combined with the machinery attached to it, without considering whether that machinery be real or personal property, so as to be liable to distress or seizure under a fieri facias; or whether it would descend to the heir or executor, or belong, at the expiration of a lease, to landlord or tenant. The rate must therefore be sent back to the sessions to apply this principle."

(a) Preceding case.

Canal tolls must be rated on the same principle as the land.

Rex v. The Oxford Canal Company, 4 B. & C. 74; 6 D. & R. 86. The principle of rating laid down in Rex v. Chaplin must be applied to canal tolls, Abbott, C. J. saying, "As to the amount, it appears that other lands are rated according to the amount which would be obtained by letting them at a rent: this company therefore must be rated according to the same rule."

In estimating the value of the tolls upon which the rate is to be made, deductions for repairs, expenses of collections, and other charges must be made from the gross amount of tolls received.

Reason for not rating all profits.

The expenses of the canal in each parish to be deducted.

Also of supplying water. (See Rex v. River Weaver, 182.)

Rex v. Oxford Canal Company, 5 Man. & R. 100; 10 B. & C. 163. In fixing the amount of the rate for which the company was liable, the sum paid by the proprietors for the poor-rate, the expense of collecting the tolls, of repairing the banks of the canal, and of supplying it with water, ought to be deducted from the gross profit. Upon this point, during the argument, Bayley, J. observed, "There can be no doubt the poor-rate, the annual repairs, and the expenses of collecting the toll must be allowed. The sum which remains after making such deductions constitutes the net profit." Parke, J. "In strictness, all the profits ought to be rated, but inasmuch as tenants' profits in respect of other lands in the parish are not rated, the tenants' profit in respect of land occupied by the canal company ought not to be rated." It appeared that the annual repairs of that part of the canal situate in the parish amount to 20*l.*, the annual repairs of the whole line of the canal amount to 4,000*l.*; and in reference to the question whether in fixing the rate there should be deducted that proportion of the whole sum expended in repairs, which the length of the canal in the parish of Foleshill bears to the whole line of the canal, or whether only the expense of repairs incurred in that part of the canal situate in Foleshill, Bayley, J. said, "The rate is to be in proportion to the value of the land in the parish where the rate is made: therefore all expenses incurred in repairing that part of the canal in that parish must be allowed." Littledale, J. "The banks in one parish may require more repair than in another, or there may be locks which require frequent repair; so that it may happen that a given part of a canal may yield no profit whatever." Counsel further urged that a deduction must also be made for the expense of supplying water for the canal. It is analogous to the expense of manure used in the cultivation of land. Without the supply of water, the canal can produce no profit whatever. The fair rent of land, is the value of the land after deducting the expenses of cultivation. Bayley, J. "There must undoubtedly be an allowance made upon that account; the quantum will be the question for the sessions. We can only lay down the principle. We never fix the quantum, unless the sessions tell us the principle upon which they have fixed the quantum, and their calculation appears to be erroneous."

Rex v. Adames, 1 Nev. & M. 162; 4 B. & Adol. 61. By a rate for the parish of Pagham the appellant, who was the owner and occupier of lands lying within a district of the parish called Pagham Level, was assessed at 312*l.* 14*s.* which was the amount at which the land would let for, making no allowance for the sewers' rate, which is a landlord's tax. Cur. adv. vult.

—Parke, J. " The question for the opinion of the court in this case, is in effect whether an occupier of lands in a district of the parish of Pagham which is liable to be flooded, and is protected from floods at a certain occasional expense (for that is the nature of the sewers' rate), ought to be rated at the same sum as the occupier of lands of similar quality and of equal annual produce, lying in the same parish, but not liable to the same expense. We are of opinion that he ought not. It is obvious that the average annual net profit of one description of land is not the same as that of the other; and both upon principle and authority we think the rate ought to be made in proportion to that profit. The statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, requires the churchwardens and overseers to raise competent sums, by the taxation of every occupier of lands, according to the ability of the parish: nothing is expressly said as to the principle upon which the rate should be made, but it is implied that it must be made with equality, and with some reference to the subject of occupation. Now it is quite clear it ought not to be made according to the profit derived by the occupier himself; for if that were so, the rate must vary according to the nature of the occupier's interest. An occupier who is tenant at will at rack-rent, and therefore receives a less share of the annual profit of the land than one who is tenant for years at a small rent, and still less than one who is a tenant in fee-simple, and pays none at all, would be rateable at a less sum, a proposition which was never yet contended for. Again, it is quite clear that though the occupier is the person who nominally pays the tax, it is in reality paid by the beneficial owner, and is a charge upon the land. In proportion as the average tax which the tenant has to pay is greater, in the same proportion will he give less rent to the owner. Ultimately in the long run, this will always be the case; though when the tenancy is for a term more or less long, the burthen upon the landlord is postponed for a greater or less period. This being so, it follows that in order to make an equal rate, the nature of the occupier's interest must be disregarded, and the rate imposed according to some value of the subject of occupation. Usage and convenience have established this value to be not that of the estate or property itself, but that of the profit which is or might be made from the estate or property; and as it would be very difficult and extremely troublesome to ascertain the precise value of that profit during the time for which each rate is made, and in case of occasional profit both troublesome and unjust, (Rex v. Mirfield, ante, 247 ; Rex v. Hull Dock Company, ante,) to make a rate for a large sum at one time and a small one or none at another upon the same land, the rule has been to assess according to the annual profit of the land; or, where the produce is not matured in one year, then upon an average of years, from which profit deductions are allowed for all the expenses necessary to its production. It is not material whether the whole or a certain aliquot part of that net profit be rated, provided all lands of the same description are rated equally upon that aliquot proportion of the profit; and in practice it is usual, and it is most convenient, to rate lands at the rack-rent which they would pay to a landlord, or some certain portion of it, the tenant paying all rates, charges, and outgoings; which is in effect rating according to a part of the net profit only; but provided it be the same aliquot part in all cases, it makes no difference. Further, if the subject of occupation be of a perishable nature or require an annual expense to secure its existence, an allowance ought to be made on this account, for the total annual profit is not the net annual profit; a part must be set aside for the restoration and maintenance of the subject of occupation. It is on this principle that buildings have been permitted to be rated at less in proportion than arable and other land. The cases, especially those of a more recent date, in which the principle of rating has been more fully discussed and considered, will be found to have established this rule of rating, which is, in other words, that all lands are to be assessed in proportion to the net rent which a tenant at rack-rent would pay, he discharging all rates, charges, and outgoings. It may be sufficient to refer to the following authorities in support

9. Principle of Valuation.

9. Principle of Valuation of this position:—(Rex v. The Birmingham Gas Light Company; Rex v. Hull Dock Company; Rex v. Attwood; Rex v. Trustees of the Duke of Bridgewater; Rex v. Tomlinson; Rex v. Lower Mitton; Rex v. The Oxford Canal Company; Rex v. Joddrell.) It remains only to apply the principle to the present case, and there can be no difficulty in saying, that land which requires some occasional expenditure to preserve it from being damaged by water, and to make it as productive as it is, would let for less rent than similar land which requires none, the tenant defraying amongst others that occasional expenditure. In other words, the net average annual profit of both is not the same, and consequently the rate ought not to be the same. In the course of the argument a question was asked, whether land of which the land-tax was redeemed ought to be rated higher than land of the same quality, which is still chargeable with the tax. The answer is, that it ought not: the annual net profit of both is the same, though such annual profit in the latter case is liable to a tax from which it is by law exempted in the former. The rate in the present case must therefore be amended. I must add that this is the judgment of myself and my brothers Littledale and Patteson, who heard the argument." Lord Tenterden was of a different opinion. Taunton, J. then said that he concurred in the judgment delivered.

An embankment tax raised from particular lands, equal to the rack-rent of the lands, ought not to be deducted.

Reg. v. Vange, 2 G. & D. 474. The facts of this case appear in the judgment. Lord Denman. "This was an appeal against a poor-rate for the parish of Vange, in the island of Canvey, wherein the appellant was assessed as the owner and occupier of 'a house, premises, and land,' in the sum of 128*l.* The sessions relieved the appellant by striking out the whole amount from the assessment, subject to an opinion. In 1621, Sir H. Appleton and others, conveyed to J. Cropenbergh one-third of their lands, situate in the island, in fee, in consideration of his defending the same against the waters of the Thames. The lands then so vested in J. Cropenbergh are called 'the third acre lands,' and the premises for which the appellant is assessed form a portion of those lands. By the 32 Geo. III., c. 31, for more effectually embanking, &c. the island of Canvey, commissioners were empowered to do such acts as to them might seem right and necessary to protect the island. They were empowered to tax the owners and occupiers of the 'third acre lands,' to the full amount of the annual rent or value of the same; and also, if the moneys raised therefrom should be insufficient, to tax other lands. The appellant paid nothing for the purchase of the premises, but holds them as owner, subject to the liabilities aforesaid. The case then states that for several years the sums raised on the 'third acre lands' for the purposes of the act, have been equal to the rack-rent or full annual value of those lands, and the sum assessed upon and paid by the appellant, in respect of the said premises, has been, for the current and preceding years, 123*l.* per annum. The question thus presented for our consideration is, whether the occupation of the premises by the appellant be such as to make him liable to the rate? A question of some difficulty undoubtedly, and which is usually expressed to be, whether the occupation be beneficial. The distinctions in many of the cases upon this subject are certainly very fine, and, except the subject immediately under consideration requires it, we do not know that it is useful to enter into a minute examination of them. This question of beneficial occupation, moreover, has been frequently before the court; and at no distant time we had occasion to comment upon the import and meaning of the expression: (The Governors of Bristol Poor v. Waite). (a) We will only here again observe, that 'beneficial' and 'profitable,' in the ordinary sense of the words, are not convertible terms; that a party holding property, in its nature rateable, is not discharged from his legal liability because he does it a loss. Suppose a farmer to be able to prove that he was holding his farm at any assignable amount of loss, would that constitute an exemption from the poor-rate? It is unnecessary, however, to put hypothetical cases: Rex v. Parrot (b) is the case. The unprofitable and losing occupation (expressly so found) of a coal mine, was held to create no exemption, because a coal mine is, by the statute of Eliz., eo nomine, made rateable. In the present instance the subject of the rate is of the same description, 'house and lands,' and therefore directly within the statute. What then is to exempt this property from rateability? The answer is, because it yields no profit to the owner, the appellant. Suppose, however, the premises to be let to a tenant at the rent of 123*l.* per annum, the sum at which the sessions seemed to think, if rateable at all, that they ought to be assessed; it seems to be clear that in such case the tenant would be rateable for such occupation. Again, suppose that instead of having paid nothing for it, and taking it as he has with the incumbrance, he had purchased it, and left the whole purchase-money unpaid, but secured by mortgage upon the property, in what respect would that charge have differed from the present? Yet in the case lastly supposed, he surely would have been rateable. Rex v. Adames, (a) which was quoted in argument in support of the rate, was one of comparative amount of assessment, whether property A. was fairly rated in respect of property B.; but there was no question, as here, of abstract rateability. Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the said sum of 123*l.* ought not to be deducted from the assumed gross rental in assessing this appellant."

(b) 5 T. R. 593.

(a) 4 B. & Ad. 61.

Rex v. Joddrell, 1 Bar. & Adol. 403. This was a rate for the parish of Yelling, which had been inclosed under the 59th of Geo. III., by which the tithes were extinguished and a compensation made in lieu thereof. This rate was made on the amount of the rack-rent which the farms were letting at, and were worth to let at the time. E. Bull, the occupier of one farm, was assessed at 226*l.*, which was the rent paid by her without any deduction. E. B. was not assessed in respect of the corn-rent or compensation for tithe paid to the rector for the same, amounting to 93*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* The appellant, the rector, is assessed in 368*l.* in respect of the gross payments for compensation for tithes, amounting to 452*l.* 2*s.* 0½*d.*, and that the deduction in the assessment allowed the rector (to wit) 83*l.* 2*s.* 0½*d.*, which is the amount of parochial dues levied on 451*l.* 2*s.* 0½*d.*; it was objected that the farms should have been assessed in the amount of the rent paid to the landlord, added to the amount of the compensation paid to the rector, such being the actual value of the land to let at rack-rent; and also that the appellant was assessed at such a sum as with his poor-rate made up the full gross amount of the corn-rent, the profit accruing to the occupiers beyond the amount of the rate, and beyond the amount of the interest of capital employed, and of expense of cultivating lands, including compensation for the farmer's trouble and labour and superintendence, ought to have been included in these assessments: and also the corn-rent was not worth 368*l.*, the appellant being liable in respect of such sum to the payment of land-tax and ecclesiastical dues beyond the parochial rates, and having further to do or provide for the duties of the incumbency. Cur. adv. vult.—Parke, J. "This was a question between the rector of a parish and the farmers in it, as to the extent to which he on the one hand and they on the other ought to be rated. The tithes in the parish were extinguished, and the rector had a corn-rent or compensation in their stead. He was rated to the full extent of all he received, with the deduction only of what he paid for parochial dues. He claimed as additional deductions the amount of his land-tax, the amount for what he paid for ecclesiastical dues (which would include tenths, synodals, &c.), and a compensation for performing or providing for the duties of his incumbency. The farmers were rated at the bonâ fide amount of the rack-rent at which the farms were letting, or which they were worth to let, the tenants paying the corn-rent or compensation for tithe; and the rector contended that they ought to be rated in addition upon that corn-rent or compensation they paid him, and upon their share of profit beyond the rent. The great point to be aimed at in every rate is equality, and whatever is the proportion at which, according to its true rateable value, any property is rated is the proportion in which every other property ought to be rated. The first thing upon every rate, therefore, is to ascertain the true rateable value of every property upon which the rate is to be imposed, and the next to see upon what pro-

By act of parliament the tithes in a parish were extinguished and the rector entitled to a corn-rent, for which he was assessed to the full amount less the parochial rates. The farmers who paid the corn-rent were rated upon the amount of their rack-rent. Held, that the tenants ought not to be rated for a sum made up of the rack-rent paid to their landlords, and the corn-rent paid to the rector; but that they were properly rated on the amount of the rack-rent only. And also, that the rate was unequal, as the farmer was rated not for the full value of the land which comprised the landlord's and tenant's profit, while the rector was rated for the full value of his corn-rent. And, that in estimating the amount at which the rector ought to be rated, the land-tax ought to be deducted from his corn rent, provided the tenants of the other lands in the manor paid the land-tax without being allowed for it by the landlord, but not if such allowance was made. Held also, that allowance ought to be made to the rector for ecclesiastical dues, which were a charge upon the rectory, but not for the exp viding duties of incumbency.

portion of that value a rate is in fact imposed. In the case of land, the rateable value is the amount of the annual average profit or value of the land after every outgoing is paid, and every proper allowance made, not however including the interest of capital, as the sessions have done, for that is a part of the profit. Tithe is an outgoing, and therefore the corn-rent or compensation for tithe in this case, is not to be added to the amount upon which the farmer is rateable; and in respect of that proportion of the annual profit or value, which consists of tithe or corn-rent, the rector is himself to be assessed. We think, therefore, that the sessions were right in overruling the first objection. The second objection was, that the farmer's share of profit ought to have been rated, or, which is the same thing, that the appellant should have been rated proportionably less; and that objection should in our opinion have prevailed. Of the whole of the annual profits or value of land, a part belongs to the landlord in the shape of rent, and part to the tenant; and whenever a rate is according to the rack-rent (the usual and most convenient mode), it is in effect a rate on a part of the profit only. It must, therefore, in the next place be ascertained what proportion the rent bears to the total annual profit or value, and that will show in what proportion all other property ought to be rated. If, for instance, the rent is one-half or two-thirds of the total annual profit or value of land, the rate on all other property should be on a half or two-thirds of its annual value. In this case it is clear that there was a share of profit received by the tenant upon which there has been no rate, and in that respect the farmers were assessed in a less proportion of the true annual profit or value than the appellant. The sessions were therefore wrong in disallowing this objection, and they ought to ascertain the ratio which the rent of land bears to its average annual profit or value, and assess the appellant for his tithe-rent in the same ratio. The last objection was, that the appellant ought to have had the land-tax, ecclesiastical dues, and expenses of providing for the duties of incumbency deducted. As to the land-tax, that is always in practice paid in the first instance by tenants, and whether it is to be deducted or not in this case must depend upon the answer to a previous question, whether the tenants in the parish deduct it from the rent specified or not. If they do, the landlord pays it in effect out of the rent he receives, and the appellant, to be on the same footing, must do the same; in that case it must not be deducted in making the rate on him. But if the tenants pay the specified rents and the land-tax besides, then they have in effect not been rated upon that proportion of the annual profit or value with which the land-tax is paid, but upon a part of the residue only, after deducting the land-tax. Upon this supposition, the appellant must also be rated in a proportionate part of his profit after deducting the land-tax. The ecclesiastical dues ought to be allowed, because they are payable by the appellant in respect of his rectory, and the profits of the rectory constitute the only fund out of which they can be paid; but the expenses of providing for the duties of incumbency ought not to be deducted, because those duties are personal, and ought to be performed personally by the incumbent. The last objection therefore ought to prevail in part. The case must, for these reasons, be sent back to the sessions, who must amend the rate, acting as nearly in conformity to the principle here laid down, as their means of investigation will admit: a precise and accurate application of it is, we are well aware, impracticable."

The principles of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, applies to tithes as well as land. Ecclesiastical dues may be deducted. The profits of the farmer are not to be included.

Reg. v. Capel, 12 A. & E. 382, 4 P. & D. 87. The facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment. Cur. adv. vult.—Lord Denman. "This was an appeal against a rate made for the relief of the poor of Watford. The sessions confirmed the rate, subject to the opinion of this court upon a case stating the assessment to have been made on all the lands, houses, shops, warehouses, wharfs, factories, and other buildings, on an estimate of the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free of all usual tenants' rates and taxes, and deducting from such rent the probable annual cost of the repairs, of insurance, and other expenses, necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent. The vicarage or dwelling-house of the appellant is stated to have been rated thus. It further appears that the appellant, as vicar of the parish, receives compositions for small tithes from the occupiers of land, the gross annual amount of which was 660*l.*; but the assessment upon the appellant was for 540*l.*, after deducting 82*l.* 15*s.* for tenant's rates and ecclesiastical dues; the said sum of 540*l.* being such as the small tithes might be reasonably expected to let for from year to year, free of all tenant's rates and taxes, and deducting from such rent the amount of the ecclesiastical dues. Upon this state of facts the argument before us extended over a very wide range, comprehending an examination of almost all the cases ancient and modern touching the rateability of property. In our view, however, it is neither necessary nor useful to pursue the same course, because this rate strictly complies with the enacting part of 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, s. 1; and if that embraces tithes as well as land, and if the proviso at the end does not interfere, that rate will be good, even though it could not be sustained on the principles laid down in former decisions. Now it cannot be questioned that the words used in the enacting part are large enough to embrace tithes; 'hereditaments' is the division under which a lawyer would class tithes: the expressed object of the statute is to break down distinctions and establish uniformity of rating; and the rule which it propounds is thus far applicable to tithes—that they are demisable at a yearly rent. It is indeed true that many of the deductions required to be allowed from the rateable value are not commonly, and others perhaps cannot be, incident to tithes. But, as they are incident to other hereditaments, the expression of all such deductions was necessary, and indicates no intention to exclude any species of hereditaments. The form of rate given in the schedule was also relied on, which certainly cannot be strictly followed with regard to tithes; but, besides that the second section, which prescribes it, by no means requires that this shall be the only form of rate, the argument would prove too much, for it would exclude tithes from the rate altogether, as it was unsuccessfully argued that it excluded personal property in the late case of Reg. v. Lumsdaine. (a) But, supposing tithes to be within the enacting part, it was strongly contended that they must also be within the proviso—'that nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter or affect the principles or different relative liabilities, if any, according to which different kinds of hereditaments are now by law rateable.' We were pressed with a history of the introduction of this proviso into the bill in its passage through parliament; of such facts, if capable of being ascertained, we are not permitted judicially to take notice. The law must ever be interpreted by the general rules of construction, and we cannot travel out of its language in search of any supposed intention. This language, it must be owned, is very inartificial and loose to a degree, which renders the discovery of a definite meaning to all its parts extremely difficult. To speak of the principles on which rating has proceeded is intelligible; but we also have to deal with 'the different relative liabilities to which different kinds of hereditaments are liable.' If 'principles' and 'liabilities' are intended to express the same thing, tithes are not within the proviso, for the titheholder was never rateable on any principle different from the landholder. If there be one point as to which the spirit of all the decisions is uniform, it is that the rate must be adjusted on the principle of equality. The court possibly has not in every instance worked out its purpose successfully, but the object has never been lost sight of; and the court has constantly laboured to find out the net annual produce, after making proportionally equal deductions. In the instances where the court may have failed to do this, the failure has been principally caused by the general practice (prohibited by the late statute), of rating on aliquot parts of the value, instead of the whole, and the consequent difficulty of dividing the burden between various kinds of property, and in a great degree by the ambiguous and fluctuating sense of many terms necessarily employed in speaking of the subject-matters of the rate. Viewing, then, the decisions according to their avowed intention, and not with a minute reference to particular expressions, we find no variety in the principles of rating But the word 'liabilities' is supposed to go much further, and to set up the doctrine of Rex v Joddrell, (a) to the extent of showing that land and tithes are under 'different relative liabilities,' which difference the proviso meant to leave untouched On this much canvassed decision we cannot refrain from making some few remarks 1 It neither introduced nor affected to introduce any new law, on the contrary, the court cited it in the later case, Rex v Adames, (b) as a recognition of the old principle to which we have alluded. 2 The tithe owner had not been allowed any deduction beyond the parochial rates, which he paid on the gross amount of the corn-rent substituted for his tithes, either, therefore, he was not rated on the principle of what his own corn-rent was worth to let, after the usual tenant's deductions, or it was assumed, contrary to the fact, that the corn-rent would let for exactly its gross amount, deducting only the parochial rates On the other hand, the respondents, the land occupiers, were rated on their actual rents, although it was admitted that a profit accrued to them, from the occupation, beyond the rent, the interest of capital employed, expenses of cultivation, and compensation for trouble, labour and superintendence They, therefore, were rated on their rack rent, but it was a rent manifestly below that which the land was annually worth The sessions, therefore, in effect found that the tithe composition was rated at its yearly value, and the land below its yearly value, and Rex v Skingle (c) would be an authority to show that the appeal was properly sustained The language of the court in that case must be admitted to go further It appears to lay down a rule of general application, and of great importance This sentence occurs at p 408 'Of the whole of the annual profits or value of the land a part belongs to the landlord in the shape of rent, and part to the tenant, and whenever a rate is according to the rack rent (the usual and most convenient mode) it is, in effect, a rate on part of the profit only' Now this important sentence expresses no general proposition of law, nor any conclusion of fact from any premises stated in the case, it is an assumption in the most general terms upon a point much questioned by those who have made such matters their peculiar study It is certainly inconvenient to make such an assumption, the very terms 'profit' and 'value,' used as synonymous, raise arguments as to their meaning, and the whole proposition is controverted It might be urged, with as much show of reason, that the rack-rent is the consideration which it is worth while to give beyond the rates, charges and outgoings, for the right to occupy and take the actual produce, and must always represent the net annual value beyond those outgoings, and beyond a fit compensation to the tenant for his risk, labour, and superintendence According as land may be made productive at more or less charge, the rent which may be commanded for the occupation, in other words, the net annual value, will be more or less near to the gross, still this will not show that a rate made on the rack rent in all cases will be unequal, because whatever is beyond the net annual value is not properly the subject of the rate In this part of the argument one consideration is supposed to be of the utmost weight If the landlord held the farm in his own hands, the annual value would consist of the amount of rent for which it might be let, with the addition of the tenant's profit He would, in that case, have nothing to deduct but the ordinary outgoings and his bailiff's wages, but who shall say that these wages might not be equal to the estimated profits of the tenant, or, in the simpler case of the owner being entirely his own manager, that his personal labour, withdrawn from other profitable occupation, was not of equal value? As a proposition of law we cannot assert this, nor as a fact deducible from scientific axioms too clear for controversy That discussion we purposely decline, preferring to say merely that Rex v Joddrell does not convince us that there was any difference in the legal liabilities of the tithe owner and the occupier of land If any case shall arise in which the facts show that the rule, though formally applied according to the statute, will work injustice to the tithe owner, there will be no more difficulty in relieving him, than in relieving one landowner as against another; but the facts of this case call for no such interposition. It was suggested that in this view of the case the proviso will have no operation. We are not quite sure that it will, as the attempt to apply it to special modes of rating prescribed by some local statutes did not appear very successful; but this doubt grows out of the language of the proviso itself, which expressly avoids to state affirmatively that there are any cases to which the proviso can apply. Certainly something much more decisive was requisite to defeat an enactment so simple, practical, and useful." Order of sessions confirmed.

Reg. v. The London and South-western Railway Company. (a) By a rate for the parish of Mitcheldever, the Railway Company was rated for four-and-a-half miles of railway, 4320*l.* Rate confirmed. Under the powers contained in several acts of parliament, the company have formed and completed a line of railway from Vauxhall to Southampton, being a length of seventy-seven miles; and this railway, for four miles and a-half thereof, passes through the parish of Mitcheldever; and in pursuance of the acts, the company have caused lists to be made of the rates, tolls and sums which they have appointed to be taken, and have kept a separate account, showing the amount of rates or tolls which would have been received by them for the use of the railway, in respect of passengers, cattle, or other animals, goods, wares, &c., if carried by any other party, which said account the overseers of the parishes through which the railway passes, have free access and liberty to inspect. The sum which would have been received by the company for the use of the railway, by such other parties, in the year next immediately before and up to the time of the making of the rate, in respect of so much of the railway as lies in the said parish, amounts to 3470*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, being such portion of the tolls as is earned by the railway company in Mitcheldever. The whole sum, however, received by the company for the conveyance of passengers, &c. by the company, in carriages provided, manned and worked by the company, at their own sole expense, including the said sum of 3470*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, amounts to 13,880*l.* per annum, in respect of so much of the railway as lies in the said parish. The former sum of 3470*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* constitutes the proportionate sum for the said parish, which any individual who contracted with the company for the exclusive right to take tolls for the use of the railway by persons using the same, under the powers and subject to the regulations of the statutes, for the transmission of goods, cattle and passengers along the line, in carriages provided by such persons, would receive from such persons; and the sum of 1293*l.* constitutes the rent which a tenant from year to year would give to the company for the exclusive right to receive tolls for the conveyance of goods, cattle and passengers, in the manner mentioned in s. 157 of first 4 & 5 Will. IV., along so much of the railway as lies in the said parish, free of all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, and making allowance and deductions for the average annual cost of repairs, insurance, and other expenses necessary to maintain the way, its fixtures and appurtenances, in a state to command such rent. The respondents contend, that the annual value is not to be estimated on the basis of the tolls alone, nor to be limited to such tolls or their value; but that the advantage which a lessee of the railway may be expected to derive from his lease, by supplying power, and by carrying upon it, may be taken into account. That if a lessee is to be supposed capable of deriving from the use of the railway all the profits which now accrue to the company from the conveyance of passengers, cattle, and goods, under the powers of their acts, such lessee finding locomotive power, carriages, &c., and paying all expenses incidental to working the railway, then the whole railway, with its fixtures and appurtenances, might be reasonably expected to let from year to year at a rent which, for the purposes of this rate, may be assumed at 70,000*l.* per annum, at the least, free of all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, and making allowance and deductions for the average annual cost of repairs, insurance, and other expenses necessary to maintain the way, its fixtures and appurtenances, in a state to command such rent. That supposing such rent to be given for the whole line, the proportion thereof in respect of so much of the railway as lies in the respondent parish is to be assumed to be the net sum of 4320*l.* per annum, being the amount at which the appellants were rated in the above rate. The questions are: Whether the company are rateable upon the principle contended for by them, that is to say, upon an estimate of the net annual value, obtained from the statement of the tolls which would be received by the company, forming the basis of the rent which a tenant would give as before mentioned, subject to proper deductions; or upon an estimate of the net annual value, as ascertained by a rent given by a tenant under the circumstances, and for the purposes above stated, as contended for by the parish? Lastly, whether the annual value upon which the parish rate is to be made, should be such proportion of the estimated rateable value of the whole line (whichever basis is adopted by the court), as the length of the part situate in the parish bears to the whole line; or such proportion thereof as the receipts actually derived from or in respect of the carriage of passengers, cattle, and goods, or from tolls upon so much as lies in the parish, bear to the same receipts throughout the whole line? If the rateable value is to be proportioned to the length of the railway in the parish, and not to the receipts, then the estimate as contended for by the company should be the sum of 1400*l.* (a) If it is to be proportioned to the receipts as above, and not to the length of the railway in the parish, then the estimate, as contended for by the parish, should be 3800*l.*

The principle of rating a railway is to calculate the value of the land, as increased by the line of railway and buildings.

The company must be assessed upon the annual rent which a lessee, capable of deriving all the profits which now accrue to the company, would give for the railway, with its fixtures and appurtenances, free of all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, and deducting for repairs, insurance, and other expenses necessary to maintain the railway, its fixtures, and appurtenances, in a state to command such rent, and not merely for the tolls which the company would receive for the use of the railway by others.

Such amount was to be distributed amongst the assessments of the several parishes, in proportion, not to the length of railway, but the actual earnings in each parish.

The Judgment.

Lord Denman. "This case has stood over for consideration for some time, on account of its novelty, and its supposed application to the rating of railway companies in general for the relief of the poor. It must, however, be determined on its own state of facts. The question raised is, Whether this company, being in occupation of its own railway, and at present, in fact, in the exclusive use of it, for the purpose of a large carrying trade, the rateable value of such occupation is to be taken only on the amount of certain tolls which have been fixed, under the statutes hereinafter mentioned, as payable generally by all carriers for the use of the railway, but which are in fact never paid; or on the general amount of the profits which the company in fact receive from the occupation so devoted to such carrying trade? Another question was indeed raised as to the mode of measuring the rate, upon whichever of the two principles it was to be calculated; namely, Whether it was to be measured according to the proportion which the mileage of the railway in the respondent parish bears to the whole length of the way, assuming the profits to arise equally through the whole; or according to the actual earnings in the parish? This question, however, was not much argued, it being conceded ultimately that the latter was the proper mode; and the result was agreed to be that the rate ought to be for 3800*l.* if the parish were right, and 1293*l.* if the company's act limited their responsibility to a rate in fact on the tolls only. The railway has been formed and is regulated under the authority of several statutes. By the first, the 4 & 5 Will. IV., the proprietors were incorporated and authorised to purchase lands in fee-simple, subject to certain qualifications not material to be noticed. Upon the lands so purchased, they are to make and maintain a railway, with warehouses, stations, landing-places for the purpose of locomotive engines, carriages, and waggons, &c., and for loading, unloading, landing, &c., of goods, and the approach and departure of passengers for conveyance. For the tonnage of goods, and in respect of passengers, beasts, cattle, and animals conveyed in carriages on the railway, and also for carriages conveyed on it, they may demand certain tolls, of which the maximum is fixed and not the minimum; and further, they may themselves provide power for the propelling of persons and things, or they may themselves convey such persons and things on their railway, for which, in addition to the before-mentioned tolls, they may charge such sums as they may from time to time fix. The company may, therefore, be simply the owners of the way, on which others may place steam-power and carriages, and convey persons and goods; and these two parties would then stand much in the same relation to each other as the trustees of a turnpike road, and the coach and post masters conveying passengers upon it. In this case they would receive the tolls only—the owners of the steam-power and carriages, the fares or remuneration for the conveyance; and it would be of course the interest of the company to raise the tolls to the maximum, or as near to it as the competition of the ordinary modes of travelling would allow. On the other hand, the company may avail themselves of the latter clause, and unite both characters, of owners of the way and carriers upon it; they would then receive both the tolls and the fares. In both cases the persons or owners of goods conveyed must pay both the tolls and the fares; but in the latter, as the company would be the first and last receivers of the fares and tolls, they might be charged as well as paid in one undistinguished sum; there could be no division: and supposing the company to be the only carriers, there could be no necessity for fixing any rate of toll at all; the whole payment might just as well be considered as a fare. This appears in fact to be the existing state of things; but the statute, section 157, has provided that where the proprietors shall carry for their own profit, a separate account shall still be kept, showing the amount of toll which would have been received by them merely for the use of the railway, if such conveyance had been by other parties, to which account the overseers of the parish shall have access during the first fourteen days in July and January in every year. But this act makes no provision for such an account being kept and open to the same inspection, where other parties do in fact convey on the railway, when it would be equally necessary;—an indication, it may be thought, that the framers of the act did not seriously contemplate, what in truth has not happened, and probably never will happen, that any parties but the company would ever become carriers on the railway. By the second act, however, which passed in 1837, (a) this 157th section is referred to, as if it directed that a separate account should be kept in both cases and be open to inspection, and the neglect to keep it, or refusal to permit its inspection, is subject to the very heavy penalty of 300*l.*, and 50*l.* per diem for its continuance. The effect of these clauses on the argument we must consider in the sequel. By the 172nd section of the first act, all persons have free liberty to use the railway with carriages properly constructed, on payment only of the rates, tolls, and sums demanded by the company, and subject to the rules and regulations which they shall from time to time make. The construction of such carriages must also be agreeable to the orders of the company, and approved by their engineer or agent. But although the railway itself is thus, under certain qualifications, thrown open to the public as a highway, no corresponding provision appears to have been made with regard to the warehouses, wharfs, stations, or landing-places. Both of the statutes before mentioned contain powers for the purchase of forty additional acres, eighty in the whole, for the erection of stations, yards, wharfs, and warehouses, and other similar erections and conveniences for receiving, depositing, loading, and unloading goods, and other purposes connected with the undertaking; but as to these lands, neither statute gives the public any right of access or user adverse to the company; and the use, for anything that appears, might be denied to any individual desiring to become a carrier on the railway. These are the material facts and provisions which the case states, and the statutes supply; and to these we are now to apply the rule of rating prescribed by the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, s. 1. The 3 & 4 Vic. c. 89, was referred to in the argument, but it has, in truth, little or no bearing on this question. It prohibits a rating of any inhabitant, as such inhabitant, in respect of his ability derived from the profits of stock in trade, or any other property, to the relief of the poor; but it expressly leaves unaffected the liability of any occupier of lands or houses to be taxed under the provisions of the 43 Eliz. and the 13 & 14 Car. II. Under the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, the rate must be made on an estimate of the 'net annual value,' and that value is declared to be 'the rent at which the hereditaments might reasonably be expected to be let from year to year, free of all usual tenant's rates, and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, if any, necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent.' To this enactment is added the proviso 'that nothing in it shall be construed to alter or affect the principles according to which different kinds of hereditaments were, at the time of its passing, by law rateable.' The argument for the company may be stated shortly: it is clear, and, if it be applicable to the circumstances, convincing. It is, that in order to apply the statute, it is always necessary to suppose the property, in respect of which the rate is imposed, let from year to year. The portion of the railway in the respondent parish must therefore be supposed to be so let; and in order to estimate the rent, it must be asked what the tenant would take by the demise: the answer to which would be, a portion of the railway itself, and the perception of the tolls as before fixed by the company. He would have the right to place his own carriages on the railway, not in virtue of the demise, but in common with all the world. The gross rent, therefore, would be something less than the amount of the tolls, by the allowance for tenant's profits; and after making therefrom the statutable deductions, the residue will be the net annual value on which the rate is to be imposed. If, because the lessee in occupation should place carriages on the railway, and derive therefrom a profit, you were to rate him in respect of that profit, you might equally rate any other carrier using the railway, but having no interest in it; for the user in the case of a lessee is not referable to his occupation under his demise. This, therefore, would be in violation of the statute. We forbear to notice at present the subsidiary parts of the argument. It is obvious that the case here supposed, which is that of a lessee in exclusive perception of the tolls on a railway practically open to rival carriers, is one very different in fact from the case before us—one, moreover, which not only has not occurred, but from the nature of things, it may be safely said, never can occur. (a) The supposition of a lease of a portion of the railway, with no demise of the stations, warehouses, and approaches to it, or at all events some provision for the use of them, is merely absurd. Such a lessee would be a mere toll-collector for the company, without even, as it should seem, any convenient mode of collecting the toll. The supposition, again, of a free competition of carriers on the same railway is practically little else than absurd. If all difficulties were removed as to the stations, warehouses, landing-places, and approaches, and all these were supposed as much laid open to the public as the railway itself, the very nature of the mode of conveyance forbids the free competition of rival carriers. But how can we suppose any competition possible with the company now the carriers, or indeed any free use of the railway, even by a private carriage, the company retaining the independent occupation and control over all the existing approaches? Nay, a lease which should include the stations and warehouses, and approaches, and place the lessee, as to extent of occupation, in the same position exactly in which the company now are, would not be without its difficulties; for the company's act is framed, whether effectually or not, with some regard to the interest of the public as well as the company. The travelling and conveyance, by carriages drawn or propelled by locomotive engines, are attended with peculiar and very alarming risks. Many regulations of police, therefore, are enacted, which the company are charged to enforce; and it is very questionable whether their lessee could be their delegate as to this trust, while it is certain that the company out of possession could not discharge the duty so conveniently or perfectly as they now can. These are considerations which make us pause in giving our assent to the arguments which suggest themselves. The proviso in the 6 & 7 Will. IV. declares, that the principles of rating are not to be altered or affected by it. It is, therefore, important to consider how, under the circumstances stated in the case, the company would have been rated if that act had not passed. They would then have been found occupying buildings and lands on an entire line of railway, and carrying on a trade not merely therein and thereon, but thereby—a trade inseparably connected with such buildings and such lands—a trade that could have no existence without the buildings and lands, and but for which the buildings would not have been erected or occupied, and for the sake of which, in great measure, the lands themselves are occupied in a particular manner. The profits of this trade would be included in the fares received for the conveyance of goods and passengers; and the question would be, whether those profits ought in any and what degree to affect the rateable value of the lands and buildings. There is a class of cases often cited, which has established the principles on which this question is to be answered. We allude among others to Rex v. St. Nicholas, Gloucester, (a) and Rex v. Bradford. (b) In the first, a steelyard, part of a machine in a street leading by a house, was in the house; sums were paid by persons for weighing their waggons and carts, but those persons were not compellable to weigh them. Without these profits the house was worth 5*l.* a-year; these profits were worth about 40*l.*; and these, after due deductions, were included in the rate, as enhancing the rateable value of the house. The court thought rightly so. Lord Mansfield, C. J., considered the house and machinery as one entire thing. 'The principal purpose of the house,' said he, 'is for weighing. The steelyard is the most valuable part of the house.' 'If,' said Willes, J., 'a billiard-table stands in a house, and the house should in respect of such table be let at a higher sum, it is rateable while the table continues there, and it is so let at the advanced rent.' Buller, J., said, 'There is an extraordinary profit arising from the modification of the enjoyment. The only question, therefore, is—whether a man shall be rated for the property he has? If a house to-day is let for 30*l.* a-year, and to-morrow, if turned into a shop, would let for 50*l.*, when it is turned into a shop it shall be rated at 50*l.*' The court clearly regarded neither the nature of the source of profit, nor its purpose. They looked only to the existing value of the subject-matter of the rate—the house—and rated it according to that value. This principle had become so well established by the time when Rex v. Bradford came before the court, that it was then sought not to deny, but to evade it by demising the canteen, and the privilege of using it as such, and selling liquors therein, at two distinct rents, in the hope of successfully contending, that the rate should be on the rent of the house only. The court, however, looked to the substance, not the form, and held both sums to be parts of one entire rent, paid for the occupation of the house and the enjoyment of the advantages which for the time belonged to it, and for the time enhanced its value. As in the former case, people might cease to weigh at the engine, or the engine might be removed; so in this, the barrack might cease to be occupied; the customers being all removed, the licence to sell liquors might be withheld or forfeited: still, while these remained, and so the additional value was sustained, that value, it was held, must come into the rate. And, as Le Blanc, J., expressly said, this was not rating the canteen man 'in respect of the profits of his trade, but only in respect of the rent which he paid.' The occupation of the house was indeed necessary for earning the profits of the trade, but the house became more valuable because it enabled the profit to be earned. How it became valuable the overseers were not to inquire. Finding it so, they were to rate the occupier according to that value. We are now to consider a case on which much reliance was placed by the appellants: it has been always considered a leading one, and we think will not, upon examination, be found to conflict with the preceding; we mean Rex v. The Trustees of the Duke of Bridgwater. The question there was simply this—Whether, when the other occupiers of lands in the parish were rated on four-fifths, not of the actual value, but of their rents taken as the value, the appellants ought—being the owners as well as the occupiers of land covered by water and used as a canal, and from which the case found they derived no profit, except from the tonnage of goods carried on it—to be rated at four-fifths of the gross receipts of such tonnage? The court determined, as might have been expected, that equal allowances must be made in both cases. The rent, or the sum at which the land will let, is the proper criterion; but the rent, they said, is not supposed here to be the value of the land or of its produce, minus the expense of producing, but the value after deducting the expenses of cultivation and the farmer's subsistence, and on this supposition it is clear the rate was unequal. This was all that was decided. The trustees were also rated as the occupiers of warehouses &c. adjacent to the canal; but as to these, by arrangement, no question was to come before the court; and they were also carriers on their own canal, and received freight as such for goods carried, in which the tonnage was included in the rate on the canal. The question being thus confined to the canal, and the trustees, as carriers, merely using it as any other person might and did, their characters of occupiers of the land and of carriers were quite distinct. The tonnage strictly respected their profits in the one, the freight their profits in the other. These last were unconnected with the land, did not add to its value, and therefore were properly excluded from the rate. Let now the principle which these cases establish be applied to the facts before us, if we wish to know whether the fares would have been properly included in the rate before the assessment act passed. We apprehend that, according to that principle, the only question to be asked would be, Do they increase actually the value of the buildings and lands on which the rate is to be made? If they do, and to whatever extent they do, to that extent, due allowances always being supposed, they must directly or indirectly be included. It would be no answer to say that by law the railway is a highway, that all the world may carry goods and passengers on it, that it is an accident that the company alone monopolises all the trade, and that their monopoly may cease to-morrow. These, so far as they lessened the value of the buildings and lands, would be proper to be taken into account as to the quantum of the rate, but that would not affect the principle. Then, do the fares increase the value of the buildings and lands? No one can doubt it; indeed, the case has answered that they do—that a higher rent for the buildings and lands might be obtained, in consequence of the facility afforded by the occupation of them to the carrying on a lucrative trade, and earning the profits on those fares. The case thus supposed would be exactly the same in principle as that of the house and engine, the house and billiard-table, the house converted into a shop, the canteen. It would be distinguishable from the canal case, because there, by agreement, the warehouses, &c., were laid out of consideration. The trustees were, in fact, only carriers in common with all the world; and, to the extent in which their trade on the canal did augment the value of the canal, it was brought into account. But it will be observed, that so far we have supposed lands and buildings, the railway, and the stations, &c., all in one parish and included in one rate. Will it make any difference in the principle, that the railway is in more parishes than one, and that we are now dealing with a parish in which, so far as appears, there is no station-house or other appendage to the railway? We think not. The subject-matter of the rate in any particular parish is, no doubt, the beneficial occupation of the land there, and you cannot draw into the rate the value of the occupation of buildings elsewhere; yet as you are to rate on the value in the parish, however occasioned, you cannot strike off any portion, because it would not have existed but for the occupation of buildings in another parish; still it exists, and in the parish, and therefore cannot escape the rate there. Suppose A. B. occupying an entire tenement, as an inn, in two parishes C. and D., the lodging part of the buildings in C. and the tap and stables in D., there would be two rates; but could the owner say in C., 'True it is, that which I occupy here is de facto more valuable than a mere dwelling or boarding house; but that is in a great measure because it is connected with the tap and stables in D.; you must reject whatever is valuable to that connection, and rate me here as if I occupied the inn without the tap or stables; you must suppose a demise only of the part in C., and rate on a rent to be given only for what that demise would pass to me?' The answer would be, 'If the occupation of this part is, in fact, of a certain increased value, whether that increase be derived in part or in the whole from the other is immaterial.' Wherever the valuable occupation is, there the occupier must be rated in respect of it. Then, in the present case, it would become a question of fact—Is the land occupied in the respondent parish by the railway more valuable in fact to the occupier by reason of his occupation, together with the stations, &c., elsewhere, and the general purposes to which all together are applied? We suppose that without doubt this would be answered in the affirmative. Sever it from them, and three or four miles of railway, unapproachable, from and to no place, having no connection with any termini, would be absolutely useless and unproductive. Give them the connection, which in fact exists, you give them a value increased indirectly from the stations, warehouses, and portions of the entire line in other parishes, and directly from a general traffic, to the profits derived from which everywhere they are indispensable contributors, and through one part of which they directly come. We are thus led to the conclusion, that if this case had been to be considered before the passing of the Parochial Assessment Act, the principle of rating on which the respondents have proceeded would have been found the true one. Has then the statute made any difference in this respect? Now, without having recourse to the express language of the proviso, it is clear that the enacting part introduced no new principle of rating. From the time of the decision in the case of Rex v. The Trustees of the Duke of Bridgwater before referred to, it had been understood generally that, fraud apart, the rent, whether the occupier was the owner or only the tenant—in the former case a supposed, in the latter a real rent—was to be the criterion of rateable value. Both parties in the present case appeal equally to this criterion. The difference between them is, there being no real demise, what is to be brought into the supposed demise? And as to this it is obvious the statute can make no difference, the only question between the parties being as to the proper mode of applying the admitted principle. In cases on rating, in which the great objects are to procure equality, and to bring everything into contribution which ought to share the public burthen, it is essential (as Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, in Rex v. Bradford,) to regard the substance and not the form. 'We must,' said he, 'judge of things as they really are, and not as they appear to be; and therefore, we are to consider here, whether this be not substantially one entire rent in respect of one entire subject, though artificially divided into several payments.' If we deal with this case in the same sensible and just way, we shall be at no loss to see, that to break up this entire line into parochial portions, and then in imagination to sever all and each from the buildings which the occupiers occupy together with it de facto, exclusively and under the authority of the same statutes passed in furtherance of one great scheme, and then again in imagination to sever both from the traffic which the occupiers carry on in, by, and throughout the whole, de facto, exclusively and for the sake of which they have made, built, and occupy the whole, is to apply the principle of the statute in form and not in substance, and so as to lead to a mere evasion of its object. If it be said that, by not only law, but in fact, the company may lease their line and become mere carriers on it; or that they may demise their buildings and carriages, cease to be traders, and become mere occupiers of the railway; the answer is, that the present rate, with which alone we have to deal, is not made on either of those states of facts; that whenever either shall arise, the rate must be altered to meet it; but that even then, in all probability, the result to the parish would be much the same; the rate only would become apportionable between two classes of occupiers, instead of being chargeable on one. But it is said that the private statutes conclude this question by the clauses referred to in the earlier part of this judgment, directing, under a severe penalty, a certain account of tolls to be kept for the benefit of the overseers of the poor. It is asked, What object can be conceived for that provision as to the tolls alone, unless the tolls alone be the fund with which the overseers have to do? Some answer was attempted to be given to this question in the argument, but not, we think, very successfully. The truth is, that the counsel for the appellants very much overrated its importance in the argument. The framers of this statute—which must not be dealt with, when we are talking of intention, exactly as if it were a public general act, but rather as a mode of carrying into effect a bargain between certain individuals and the public—no doubt intended to limit the rate (if by law they could) to the tolls alone, and these clauses were inserted to effectuate the working of that mode of calculating the assessment, if it should prevail. We have already noticed the omission, remarkable enough, in the first act, and the awkward mode in which it is attempted to be supplied in the second; but we are not now construing these clauses; we are only considering the collateral bearing on the argument which their insertion in the act has. All that need be said therefore is, that that bearing is not strong enough to prevent the application of the general principles of law to the rating of the company's property in their occupation. We conclude, therefore, in favour of the respondents' principle. The sums are agreed between the parties; and we decide in favour of the larger, by the application of admitted principles to the facts, thinking that that represents truly the actual rateable value of the land occupied by the company in the respondent parish." Rate amended by inserting the sum of 3800*l*.

9. Principle of Valuation.

(a) 1 Vic. c. 71, s. 82.

Land used for a navigation, rateable under a local act as the adjacent land in its improved state.

Rex v. Monmouthshire Canal Navigation Company, 5 N. & M. 68; 3 A. & E. 619. By a local act for making a canal, it is, by sect. 101 of 32 G. III. c. 102, enacted that the tolls taken by the company shall not be liable to the payment of any parochial rates, and that the company "shall from time to time be rated to all parochial rates, for and in respect of the lands and grounds to be purchased or taken, and the warehouses and other buildings to be erected or set up by the said company or their successors, in pursuance of this act, in such and the same proportion as, but not at any higher value or improved rent than other lands, grounds, and buildings, lying near or adjacent thereto, are or shall for the time being be rated, and as the lands, grounds, warehouses, and other hereditaments so to be purchased, and taken and erected, would have been rateable in case the same had continued in their former state, and not been used for the purpose of the said navigation or undertaking." The case stated that the present annual value of the adjacent land was very much greater in consequence of the formation of the canal, and their value had been increased by other local causes; that places had been left by the company for wharfs adjoining the canal, and that houses, yards, and docks had been built and formed in consequence of the canal, none of which belonged to the company. Three points were raised: 1. whether the 101st section was incorporated in subsequent acts; 2. whether the company were rateable in proportion to the actual value of the adjacent land at the time when the lands were originally taken for the canal; 3. that the company was rateable only in proportion to such value as the adjacent lands would now possess if the canal had not been made, and that their increased value, arising from the canal, ought not to be considered. The sessions confirmed the rate, which was made upon the present improved actual value of the lands adjacent to the canal. Lord Denman, C. J. "I think that there can be no substantial doubt as to any of the questions. The exemption is incorporated in the subsequent acts. This is manifestly distinguishable from the case cited. (a) The next question is as to the construction of the 101st clause, upon which appellants argue that they are only liable to be rated according to the value of the lands when taken; that is, that, for all time, the company are only to be rated according to the actual amount, and in proportion to the value of the lands at the time when they were taken. If that had been the intention of the legislature, it would have been better to have put a certain estimate on the lands. It would have been easy to have said that the land shall hereafter be rated at so much per acre. It would be exceedingly difficult at the present time to determine what was the value of the neighbouring lands at the period when the canal was formed. But it is said that the words are clear and explicit on this subject. If they are so, they are, in my opinion, clear and explicit the other way, because the clause provides that the lands to be taken shall be rated 'in such and the same proportion as (but not at any higher value or improved rent than) other lands, grounds, and buildings, lying near or adjacent thereto, are or shall for the time being be rated.' Two periods are here contemplated during which the lands and buildings shall be rated; not only the time of the passing of the act, but also all future time. The standard of rating being the fluctuating value with reference to the adjacent lands, how can it be contended that these lands are to be rated according to the value when they were taken? The clause proceeds,—'and as the lands, buildings, &c. so to be purchased and taken and erected, would have been rateable in case the same had continued in their former state, and not been used for the purposes of the said navigation or undertaking.' It does not say that they shall only be so rated as if the undertaking had never been carried into effect. It is impossible to give effect to the whole of the words, but it is extremely easy to see what the legislature intended, namely, that the company should pay the same rates as a similar description of lands would have paid if those lands had never been taken for the canal. As to the cases cited, they have been very industriously collected, and very ingeniously commented on, but the judges who decided those cases were deciding on a different question. The court were not considering the question which we are now considering, but only the question of rateability; and though they say that the lands should be liable to be rated only according to their value when taken, that language is to be applied to the liability and not to the rating. The rate is to be

9. Principle of Valuation.

according to the value from time to time. The language of the judges is, however, certainly open to the construction contended for. The third point is, that at all events the canal company were only liable to be rated in proportion to such value as the adjacent lands would now possess, supposing the canal and railways had not been made, but the adjacent lands had continued in their former state, and were now used for the same purposes as they were at the time when the lands were taken by the company; and that any increase of value, arising from or depending upon the existence of the canal or railways, ought not to be taken into consideration in ascertaining the value of the adjacent lands for the purpose of fixing the sum at which the canal company ought to be rated. The words of the clause are not such as these, and do not carry that import with them. The term used in the clause is not 'rated,' but 'rateable,' that is, liable to be rated. The company are liable to be rated according to the increase or diminution of value of the adjacent lands. That being so, the question is, whether we are authorised to introduce this condition, that they are only to be rated according to the value of the adjacent lands, such value not arising from the canal. Those are not the words in the act, and there is no reason why they should be inserted. If they were so inserted, the parish and the owners of neighbouring lands would be losers. On the first point the appellants are right: on the two latter the sessions have decided quite correctly." Littledale, J. "With regard to the first point I have no doubt whatever. I do not think it necessary to point out what the effective words of the incorporating clauses are; they seem to me complete to all possible purposes to incorporate the clause. Allusion has been made to a case. That was a very difficult case:—A power was given to make cuts communicating with the canal under particular circumstances; the line of the canal was to be extended, and the question was, whether those powers were to be extended to the new canal. The second point is, that the company were only liable to be rated in proportion to the actual value of the adjacent lands at the time when the lands which they now occupy were originally taken by them; I have not the slightest doubt as to this. The 101st section says, first, that the tolls are to be free from rates; then that the company shall be rated to all parochial rates in respect of the lands to be taken and the buildings to be erected, in such and the same proportion as (but not at any higher value than) lands and buildings adjacent thereto are rated. If this clause had stopped at these words 'are rated,' some doubt might have been raised, whether they were not to be rated according to the value when the lands were taken. But I do not think that even in such a case it is clear that would be so. The words 'are rated' are however followed by the words 'or shall for the time being be rated.' That refers not only to present but future time. The rate must go on from time to time. It is now upwards of forty years since the act passed. I do not see how it is possible to ascertain what the value of the land was when the act passed. I am very clearly of opinion that the true construction is, that you are to take the fluctuating value. With regard to the third question, there is more difficulty. The case states that the value of the property has increased by a variety of means and circumstances. It is contended by the appellants, that the increased value of the adjacent lands is only to be taken from other circumstances, and that the increase of value from the canal ought not to be taken into account. There is some doubt from the words, 'and as the lands so to be taken and purchased would have been rateable in case the same had continued in their former state.' It is said that the meaning of these words is, that the improved value of the lands, supposing that the canal had not been made, is to be taken. That appears to me not to be their meaning. The increased value of the lands is, in my opinion, to be taken—from whatever cause it arises. At the time of passing this act some doubt existed as to whether tolls were rateable per se. The act clearly intended to exempt tolls at all events, and the framers of the act may have thought that though they had exempted the tolls, yet if they had said nothing as to the lands, a doubt might have arisen as to whether those lands, as increased by the value of the tolls, might not be rateable; or whether, if a toll-house were erected on the land, the rate might not be increased on account of the value of the tolls received. The meaning of the latter part of the act is, that the land shall be rateable as mere land. The company have taken so many acres of land, and are to be exempt altogether from the payment of rates on the tolls; but the lands they possess are to be rated at the value of the adjacent lands. There is, however, great doubt (arising from the inaccurate wording of the clause), as to how the value of the adjacent land is to be estimated. Is the value of the adjacent lands to be taken without the addition made by means of the canal, or with the addition? How are the adjacent lands now increased in value? From two causes; by means of the canal, and by means of other circumstances. The meaning of the clause, I think, is, that the value, as it is altogether, is to be taken. I do not see how it is possible to ascertain how much the value has increased from one, and how much from the other cause. The proper mode of rating the canal is upon the supposition, that instead of the canal being made where it is, it was 100 yards off, and the present value of the land 100 yards off is to be taken as the value of the land upon which the canal is situated." Patteson, J. "On the first point I am with the appellants. The precise ground on which the case cited was decided is not known. There is this distinction between that and the present case, that there the question arose on the 128th section, and the court thought that the incorporating clause in the act of 42 Geo. III. did not extend to that clause. I do not see exactly the reason for the decision, but it is enough to say that the two cases are not alike. With regard to the other points, I cannot make sense altogether of the clause, though, upon the whole, it is more nearly intelligible than those clauses generally are. The intention and object of the act was, that the company should not be rated in respect of the tolls. The discussion in all the cases cited was, whether the premises were to be rated, taking into consideration the value of the tolls. It is argued upon the difference in the forms of expression used in different parts of this clause; first, there is 'at any time or times hereafter,' then 'from time to time,' and presently for the 'time being.' But what can this last expression by possibility mean, as it is here used, but the same as 'from time to time?' The enactment is, that the lands, warehouses, and other buildings to be erected (not now erected), are to be rated as other lands, grounds, warehouses, and buildings, are or shall for the time being be rated. If the clause had stopped there, no doubt could have existed but that the company were to be rated in the same way as if the lands and warehouses were in the hands of any private person; but it goes on to say, 'and as the lands and grounds, warehouses and buildings, would have been rateable if they had continued in their former state.' That is impossible, because the warehouses to be erected cannot be rated in the same way as if they had continued in their former state, for they had no former state, and had not been used before. They are rateable in the same manner as other land, that is to say, as if they were not in the hands of the company. That is the real meaning of the act. To the third question the answer has been given—that the thing is impossible. No person can possibly tell what is the value of the lands without including the value arising from the canal. The legislature cannot have intended what was impossible." Williams, J. "Upon the question of incorporation I am entirely of the same opinion. No doubt whatever can be entertained. All the words that can be introduced are to be found in the clause in question. Nor is there more doubt on the second point. Several cases have been very properly brought under the consideration of the court, for the purpose of inducing us to suppose that the period to be looked at, is the period of the formation of the canal or of the taking of the lands. Those cases depended upon the language of each act. This particular one must depend on, and be regulated by, the language in the particular statute itself. Upon that, it is impossible to suppose that the time of making the canal is the point of time to which we are to look to ascertain the amount of assessment. The property is to be rated from time to time according to the fluctuating value of the adjacent lands. With regard to the third point, almost all the observations as to the second apply, with this, that it introduces another subject more intractable and more impossible, namely, the extinction of the canal by supposition—a state of things I do not know how we are to deal with. The result is, that as to the second and third points we are against the appellants, and therefore the rate is to remain confirmed." Rate confirmed.

1. Where the mains and pipes of a gas company are distributed through several parishes, the proper criterion for the assessment of the company to each parish is not the amount of receipts for gas supplied therein, but a proportional part of the rent at which, after deductions for the wear and tear of machinery, the works of the company would let, calculated according to the improved value of the land, from the apparatus and works of the company laid down therein.

2 The proper deduction to be made from the rent of a company's works, to form the basis of a poor-rate assessment, is such an annual sum as will be sufficient to replace the works when worn out.

3. An assessment upon the above principles is not levied in any degree on the profits of the company.

4. A gascompany in the town of Cambridge, which consists of several parishes, in which are situated numerous colleges which are extra-parochial, supplied gas in mains and pipes to these colleges, and was rated therefore to the parishes in which the colleges are locally situated:—Held, that the rate was bad, the company being rateable in respect, not of its receipts, but the land occupied.

Reg. v. The Cambridge Gas Company, 3 N. & P. 262; 8 A. & E. 7. In St. Mary, Cambridge, the Gas Company was rated in 70*l.* for the mains, pipes, &c., fixed in the ground in the parish. Rate confirmed. Case:—The company was incorporated by statute, for lighting the various parishes in Cambridge. The company purchased premises in the parish of St. Andrew, within the town of Cambridge, and erected thereon a gasometer and works necessary for making gas and coke, and broke up the soil and pavement in the public streets, and fixed mains and pipes along the streets, and into the colleges, halls, shops, &c. of the University and town. They manufactured for sale a quantity of coke and tar, at their works in St. Andrew. The colleges and halls in the University were all founded prior to the 43 Eliz.(1601), excepting Downing College, which was founded in 1800; and (with the exoeption of Downing College and of some modern additions to others) no college or hall in the University ever has been rated to the poor. The parishes in which the colleges and halls are locally situate, in perambulating their boundaries, go into and pass through the colleges and halls, and affix their boundary marks therein. Several of the colleges and halls are lighted by the company with gas, which is supplied from their works by the mains and pipes fixed in the ground, and which pass into and through various parishes, and amongst others into and through St. Mary. The works and apparatus for making gas, coke and tar, with the mains and pipes, would let to a responsible tenant for 2400*l.* a year, the tenant paying all rents and outgoings for making the subject of occupation productive, and doing all the ordinary repairs required, but not providing for the renewal of the works when necessary, which renovation would cost upon an average 500*l.* a year; viz.—for the buildings and main pipes, 300*l.*; for the gasometers and other more perishable articles, 200*l.* The rent of 2400*l.* also includes the mains, pipes and apparatus in those colleges and halls which are not assessed to the relief of the poor, the value of which mains, pipes and apparatus, so included, is 350*l.* a year. The gas consumed in St. Mary is conveyed into and through it by mains and service pipes sunk and affixed in the soil. The sum received by the company for gas thus conveyed and consumed by the parish is 763*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* per annum. The assessment in St. Mary the Great has been confirmed, upon the assumption that 2400*l.* is the sum at which the works, &c. of the company is liable to be rated, and that this sum, after deducting 150*l.* for the value of the buildings and works at the manufactory, ought to be distributed amongst the different parishes through which the mains and pipes are laid, with reference to the annual receipts by the company for gas supplied in each parish respectively. If this be correct, 70*l.* is a proper assessment to be made by St. Mary. The company contend for the following deductions: For the cost of renovation of the various works 500*l.*; for the annual value of the mains, &c. within the colleges not rated to the poor, 350*l.*; for the profits in trade of the company, 600*l.* The company also contend that the rent at which the works would let is not the proper criterion of value, but that they should be rated at the actual productive value, to be calculated on the balance of their total receipts and expenditure, viz. on 2370*l.* 2*s.*, deducting therefrom—for renovation of works, &c. 500*l.*; bad debts, 50*l.*; law expenses, 25*l*; for interest at 5 per cent. on a capital of 3000*l.*, necessarily employed in the company's manufacture or works, 150*l.*; allowance of 20 per cent. for profits in trade, 600*l.*; gross receipt for gas supplied to the colleges and halls, 814*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.*—making a total of 2139*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* Personal estate or the profits of trade are not rated in any parish in Cambridge. The questions were, which of the two principles of assessment was the correct one, and what deductions ought to be made? Secondly, the total rateable value being ascertained, upon what principle it ought to be distributed amongst the several parishes through which the mains and pipes were laid, after deducting 150*l.* for the value of the buildings and works in St. Andrew? Lord Denman delivered the judgment:—"The company has been assessed in 70*l.* upon the amount of 2400*l.*, which is what a responsible tenant would give for the whole apparatus for a year, after making some deductions, and disallowing others, hereafter to be noticed. Upon hearing of the appeal two questions mainly arose:—1st. Whether the above principle of ascertaining the sums to be assessed be correct, or whether it ought to have been made upon the total receipts of the company, deducting their expenditure? and 2nd. Whether due allowance has been made of all proper deductions, supposing the first principle to be correct? That the general principle adopted by the parish officers, and confirmed by the sessions, as contrasted with that contended for by the appellants, is correct, we consider it to be now too late to doubt. The decisions of Rex v. Trustees of the Duke of Bridgwater, of Rex v. Tomlinson, and of Rex v. Lower Mitton, have, we think, settled the question. The former case is an express authority against the appellants, and the latter in favour of the decision of the sessions upon this point. We are of opinion, therefore, that the sessions were quite right in the adoption of the general principle, but not equally so in allowing the deductions which ought to be made. These were claimed by the company, first, for the renewal of the works, 500*l.*; secondly, for the value of the mains and pipes within the colleges and halls, 350*l.*; and thirdly, for the profits and trade of the company, 600*l.* As to the first, the rule laid down in Rex v. Lower Mitton is, we think, in point. Amongst other deductions there mentioned which ought to be made from that rent, which is to be the criterion for ascertaining the proper amount of the rate, there is specified, 'a further deduction which ought to be allowed when the subject is of a perishable nature, towards the expense of renewing or re-producing it.' It was observed at the bar, that, until Rex v. Lower Mitton, this doctrine is not to be found. The court, however, in their judgment, for which time was taken, referred to other cases as the foundation of it; and the reasonableness of allowing such a deduction is, we think, obvious, because the estimated rent at the supposed time of letting, manifestly could not be continued at the same amount unless the apparatus be maintained in as good a state and condition. And this view of the subject receives confirmation, if it had been requisite, from the recent statute 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, s. 1, which prescribes the manner in which property shall thereafter be assessed. The language there used in describing one of the deductions to be allowed, is almost in terms the same as that employed by the court in the last-mentioned case. The second ground of deduction may be more conveniently considered hereafter. The third claim of deduction is 'for the profits in trade of the company, 600*l.*' This claim, it is presumed, has arisen from the fact stated, that profits in trade are not assessed in any parish in the town of Cambridge, nor are they in this instance. The rent which it is found a tenant would give by the year, after certain deductions, (viz. 2400*l.*) is not the amount of profits. Those necessarily are something independent of and beyond the rent, upon which the person taking the apparatus must calculate, or nobody would become tenant at all; they are, therefore, perfectly distinct. The rent which a tenant would give for land after certain deductions, which is the criterion for the due assessment of it, is one outgoing, the expense of cultivation another; and all beyond, whatever that may be, obviously comes under the denomination of profits. Since, therefore, the profits are in their nature wholly distinct from the rent, and are not only not a deduction from it, but the reverse—something beyond and in addition to it—we cannot perceive that this claim rests upon any just principle, and are of opinion that it has been properly disallowed. We come now to the fourth question—Upon what principle the total rateable value, being ascertained, ought to be distributed amongst the parishes in and through which the mains and pipes are laid, after deducting 150*l.* for the value of the buildings and works in the parish of St. Andrew the Less? and it is one of considerable general importance. The sessions have adopted as their criterion the amount of the receipts for gas supplied in each parish, and have assigned to the respondent parish the sum of 753*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.*, being such amount within it; and, if the principle be correct, it is admitted that 70*l.* is the proper assessment upon the company in that parish. In determining this point it is necessary to consider in respect of what the company is rateable according to the decisions. And from Rex v. Corporation of Bath, and various other authorities in conformity thereto, including Rex v. Brighton Gas Company, and the still later case of Rex v. Trustees of Duke of Bridgwater, and many others which might be cited, it appears that they are rateable as occupiers of lands, 'for the improved value of the land from the gas pipes being laid in it.' This therefore being, as we think it is, the acknowledged principle, it seems to follow that the criterion before mentioned, which has been adopted by the sessions, cannot be the true one. Suppose (adopting their own rule) the value of the whole works to be 2400*l.* per annum, minus certain deductions, and the quantity of apparatus in the soil of each of the several parishes to be equal, but the sale of gas and the receipts for it to be confined to one, the Rex v. Corporation of Bath, Rex v. New River Company, and Rex v. Foleshill. are express authorities to show that a rate upon the company in that particular parish, where all the profits are received, could not be sustained. The New River Company was rated in the parish of Little Amwell at the sum of 300*l.*, the value of the land, independent of the water, being 5*l.* only; and this court held the rate to be proper, though it was expressly stated that no part of the profits accrued in the parish of Little Amwell, nor, indeed, until the distribution of the water in London. Since, therefore, in the present case the land occupied by the apparatus in each parish through which it passes contributes to the whole value to let, it follows that the company must be rated in respect of its occupation in each parish; and if so, we are aware of no rule which can be laid down as to the amount, except that it must be in proportion to the quantity of apparatus situate in each parish. It is true that in the case of a canal, where the tolls varied in different parts of the line, it was decided that a rate could not be made upon the company in each parish according to the length of the canal in it, and for that reason (Rex v. Kingswinford). But in a case very recently before this court, where the tolls were the same throughout the whole line, it was held that the proportion to be paid by the company in any given parish along the line must be ascertained by a mileage calculation (Rex v. Woking). And as it is impossible to suppose any superiority in one part of the apparatus over another, the same principle, we think, should be applied in the present instance, and that the assessment upon the amount of profits received in the respondent parish was wrong. It remains only to consider whether the deduction of 350*l.*, being the annual value of that part of the apparatus which lies within the colleges and halls, ought to be made. And we purposely reserved the consideration of this point to the last, because it is connected with the principle which regulated our answer to the last question. For, in as much as the rate is imposed upon the land used for the apparatus, and as none can be imposed upon that part which lies in those extra-parochial places, the amount which would otherwise have arisen therefrom (the aforesaid sum of 350*l.*) must, we think, be deducted. Upon the whole, therefore, in those particulars as to which the sums are agreed upon, the amendment of the rate will be of course; but as we have no materials for ascertaining the proportion between the parishes, it must (as according to the statement was intended) in that respect be 'adjusted.'" Rate sent to sessions to be adjusted.

9. Principle of Valuation.

9. Principle of Valuation.

10. Where Property to be rated.

10. Where Property to be rated.

Property must be rated in the parish in which it lies.

Real property, whatever may be its kind, if it is rateable, must be rated in the parish wherein it is situated; all, therefore, who occupy real property, must be rated in the district, though they dwell elsewhere. So that if a man occupy lands in the several parishes of A. B. and C., and reside in the parish of D., he is liable to be rated in all the four parishes; in A. B. and C. for the land he occupies in each respectively, and in D. as an inhabitant; Jeffrey's case, 5 Co. 66; 1 Bott, 122; but he cannot be rated for personal property which is not within the parish where he is an inhabitant. Rex v. North, Curry, 4 B. & C. 953; 6 D. & R. 424.

Coal mine extending into several parishes must be rated in each, although the shaft or entrance be only in one parish.

Rex v. Foleshill, 2 A. & E. 593. G. Whielden was assessed in 525*l.* for coal-mine and engines in Foleshill. Rate reduced to 320*l.* Case: Mr. Whielden is the owner and occupier of a coal-mine, situate partly in the parish of Foleshill, and partly in the adjoining parish of Exhall. At the time when the rate was made, he was getting coal partly from that part of the mine the surface of which is in Foleshill, and partly from that the surface of which is in Exhall. The pits, engines, and all the fixed machinery for working the whole of the mine, and by which the same is made available, are in Foleshill alone, in which parish all the coal taken from the whole mine is brought to the surface of the earth. Whielden is assessed in Exhall at 210*l.* for that part of the mine of which the surface is in Exhall. The sessions found that, if the overseers of Foleshill were entitled to rate Whielden in that parish for the whole profits of the mine, 525*l* was a proper sum; but that if they were entitled to rate him for the profit derived from the steam-engines and other machinery for the coal gotten from that part of the mine the surface of which is in Foleshill, the assessment ought to be reduced to 320*l.* Lord Denman. "I am clearly of opinion that this was a coal-mine in Exhall, where a part of the coal lay. It is too great a refinement to say that there was no mine there, because all the works for raising the coal were not within that parish. According to that argument, if a coal-mine extended into twenty parishes, and all the coal was brought to the surface in one, the proprietor must be rated in that only. The difficulty of ascertaining what is raised in each parish may be great; but here the sessions have ascertained it." Littledale, J. "It is contended that there can be no coal-mine in a parish, unless the apparatus for raising the coal be there. But that the law doth not consider this necessary to constitute a mine is clear from the language of Lord Coke: 'If a man hath mines hid within his land, and leases his land, and all mines therein, there the lessee may dig for them.' (5 Rep. 12 a.) So that in legal understanding there is a coal-mine where there are coals capable of being gotten. There may be no machinery at the place where it is severed; but if men are sent in for the purpose, it is the same thing. The case of a spring is very different; it cannot be ascertained where that originates, or through what parishes it may pass; but a vein of coal, when particular circumstances are known respecting it, may now be traced without difficulty, though this may not have been so in the reign of Elizabeth. The Rex v. Mayor of Bath, p. 312, was very much like this; but the present case is stronger than those in which companies have been held rateable for pipes laid in the ground to convey an artificial rill of water; here the subject of the rate is coal naturally existing at the place where the rate is imposed. As to the pit and shafts, they are rated in the one parish in which they are available for raising coal; if another shaft became necessary for raising the coal in the other parish, it would be the subject of a rate there." Williams, J. "Without violating the ordinary sense of words, the appellant may be considered as occupier of a coal-mine in both the parishes. It has been said that no value has been ascribed to the shaft and machinery in respect of the benefit derived through them from the coal situate in Exhall; but they are rated, and if the principle of the rate be not wrong, I do not see how we can say that they are rated erroneously. Order of sessions confirmed.

10. Where Property to be rated.

If part of a farm is situated in one parish and part in another, the occupier must be rated in each parish. Rex v. Etwall, 2 Smith, 15.

Or a farm.

In ordinary cases, therefore, no difficulty can arise upon this subject; but where there is an unbroken occupation extending through several parishes, and the profits arising from such occupancy are received in one or more of the several parishes, and not in due proportions in all, the respective claims of the several parishes for poor-rates do not appear so susceptible of a satisfactory adjustment. Accordingly, the reports present many cases in which this question has arisen, upon the rating of canals, gas-works, &c. It was formerly holden that navigations and canals were rateable in those parishes only in which the tolls were payable; but it is now settled that these companies are rateable to the poor in every parish through which their canals or works pass in proportion to the profits which the land occupied by them in such parish yields. Thus where a canal passed through several parishes, in which the tonnage dues varied, it was held that the company were rateable to the relief of the poor of each parish for the amount of tonnage dues actually earned there, and not for part of the whole amount earned along the whole line of the canal, in proportion to the length of the canal in that parish. Rex v. Kingswinford, p. 310. In like manner, the main pipes of water-works are rateable in the several parishes in which they are laid. Rex v. Mayor of Bath, p. 312; Rex v. Rochdale W. W. Co., p. 195.

Principle on which canals are rateable.

It will be perceived that in some of the following cases the question whether tolls are rateable is also discussed.

The proprietors of a navigation are rateable in every parish through which the navigation passes, as occupiers of the land used in each parish, for the navigation; and not in one parish on the entire amount of their tolls.

Rex v. Palmer, 1 B. & C. 546; 2 D. & R. 793. S. Palmer was rated for a wharf and buildings situate in Fornham All Saints, adjoining the river Lark, and occupied for the purposes of navigation of the said river, and the towing paths, sluices, &c. within Fornham All Saints, and the tolls arising therefrom due at Fornham All Saints. By 11 & 12 Will. III. s. 1, H. Ashley was empowered to make navigable the river Lark, and after making satisfaction to the land-owner to have the cuts, towing-paths, &c., in as ample and beneficial a manner as if he had bought them, and to receive for the freight of goods, at such place adjoining the river as he should think fit, certain tolls, and a proportionate toll according to distance. Mr. Ashley made the river navigable from Mildenhall to Fornham All Saints, a distance of twelve miles and a half. Half the channel, the towing-path and the half of one sluice, and two locks, are in Fornham All Saints. The towing-path is separated from the adjoining lands by a ditch. The appellant is not an inhabitant of Fornham All Saints. She is the owner under a distinct title of a wharf or coal-yard, of about four acres, lying in that parish, and adjoining the extremity of the navigation, in which wharf are several warehouses; different portions of this yard are allotted to the coal merchants who use this navigation, to the number of fourteen or fifteen. They pay no rent, but keep division fences. Large quantities of coals are carted at once from the boats, and not deposited in the coal-yard; but it is necessary for the accommodation of the wholesale dealers using the navigation, that they should have a place to deposit their goods, but the appellant is not bound to provide such place. The buildings and the outer fences and walls inclosing the wharf and the towing-paths, locks, and sluices, are repaired by the appellant, and were erected by her or her ancestors. Up to 1816, the appellant was rated on a rental of 17*l.* for the coal-yard, and no rate was imposed upon the profits of the navigation. The annual value of the coal-yard, as mere land, is not above 3*l.* Since 1816, she has been rated in Fornham, "for tolls arising from the navigation and warehouses," at 250*l.* per annum. The tolls becoming due, and received by the appellant for goods landed in the parish of Fornham All Saints, equal the amount of the assessment. Abbott, C. J. "I entertain the greatest reverence for the opinion of the learned judges who decided those cases. (a) It must be recollected, however, that when those cases came before the court, it had not been decided that tolls per se were not rateable. This is now fully established by Rex v. Nicholson (b). The proprietors of a navigation are, therefore, rateable only as the occupiers of the canal, or land covered with water, for their tolls, as profits arising out of that land so used. They are rateable, therefore, in every parish through which the canal passes, in respect of the land there situate, and so used for the canal. The true principle of rateability is this: the land is to be rated to the relief of the poor in the parish where it is productive of profit to the proprietor, and in proportion to that profit, which may be considered as in the nature of a rent received by the proprietor for the use of his land within the parish. This is very different from the case of a sluice. In that case, the tolls become due for the use of a sluice itself, and the proprietor must contribute to the relief of the poor in that parish where the sluice is situate. The proprietor of a navigation is to contribute in respect of the profits of land, extending probably through many parishes; and he is to pay to each of those parishes in respect of his land locally situate within it. Here, the whole land occupied by the canal contributes to produce the entire amount of the tolls, and the proprietor of the navigation ought not to have been assessed at that amount in any one of the parishes through which the canal passes. The rate, therefore, cannot be supported.

(a) The cases referred to were R. v. Aire and Calder Navigation, 2 T. R. 660, R. v. Page, T. R. 543, R v. Staffordshire Canal, 8 T. R. 340. These cases decided that a party was rateable in respect of the tolls of a navigation

10. Where Property to be rated.

(b) P. 220.

True principle of rateability;

of a sluice.

Rex v. Woking, 4 A. & E. 40. Earl of Portmore and another were rated in Woking as proprietors of the Wey navigation. The sessions allowed the appeal. Case:—By 22 Car. II. c. 26, the river Wey was declared to be navigable; and the soil of the river, and so much of the banks as extended on any side of the cut made since 1650, and the locks, sluices, towing-paths, &c., were vested in trustees to receive the profits of the navigation, and apply them to repairs, and for continuing the river navigable, and to dispose of the residue as the act directs; and they were authorised to remove all impediments. It provided that Lord Montagu, his heirs and executors should receive out of the profits 2½*d.* for every ton, chaldron, or load, navigated on the river; that F. Dalmahoy should receive 4*d.* for every ton, &c., navigated on the river in his own land in Depdeene in Stoke, besides 20*l.* for a wharf in that parish; and that the corporation of Guildford should receive 1*d.* for every ton, &c., navigated on the river; and the trustees were to pay to the person, to whom any share of profits should be allotted, such shares of the clear and neat profits of the navigation yearly, for ever, after deducting the expenses of repairing and of executing the trust. Recompense was to be paid out of the profits to any person receiving damage to his lands by the cutting of the passages or heightening of waters; and such recompense was to be paid before the persons received their shares. The river was not to be navigated without leave of the trustees, and they were empowered to take from the owners of vessels "passing upon any part of the river, 4*s.* for every chaldron of coals, and 4*d.* for every load or ton of corn," and so upon that rate for a greater or less quantity. The present fixed tolls:—Between Guildford and the Thames, 4*s.*; between Depdeene Wharf and the Thames, 4*s.*; between Stoke and the Thames, 3*s.* 6*d.*; between Bowers and the Thames, 3*s.*; between Triggs or Send Heath and the Thames, 2*s.* 6*d.*; between Newark and the Thames, 2*s.*; and so on, according to the distances, with similar rates, decreasing in the same proportion from the Thames to Guildford. Triggs is in the parish of Woking, and Send Heath in Repley, (on the side of the river opposite to Woking); and that part of the navigation which is in Woking extends from a spot between Bowers and Triggs and a spot between Triggs and Newark. If the increased toll is considered to be earned for the use of the navigation between the points above named, then 3*d.* per ton is payable in respect of that part of the navigation situate in Woking. There are no toll-houses on the river, but the entire tolls for as tolls, and for the entire amount at the place where they became due, "that is, where the respective voyages finished." This doctrine is now overruled, and the judgments are therefore omitted.

10. Where Property to be rated.

the whole navigation are paid at once. The length of the navigation is 27,600 yards; the length in Woking is 4049 yards. Upon an average of the last three years, the gross receipts for the tonnage on the navigation are 5923*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Gross receipts, deducting for tonnage not passing through Woking, 4705*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* The latter sum is made of 4311*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* receipts of the thorough trade, (going the whole line of navigation), and 393*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.* the short trade, passing through Woking. The share of Woking, in the gross receipts for the whole tonnage of the navigation, is, upon a mileage calculation, 886*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* Share in such gross receipts, deducting for tonnage, not passing through Woking, upon a mileage calcution, is 688*l.* 14*s.* 2¼*d.*; that is, Woking's share of the thorough trade, 630*l.* 5*s.* 4½*d.*; of the short trade, 58*l.* 9*s.* 9¾*d.* The share of Woking in the tolls, upon a calculation of 3*d.* per ton, being half the 6*d.* rise for Triggs and Send Heath, according to the scale, for every ton passing Woking, is 309*l.* On an average of three years, the general expense of the navigation, exclusive of compensation, is 2566*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* The compensation to Mr. Dalmahoy, the Corporation, and Lord Montagu, and for mills (one only in Woking), amounted to 1226*l.* 3*s.* The expenses in Woking were equal to the expenses of the other parts, regard being had to comparative length. The share of Woking on the whole expenses, exclusive of compensation, on a mileage calculation, was 384*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* Share in the compensations, on the like calculation, 183*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* The net income of the navigation, on an average of three years, is 2230*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* The share of Woking on the net profits, upon a mileage calculation, without deduction, is 337*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Ten per cent. would be a reasonable deduction from the net income for tenant's profits, leaving 2007*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* Share of Woking, after such deduction, 300*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* The question was, whether the sum, on which the rate was to be made, was to be ascertained by the proportion which the length of the navigation in Woking bears to the whole length, and, if so, what deductions ought to be made; or whether the sum is to be ascertained by the amount of the tonnage on all goods carried through Woking at the rate of 3*d.* per ton; and, if so, what deductions are to be made. On the first mode, the appellant claimed deductions to the amount of 886*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* as the share of Woking in the gross receipts for the whole tonnage on a mileage calculation: i.e. 1. 197*l.* 15*s.* 8¾*d.* for tonnage not passing through Woking, thereby reducing the share, as before stated, to 688*l.* 15*s.* 8¾*d.* 2. Share in the general expenses, on a mileage calculation, excluding compensation, 384*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* 3. Share in compensation, on the same calculation, 183*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* The last two sums were to be deducted from 688*l.* 14*s.* 2¼*d.* And from the residue, after such deductions, (121*l.* 1*s.* 6¼d) the appellants claimed further to deduct, 4. tenant's profit, 10*l.* per cent., 12*l.* 2*s.*, leaving the sum on which the appellants were to be rated, 108*l.* 19*s.* 6¼*d.* If the court should adopt the second mode of rating, and hold that the gross receipts applicable to Woking were to be calculated at 3*d.* per ton on all goods carried through Woking, the appellants claimed to take as deduction the 2, 3, 4, above deductions, in which case the deductions would exceed the receipts. The respondents denied that any of the deductions ought to be made. Cur. adv. vult.—Lord Denman. "The rule by which Canal Companies are to be rated is laid down in Rex v. Kingswinford, in these words: 'The true principle is, a Canal Company is to contribute to the relief of the poor in each parish through which the canal passes, in proportion to the profits which they derive from the use of their land in the parish.' It is also truly observed, in the same judgment, 'that if the traffic be the same through the whole line of the canal, every part of the canal will earn an equal proportion of the tolls; on the other hand, if the profit vary in different parishes, the rate also must vary.' Apply that principle to the present case. The thorough trade pays one gross sum for the whole line; and all parts of the line are equally profitable: the proportion of Woking, therefore, must be ascertained by a mileage calculation, with reference to the whole line. Again, the short trade pays one gross sum for the whole distance gone over; and all parts of that distance are equally profitable: the proportion of Woking, therefore, must be ascertained by a mileage calculation, with reference to the whole distance gone over. The tolls earned by passing over parts of the canal which do not include Woking will be wholly excluded. By the case, the true proportion of Woking in the gross receipts, according to the calculation, is 688*l.* 14*s.* 2¼*d.* The next question is, what deductions, if any, ought to be made from this sum. The necessary repairs and expenses must, of course, be deducted; and, as they are found to be equal throughout the line, the proportion of Woking is to be ascertained by a mileage calculation, and is found by the case to be 384*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* Mr. Dalmahoy's groats are payable in respect of the use of the canal within his land, in Stoke; and, therefore, if this could be deducted at all, they must be deducted from the profits in that parish, and not from the profits in Woking. But these groats, as well as the per centages paid to Lord Montagu, and to the Corporation, are payable out of the profits of the canal, and are in truth nothing more than rent-charges; and they do not affect the value of the occupation, or the rent which a tenant would give, but only show amongst whom, and in what proportion, the rent or profits are to be divided. The poor-rate must be paid on the whole profits by those who receive them, viz., the proprietors; and they must settle the matter as they can with those who are entitled to share the profit with them. The same reasoning applies to the compensation to the mills, for they also are payable out of the profits. One mill only is situate in Woking, the compensation paid to which is 65*l.* 6*s.*; but we think, for the reasons before stated, even this sum ought not to be deducted. Upon the whole, the gross receipts earned at Woking are found, according to the principles here laid down, to be 688*l.* 14*s.* 2¼*d.* From that sum must be deducted 384*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* for repairs and expenses, leaving a balance of 304*l.* 11*s.* 4¼*d.*, from which 10*l.* per cent. for tenant's profits, amounting to 30*l.* 9*s.* 1½*d.*, must be deducted, according to the rule laid down in Rex v. Duke of Bridgwater, (ante, p. 279.) The case indeed does not state distinctly that lands are rated at rack-rent and no more in Woking; but, as it finds that 10*l.* per cent. is a reasonable deduction for tenant's profits, we must presume that the fact is so: and this deduction must be made in order to equalise the rate, and the sum at which the proprietors of the navigation ought to be rated will then stand 274*l.* 2*s.* 2¾*d.*"

Rent-charges are not to be deducted.

Rex v. The Earl of Portmore, 1 B. & C. 551; 2 D. & R. 798. Defendants were rated, as proprietors of the same river mentioned in Rex v. Woking. The question raised, was whether the proprietors were rateable, except upon the amount of the riverage arising from the goods landed in the parish. The case was not argued; as it was admitted that, according to the principle laid down in Rex v. Palmer, the proprietors were liable to be rated in Woking in respect of the profits of their land, situate within that parish; and that the riverage payable on goods landed there would not be the correct measure of those profits.

The rate must be made not in respect of the riverage becoming due in the parish for goods landed there, but in respect of the profits of the land used for the navigation within the parish.

Rex v. the Trent and Mersey Navigation, 2 D. & R. 752; 1 B. & C. 545. The appellants were, by an act of 6 Geo. III. empowered to purchase lands to them and their successors, for making a navigable canal from the Trent to the Mersey; and to take, for their own use, for tonnage and wharfage, for all goods conveyed upon the canal, rates not exceeding one penny halfpenny per mile for every ton, to be paid at such places near the canal as the company should appoint. All persons had liberty to navigate with boats upon the canal, upon payment of such rates. A part of the canal, in length about one mile and fifty-two yards, comprising the land for which the defendants were rated, passes through Findern. The company have no other property in the township, except the canal and towing-path. No tolls are received in Findern, nor do any tolls become payable there, the company not having so appointed; the company receive annually a much larger sum than that in respect of which they are assessed, for tolls for the passage of goods over that part of their canal which lies in Findern. The Canal Company derive very considerable annual profits from the canal. The counsel being asked whether they could distinguish this case from those which had decided the principle, that a canal is rateable in every parish through which it passes, according to the value of the land covered with water, they confessed their inability to distinguish it from Rex v. Milton. It was observed, that this was the first time that canals had been rated as land covered with water. Per Curiam. Is not that the only correct mode of rating them, according to the statute which imposes the rate upon "every occupier of lands." Unless they are rated in this form, they cannot be rated at all. The cases which have been decided establish this principle, namely, that the occupier of lands in every parish is liable to be rated in respect of the land which he occupies in each; and if a canal passes through several parishes, the undertakers are rateable in each and every parish through which the canal passes, according to the quantity of land occupied. The Trent and Mersey Canal Company occupy the land which the water covers in the township of Findern, and are rateable in respect of such occupation.

A canal company is rateable in each parish for the profits earned in each, and not upon the entire profits divided by the length of the canal in each parish.

Rex v. Kingswinford, 7 B. & C. 237. The proprietors of the Dudley Canal Navigation appealed against a rate made in the parish of Kingswinford, whereby the company were rated at 25*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* The land occupied by the canal in this parish was twelve acres, two roods, thirty-six perches, and is one-twelfth part of the land occupied by the company for the whole canal, which extends through seven parishes. The total amount of tonnage received by the company for the last year on the whole canal, after deducting expenses, is 5670*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, one-twelfth part of which is 472*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.* and the rate thereon 9*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.*, to which amount the sessions reduced the rate. The tonnage received during the same period for goods carried on that part of the canal which is situate in Kingswinford, after deducting expenses, is 1208*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, and the rate on that sum was 25*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Bailey, J. "It seems to me that in amending this rate the sessions have not adopted the correct rule. The Canal Company are to be rated under the 43 Eliz., as occupiers of land in Kingswinford. Tolls eo nomine are not rateable, but if the subject-matter out of which the toll arises be one mentioned in the statute, as the object of a rate, then that may be rated by name, and the tolls which constitute its profit may be thus made to contribute to the relief of the poor. A Canal Company, therefore, is rateable in respect of the land which they occupy in every parish through which the canal passes, and for that value which the land there produces. When there is a long line of canal extending through different parishes, although the money collected for tonnage in all the parishes constitute one common fund, out of which all the expenses are to be borne, still the proportion which those expenses may bear to the tolls collected, even in cases where the rates are the same along the whole line, may vary in different parishes. The traffic on the canal may be greater in some parishes than others, or the rates may be unequal, and thus the net profits, which constitute the value of the land used for the canal, may vary in different parishes. There are twelve miles in length of the canal in this parish. Assuming that the different branches of the canal had been made under (a) one act of parliament, I am of opinion that the company ought to be rated in each particular parish in proportion to the profit which they derive from the land there used by them for the purposes of the canal. If a canal run through six different parishes, and there is the same traffic through the whole line of the canal, every part of the canal will earn an equal proportion of the tolls. But it may happen that in that part of the canal situate in one parish, there may be double or treble the traffic which there is in any other of the six. Why are the other parishes to have any part of the tolls earned in that parish? The land in those parishes contributes nothing towards earning the sum derived in that other parish from the use of the land there. The true principle is this: a Canal Company is to contribute to the relief of the poor in each parish through which the canal passes, in proportion to the profit which they derive from the use of their land in that parish. If the profit arising from a given quantity of land vary in different parishes, the rate must vary in the same proportion. The whole rate will be payable out of the common fund. But then each parish will receive from the company a sum in proportion to what the land in that parish produces. If in this instance this rule has the effect of making the rate in Kingswinford higher, it will also make the rate in other parishes lower. For these reasons, it appears to me that the sessions have not proceeded on the correct principle, but that they ought to have rated the company for the tonnage received on that part of the canal which is in Kingswinford, and the rate ought therefore to be amended by making it 25*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*" Holroyd, J., and Littledale, J., concurred.

For what the Oxford Canal Company rateable.

Rex v. Oxford Canal Company, 10 B. & C. 163. The proprietors of the Oxford canal were empowered to take a mileage tonnage for coals and other merchandises, excepting that they were not to take a tonnage upon coals for two miles measured from L. to B. As to those two miles, the proprietors of the Coventry canal should take all the rates and duties payable by virtue of that act for all coals carried from any part of the Oxford canal within those two miles; and the proprietors of the Oxford canal were to take all the rates payable by an act for making the Coventry canal, for all goods, except coals, conveyed upon any part of the Oxford canal, and afterwards upon the Coventry canal, within three miles and a half of the junction of the two canals. The point of junction of the Oxford and Coventry canals was in the parish of Foleshill. That parish contains one mile and nine hundred and sixty-three yards of the Oxford canal, being part of the two miles above-mentioned, and also two miles and a quarter of the Coventry canal, being part of the three miles and a half above-mentioned. By the 33 Geo. III. c. 80, for making the Grand Junction Canal (which it was apprehended would be injurious to the Oxford canal), it was agreed that compensation should be made to them. It then authorised the proprietors of the Oxford canal to take, for all coals that should pass from the Oxford canal into and upon the Grand Junction canal, 2*s.* 9*d.* per ton, without regard to the distance the same should pass on the Oxford canal; and for all other goods which should pass from any navigable canal into or upon the Oxford canal, and from thence into or upon the Grand Junction canal, or from the Grand Junction canal into or upon the Oxford canal, and from thence into or upon any other canal, 4*s.* 4*d.* per ton, without any regard to the distance the same should pass on the Oxford canal. Cur. adv. vult.—Bayley, J., after observing on the 33 Geo. III. c. 80, added, "The question is not for what injury the right to receive the new tonnage dues is given as a compensation, or, in other words, for what reason the legislature have given that right to the Oxford Canal Company; but what is the legal liability of the company in respect of these dues, when received by them, to contribute to the poor-rates. The company are rateable in each parish for the net annual profit of the portion of the canal lying in that parish; in other words, for what the canal in each parish earns, and the tonnage dues are paid by the owners of goods for passing along the canal, and are received by the company for the use of it, though the reason of being enabled to receive them by the legislature was, that their canal was likely to be injured by the new navigation. It is on the ground that these dues are received for the use of the canal, and are earned by the canal, that the company were held rateable for them in Rex v. Oxford Canal Company (p. 284.) For the passage of coals, therefore, along the part of the canal lying in Foleshill, some part of the new dues is received by the company, and in respect of that part the rate is proper. It is true that the consequence is, that for coals passing along that part of the canal, being within two miles from the junction with the Coventry canal, the company would receive more dues, and therefore be rateable for more than those which pass along other parts; for they would receive for such coals the proportion of compensation dues above mentioned directly, and indirectly a part of the tonnage duties on other goods on the first three miles and a quarter of the Coventry canal, for which it is admitted by their counsel that they were properly rated in the rate in question. This consequence, however, can make no difference in the construction of the act of parliament, which makes the dues payable by the public to the company for passing along their canal, and which therefore constitute a part of the profits of the portion of the canal through which they pass. The canal earns no part of the original tonnage upon coals carried through the two miles of Foleshill into the Coventry canal, because it receives its equivalent by the tonnage upon other goods for the first three miles and a half upon the Coventry canal; but those two miles contribute to earn the compensation tonnage, and for that there is no equivalent. The rate is therefore to be confirmed in this respect; but the case must be remitted to the sessions to make the several deductions (a) to which the company were held in the argument to be entitled."

Corporation of Bath erected reservoirs of water in the parish of A., from which, by pipes, they supplied with water the inhabitants of the parishes of A. and B.: Held rateable in A. for so much of the profit from these reservoirs as they made in A., but not for the entire profits made in A. and B.

Rex v. The Mayor of Bath, 14 East, 609. By a rate for the parish of Lyncomb and Widcomb, the corporation of Bath were rated as occupiers of certain springs and reservoirs, at 22*l.* 10*s.* An act, 6 Geo. III. c. 70, for supplying the inhabitants of the city with water, gave the corporation full power to cause water to be conveyed to the city from springs belonging to the corporation; and to break up any public way, and any street, to drain and collect the water of the springs, and to make reservoirs and engines necessary for distributing such water, &c., and to lay under ground pipes for the same purpose. The act vests the property of all watercourses leading from the springs to the city, and of all reservoirs, pipes, &c., used for the purpose aforesaid, in the mayor, &c. The corporation made several reservoirs in Lyncomb and Widcomb, where the springs are situated, no part of the city, &c., lying in the said parish The reservoirs are walled in and roofed; pipes were also laid under ground for conveying the water, which first pass through a part of Lyncomb and Widcomb called Holloway, and from thence along the Old Bridge, over the river Avon, through the parishes of St. James and of St. Peter and St. Paul, which two parishes are within the city. All the water flowing from the springs is collected into the reservoirs, from each of which it is distributed by a main pipe and cock, under the charge of an officer of the corporation, who has no residence upon the spot, but goes there to turn the cocks and distribute the water; and from the main pipes it is distributed by smaller pipes to the houses of the inhabitants, both in Holloway and in St. James and St. Peter and St. Paul. The occupiers of the several houses pay a rate to the corporation for the water with which they are respectively supplied, and the amount of this rate is in the discretion of the corporation. The corporation has been in the occupation of the springs and reservoirs, and of the land included within the walls thereof. The annual profits arising to the corporation from the water thus distributed from these springs and reservoirs, amount to 600*l.* in the whole, of which 50*l.* are collected from the occupiers of houses in Holloway, and 550*l.* from the occupiers of houses in St. James and St. Peter and St. Paul; the 600*l.* is paid at the office of the chamberlain of the corporation. The 22*l.* 10*s.* for which the springs and reservoirs are rated, is upon the whole sum of 600*l.* The lands in which the springs and reservoirs are situated are rated separately in the names of the respective occupiers, exclusive of the springs and reservoirs, and the land thereof. The questions were, 1st, whether the corporation are liable to be rated at all in respect of the said springs and reservoirs in Lyncomb and Widcomb: and 2dly, whether they were to be rated to Lyncomb and Widcomb upon the whole of the profits of the water which flows from the springs and reservoirs, or only upon so much of those profits as are collected from the occupiers of houses within the said parish. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The mayor, &c., of Bath must be rated under the 43 Eliz. if at all, for the description of property within mentioned, either in the character of inhabitants of the parish of Lyncomb and Widcomb, or as the occupiers of some of the different kinds of property particularly specified in the act as the subjects of the rate. Under various and late decisions, and particularly that of The King v. Nicholson, it has been established as the Inhabitants mean residents.

(a) The sum paid for the poor-rate, the expense of collecting the tolls, of repairing the banks of the canal, and of supplying it with water.

sound construction of the 43 Eliz., that the word inhabitants in that act is only satisfied by a residence within the parish. And as there is no doubt that the corporation of Bath are not residents, they cannot be charged eo nomine as inhabitants in this case; and, therefore, if rateable at all, must be rated as the occupiers of some of the several descriptions of property enumerated in the act. That they are occupiers of the reservoirs which they are empowered to make, and in which the water which they are also authorised to collect is kept, and that such reservoirs and water kept therein are comprehended within the legal description of land (one of the descriptions of rateable property mentioned in the stat. 43 Eliz.), will not admit of a doubt. This disposes of the first question submitted to our opinion. As to the second question, whether the corporation is liable to be rated in this parish for the whole of the profits of the water which flows from the springs and reservoirs, or only for the profits collected in this particular parish; it should seem to follow as a consequence from what has been said already, that if the corporation of Bath be occupiers of any local visible property producing profit in any other parish, and falling by reasonable construction within the same description of property as the reservoirs already mentioned, they should be liable in like manner to be rated for it pro tanto in such other parish. As so large a portion of the apparatus, by the aid of which the water is conveyed along the two several parishes in Bath, and the soil itself within these parishes on which these pipes rest, and on which soil the corporation are certainly, under the powers of this special act, authorised to lay them, must be considered as mainly conducive to the acquiring the water-rent which in so large a proportion (namely, eleven to one, or 550*l.* out of 600*l.*) is received for the use of it in the two Bath parishes, it is impossible to say that the corporation ought to be rated as they are, that is, for the whole of such profits in the parish of Lyncomb and Widcomb alone. A great deal of stress has been laid on the supposed authority of Atkins v. Davis, Cald. 313; but as the judges of K. B. were equally divided, no decision which can be relied on as authority was come to in this court. And although it may be collected from Lord Loughborough's judgment in the Exchequer Chamber, that he thought that 'the proper place where the value of the whole is to be taken is the fountain head from which the whole is to be distributed,' thereby intimating two things; 1st, that the whole profit should be assessed at one place; and 2dly, that such one place should be the fountain head; yet he adds, 'however, it is not very material to consider that, for upon the present action it is certainly sufficient to warrant the levying the distress that here was a foundation to make a rate and some property rateable.' And indeed upon that ground, viz., of the form of the action which assumed the distress to be illegal in toto, and upon the difference which is to be found in the language of the statutes 27 & 43 Eliz., did the united judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber proceed, and not upon the supposed rateability of the whole profits at the fountain head. In order to decide the questions reserved for our determination upon this case, it is by no means necessary or proper for us to pronounce in what parishes besides that of Lyncomb and Widcomb, and in what proportions the corporation shall be in future charged. Indeed, we have no adequate materials before us for such a decision. It is enough, upon the present occasion, to state that the rate in question by which the corporation has been charged for the whole of their profits in that one parish, is on that account bad, and must be quashed."

A company's bridge standing in two parishes is rateable in both, although the tolls are received in one only.

Rex v. Barnes, 1 B. & Adol. 113. The Hammersmith suspension bridge is at one end in the county of Middlesex, and the other in the county of Surrey. It was erected by a company, and the surplus receipts are divided among the shareholders. The gate at which the tolls are received is on the Middlesex side, and the company paid to the poor-rates on that side; but upon being assessed on the other side, where no tolls were taken, they appealed, and the sessions confirmed the rate and granted a case. Bayley, J. "This is a very clear case. The proprietor of land is liable to be rated to the relief of the poor in the parish where the land lies. The Hammersmith Bridge Company have, in the parish of Barnes, land used by them for the purpose of facilitating the passage over the Thames, and they are entitled to receive from all persons passing their bridge certain tolls. Then what is the character of their occupation of that land? It is a valuable occupation in respect of the money which the land produces to the company, by being appropriated to the purpose of facilitating the passage over the Thames, for which passage they receive tolls. The quantum is a question for the sessions. All that we decide is, that the land is rateable property in the place where it is situate. There the profit is earned, though the money may be actually received elsewhere." Littledale, J. "The tolls are payable for passing over the bridge, not for passing through the toll-gates. The gates are put up merely to prevent persons passing over the bridge without paying the toll." Parke, J., concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Lighthouses.

The tolls of a lighthouse, where rateable.

Rex v. Rebowe, 1 Bott, 166. Two light-houses were erected at Harwich, by Sir I. R. by virtue of a patent; for the maintenance thereof certain tolls were payable by all ships coming into or passing by the harbour. Part of these tolls were collected by the defendant at Harwich, and the remainder on other parts of the kingdom. He did not reside in the parish, and was no occupier there, excepting by having two persons who lodged in one of the lighthouses to take care of them. He was rated to the lighthouses. The court decided that the tolls were not rateable there, not being locally situated in the parish. According to what was stated in argument in Rex v. Cardington, the ground of decision was, that the vessels did not come within the parish, and therefore the tolls were not due there. Note. In a MS. note of this case, in the possession of Mr. Douglas, it is expressly stated that the court observed that it was not set forth in the case that Rebowe was rated for the house, but only for the tolls. Dougl. 118, n.

The owner of a lighthouse is not rateable for tolls not received in nor taken for vessels passing through the respondent parish.

Rex v. Tynemouth, 12 East, 46. There were two points in this case; 1st, whether R. W. be rateable for two rooms in Tynemouth lighthouse: 2nd, whether Mr. Fowke be rateable for the tolls in respect of the lighthouse. By letters patent of the 17 Car. II., and by the statute 42 Geo. III. Mr. F. is entitled to Tynemouth lighthouse, and certain tolls payable in respect of the same, for every ship passing by the lighthouse, and belonging or trading to the ports of Newcastle or Sunderland; and for certain tolls from every ship belonging to any foreigner passing by the lighthouse. The lighthouse is in the parish of Tynemouth, the tolls are payable upon ships sailing on the German ocean, and benefited by it. They never come within the township of Tynemouth, and neither Mr. F. nor any of the receivers of the tolls reside in Tynemouth, and the tolls are collected out of it. R. W. is a servant of Mr. F. at an annual salary, and resides within the walls of the lighthouse, to take care of the lighthouse; and is rated for these two rooms, as occupier, at 6*l.*; and Mr. F. is rated for the tolls in respect of the lighthouse. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It is no question now whether this property could be rated in some other way; as if the lighthouse, whose light is the meritorious cause of earning the tolls, were in consequence let at a larger rent; but this is a rate specially upon the tolls, and therefore the case is not distinguishable from Rex v. Rebowe (supra), which is so immediately in specie, and in all its circumstances the same, and has been so long considered and acted upon as law, that it concludes the question. What local property is there within the township on which this rate or the tolls can be levied? The tolls are not received there; nor do the ships from which they are collected come within the township; the subject-matter of the rate has no locality within this township. As to the other point, it is equally clear that it is the occupation of the master by his servant, and not the occupation of the servant himself, and therefore the rate on the servant is bad on that ground."

Where a person resides as a servant, he is not rateable.

Owner of the lighthouse is not rateable though some of the vessels come within the parish.

Mr. Fowke was subsequently rated, as the occupier of the lighthouse, at 500*l.* The case stated that if the lighthouse should be let, together with the tolls, it would be worth 500*l.* a year to be rented by a third person; but if let without the tolls, it would be worth 6*l.* a year only. There were also these facts added, that about a thirty-eighth part of the entire number of vessels paying tolls come within the township of Tynemouth, and receive their loading there. The tolls received in respect of such last-mentioned vessels do not equal in amount the expense of maintaining the light and managing the lighthouse; the whole of which expenses are incurred within the township of Tynemouth. No tolls from any ships whatever are received in the township of Tynemouth, nor do any of the collectors thereof, or Mr. Fowke, reside in that township. It was contended, that by the letters patent and the act of parliament, the privilege of having the light was connected with the lighthouse itself, and that therefore the whole was rateable. Bayley, J. "The tolls do not arise from the building, nor from anything of necessity connected with it, and this case therefore is not distinguishable from that of Rex v. Coke (infra). Here the act of parliament declares the lighthouse to be a public benefit, and it ought not to be burthened with an additional charge." The order of sessions was quashed, and the sessions were directed to amend the rate by reducing it to 6*l*. Rex v. W. Fowke, 5 B. & C. 814.

The proprietor of a lighthouse is not rateable in respect of duties collected out of the parish.

Rex v. Coke, 5 B. & C. 797; D. & R. 666. Mr. Coke was rated as the occupier of a "lighthouse, together with the duties and contribution money payable in respect of ships passing by the same, the annual value of the same being stated to be 2250*l*. over and above the expense of keeping up the lighthouse and lights. The lighthouse was situated in the parish, and occupied by a servant of the owner, but the duties were collected out of the parish. Bayley, J. "It seems to me that this house is rateable, but that the rate, to the extent to which the parties are desirous of carrying it, cannot be supported. The rate is upon the lighthouse, with the duties or contribution money, in respect of ships, hoys, and barks passing by the same. To make the defendant rateable to the full extent of 2,000*l*. a year, it must be shown that he comes within the words of the stat. 43 Eliz, and is the occupier of a house or land of that annual value. The authorities cited in the course of the argument are distinguishable from the present case, except the two cases, Rex v. Rebowe, (ante, 314), and Rex v. Tynemouth, (ante, 314), where it was expressly decided that the tolls of a lighthouse were not rateable. A considerable interval of time elapsed between the decisions in those cases. And where there has been one uniform course of proceeding as to property of this description for a very considerable period of time, we ought not to introduce any alteration, unless it be founded upon sound legal principles. The privilege of erecting lighthouses was, I apprehend, originally in the Crown. I believe it was afterwards vested in the Trinity House. The tolls are contributed by the proprietors of ships; and if the sums of money which they from time to time pay be properly apportioned, they will contribute a sum sufficient to remunerate the proprietor for the expense of keeping up the light-house, and to leave a moderate and reasonable profit for the trouble of renewing the light. If the proprietor of the lighthouse be rateable to the poor, the contribution which he will expect from the proprietors of ships must be proportionally larger, and they, in reality, will pay the rate, which will therefore, become a burthen upon commerce." The learned judge, after commenting on several cases, added: "Rex v. The New River Company does not bear upon the present case, because the proprietor of the lighthouse in this case is at liberty either in that house or in any other which he may think fit, to erect or to rent, to burn lamps, and to produce a stream of light which shall be visible at a considerable distance at sea. But even if, by the terms of the letters patent, it were imperative on the grantee to burn his lights within this particular lighthouse, still, if the privilege is not given to him by reason of his being the occupier of that house, it would not be appurtenant to, but distinct from, the house where it was to be exercised; and the duties payable to him in respect of the light, would be profits arising from the exercise of that privilege, and not from the house or land where it happens to be exercised. The grantee would in that case have an exclusive privilege of carrying on in that particular house (if I may so express myself) a particular description of trade. But there would be no necessary connection between the freehold interest in that house and the light which is to be kept up in it. The apparatus which is to contain or produce the light may or may not be attached to the freehold, and if it were wholly unconnected with the freehold, it might produce all the effect which is produced in a lighthouse. Suppose that effect were produced by hanging up a quantity of lighted coals with a reflector behind them, any sums payable by the owners of ships for the benefit which they might by possibility derive from that fire, would not constitute any part of the profit of the house or land where the lighted coals or reflector happened to be placed, but would be profits arising from the privilege. Then, as all the purposes contemplated by the grant may be attained by forming the apparatus to produce the light in such a way as not to be connected with the building, and in that case the tolls payable by the ships would not constitute any part of the profits of the land, and would not therefore be rateable; it seems to follow, that the exclusive privilege of having the lights, even if the grant required them to be placed in a particular house, is distinct from that house or building, and the duties and contributions are profits arising from the exercise of the privilege, and not from the house or land where it is exercised, and those profits are not rateable as constituting part of the value of that house or land. And if it be once ascertained that the tolls and duties, quâ tolls and duties, are not rateable, then, although the business must be carried on in a house, or even in this specific house, a distinction must be taken between the value of the house in which that particular trade (for I consider it a species of trade) is carried on, and the profit arising from the trade itself. Now here the nature of the trade is that the proprietor of the lighthouse is to keep certain lights burning. Those lights are not of necessity attached to the freehold, and if they are not attached to the freehold, they would be personal property. The proprietor of the lighthouse does no more than keep a candle or a fire lighted, and for keeping his lights; whether produced by candle, or by burning coals, or by oil, and for keeping mirrors behind those lights, the tolls and duties which are the subject of the rate are imposed. Such tolls, down to the present time, never have been rated, and, in my opinion, they are not rateable." Per Holroyd, J. "In this case the profits of the lighthouse arise from the tolls, and I think, according to the two cases (Rex v. Rebowe and Rex v. Tynemouth), we must decide that the tolls, not being received and having no locality in the parish of Lydd, are not rateable. Here the benefit for which the tolls are paid (which is an incorporeal hereditament) is not one of the things mentioned in the 43 Eliz., for it constitutes a benefit not received within the parish, but received by ships elsewhere, or not received at all if they pass in the daytime when no light is burning." Per Littledale, J. "To make tolls rateable, there must not only be a profit produced within the parish, but it must also arise from the use of the thing, and in respect of it. Here the ships have not that sort of use; they have merely a transient view of the light as they pass. They do not come within the lighthouse as they do within a dock; in that case they have the actual use and occupation of the dock. They not only do not come near the thing itself, which is the subject of profit, but they do not come within the parish. This is distinguishable from all the other cases where the tolls themselves have arisen in respect not only of what was produced in the parish, but from the actual use of the thing which was the subject of the rate." It was ordered that the rate be amended by striking out 2250*l.*, and inserting 4*l.*, the annual value of the house.

10. Where Property to be rated.

The owner of a Ship or a Vessel (a) must be rated in the parish to which the ship belongs.

Rex v. Shepherd, 1 B. & Ald. 109. This was an appeal against a rate for the parish of St. Peter, Wisbech, whereby the defendant was rated for the profits of the sloop John, and one Patrick for the sloop Nene. The harbour of Wisbech is several miles up the river, but the water is so shallow that small vessels only can get up into the parish of St. Peter's. Part of the port is not in any parish. The John, being too large to get up to the parish, was never within any part of it. Her usual berth was in the port, but not in the parish. "John of Wisbech" was painted on her stern. The cargoes were usually unshipped into smaller vessels, which had their home in St. Peter's, and were included in the rate. The owners and master resided in St. Peter's, and carried on their business there. The sloop is registered there, and has her entries and clearances made there. The freight is generally paid, and the contracts made at the place of business. The sloop Nene usually receives and delivers her cargo in the parish, where her voyage terminates, but occasionally delivers them out of the parish. When unemployed, her home is in the parish, where her owner and master resides and carries on his business. She is registered there, and her name on the stern is "The Nene of Wisbech." At the time of the rate she was not in the parish. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "As the ship John was never within the parish, I cannot consider the rule by which the court has abided in all cases, viz., that the property should be locally within the parish, as attaching upon her. That vessel has never been locally or visibly within the parish, and therefore I do not consider her as rateable. As to the Nene, she is said to have been out of the parish at the time when the rate was made; but I cannot say that we are to measure by a stop-watch the precise position of a ship (which is in its nature a machine of passage) at the time when the rate was made. If such strictness were required, it would be almost impossible to make a ship the subject of a rate. It appears to me to be sufficient, to answer the purpose of the poor-laws, that the parish in which the ship is rated is the domicile of the vessel, and that the profits derived from it contribute to the ability of the occupier within the parish. In all cases the profit is earned, as to the bulk, out of the place. This vessel, as far as can be predicated of such a thing, yields a profit so as to answer the description of local and visible property within the parish. It need not be ascertained with precise exactness where the ship was at the time of the rate, in order to give validity to the rate; this parish was generally her home, and the vessel so far resided there that it could not be predicated of it, that it resided elsewhere; therefore, it must be rated within that parish; it can be rated nowhere else. It seems to me, therefore, that the Nene was well rated in the parish of St. Peter's." Bayley, J. "I think that the Nene was well rated in the parish of St. Peter's; it has been decided over and over again, and too often for us to disturb it now, that if property can be shown to be available property in the parish where the owner resides, he must be rated there in respect of such property. It is found in this case that the owner of this vessel was an inhabitant of the parish, and also that the ship's port was within this parish: she usually received and delivered her cargo there: then, if I may use the expression, where was the property domiciled? Locally within the parish of St. Peter's. It has been said that the ship might be lost at the time when the rate was imposed; but it must be recollected that the rate is made in respect of by-gone profits, already earned at that time; and, therefore, the loss of the ship could not interfere with the right of the parish to receive this rate in respect of profits antecedently received." Abbott, J. "I think the owner of the ship John was not rateable in respect of that vessel, inasmuch as she was never within the limits of the parish; the rule being, that the property rated must be visible property within the parish. If the court were to depart from this rule, I think it would create great uncertainty and confusion in this branch of the law. As to the Nene, I think the owner was rateable in respect of that vessel, as St. Peter's was the parish where her cargo was usually received and delivered, and which, when unemployed, was her home. Being a coasting vessel, she would necessarily be often absent, but in the course of that employment, she would often return to the parish; it may therefore fairly be said that this parish was her home, just as the dwelling-house of a person travelling on his necessary business may be said to be his home. Looking, then, at the general state and condition of this vessel, I think she must be considered as property locally visible within the parish, and that her occasional absence is quite immaterial." Holroyd, J. "I am of the same opinion as to both points: as to the Nene, the owner is rated in respect of profits, which had been earned by him, from a vessel, which, under the circumstances, must be considered as visible property within the parish. In the case of The King v. Jones, there was no statement that the ship was in the parish at the time of the rate being imposed; but that circumstance does not, I think, make any difference in this case, inasmuch as St. Peter's was the home of the vessel, and she must be considered as belonging to this parish for the purpose of being rated."

10. Where Property to be rated.

Land converted into drainage.

Rex v. Sculcoates, 12 East, 40. The commissioners of the Beverley drainage were rated for lands and buildings in Sculcoates, purchased by them and converted into a drain. By the 38 Geo. III., c. 63, commissioners were appointed for draining low grounds in certain parishes. For this purpose they purchased the lands and buildings now rated, which were converted into a drain extending from Beverley to Sculcoates, ten miles; but no part of the lands thereto adjoining are benefited thereby: previous to the purchase, these lands and buildings had been rated; but, since the making of the drain, they had not. The proprietors of the low grounds had been benefited by this drainage. Lord Ellenborough said, "he could not find by the act that the commissioners were in the receipt of any fund for their own benefit, or were trustees of any divisible fund in their hands in this parish, for the benefit of others; and certainly not for their own benefit. That the only persons benefited were the owners of lands benefited by the drainage in other parishes, and in those liable to be rated for the improved value of their premises." Bayley, J., asked if "there was any beneficial interest derived in this parish from these works." Lord Ellenborough. "In all the cases cited, the property rated yielded pecuniary benefit, or that which was capable of being estimated and converted into pecuniary benefit, within the parish, to the parties interested; but here the benefit results to the lands drained, which lie in other parishes, and the property would be liable to a double rate if it were also rateable in the hands of the commissioners. Here is no benefit received by these commissioners for themselves or others within this parish, which is capable of being rated. The benefit is all divided in other parishes. The Dock Company of Hull were in the receipt of tolls for the benefit of the shareholders in respect of the use of the docks within the parish in which they were rated; but the commissioners are the mere instruments of benefit to landowners elsewhere. I know of no instance where a Canal Company has been held rateable for the mere space occupied by the canal in a particular parish, if no tolls were received or become due there; and I cannot distinguish between land converted into a drainage and a canal." And finally he delivered the opinion of the court, that the commissioners having no beneficial occupation of the property in this parish, either for themselves or others, were not liable to be rated.

On waste lands, formerly fens and marsh, drained, &c.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 37, when waste lands, which were formerly fens and marsh, are drained and improved, and the parish to which they belong cannot be ascertained, the occupier thereof, or of houses built thereon, tenements, tithes arising therefrom, mines therein, and saleable underwoods thereon growing, or hereafter to grow, are to be rated to the parish that lies nearest to such lands; and if any dispute shall arise as to what parish or place they ought to be rated to, the justices in quarter sessions shall, after due notice given to the persons interested, and to the parishes and places abutting and adjoining the said lands, cause them to be assessed as they shall think meet, and their determination and allotment is to be final and conclusive.

11. Form of Rate, Allowance thereof, and Publication of same.

11. Form of Rate, Allowance thereof, and Publication of same.

It was observed by Willes, in Rex. v. Wavell, Dougl. 116, that the title of a poor-rate is in general material, and cannot be rejected as surplusage; as if by its title a rate purport to have been made to raise money to reimburse money borrowed, that defect in the object of the rate will be fatal to its validity. See the usual form of title of rate, post, Appendix.

By a general order of the 22d April, 1842, overseers are required to produce a rate-book in this form :— 11. Form of Rate, Allowance, &c.

Form of rate by the Commissioners.

RATE-BOOK.

No.	Name of Occupier.	No. of Votes.	Name of Owner.	No. of Votes.	Description of Property rated.	Name or situation of Property.	Estimated extent.	Gross estimated Rental	Rateable value.	Rate at —— in the Pound.	Arrears Due, or if Excused.	Total Amount to be Collected.	Amount actually Collected.	Present Arrear.	Amount not Recoverable, or Legally Excused.

and the allowance of it must be recorded in the rate-book.

By 6 & 7 Will. IV., c. 96, s. 2, every rate must, in addition to any other particular which the form of making such rate shall require to be set forth, contain an account of every particular set forth at the head of the respective columns in the form given in the schedule of the act. This form is in substance the same as that prescribed by the commissioners, except that they have added the column "No. of Votes," and the four last columns. See Statute, Appendix. Form by statute.

The commissioners, by the above order, require the overseer to enter in a book the names and addresses of the owners and proxies, who shall send their claims to vote, and the assessment, in respect whereof they so claim, in the following form :—

No.	Name of Owner.	Address.	Property in respect whereof right to Vote is claimed.	No. of reference to Rate-book.	Aggregate amount of Assessment.	Name of Proxy.	Address of Proxy.	No.	Date on which claim received.

We do certify that the above is a full and correct register and entry of the claims to vote of owners of property and proxies in the said parish.

(Signed)

Overseers.

It was urged in Rex v. Lumsdaine, that a rate in the prescribed form was necessarily good, but Lord Denman observed, "The rate in another form may be bad, but it does not follow that every rate in that form is good." 10 A. & E. 159.

The Parochial Assessment Act further requires that the churchwardens and overseers, or other officers whose duty it may be to make and levy the said rate, or such a number of the said churchwardens and overseers or other officers as are competent to the making and levying of the same, shall, before the rate is allowed by the justices, sign the following declaration given at the foot of the form ; and otherwise the said rate shall be of no force or validity :— The overseers must sign a declaration, otherwise the rate is of no force.

11. Form of Rate, Allowance, &c.

DECLARATION OF OVERSEERS AND CHURCHWARDENS.

We, do declare the several particulars specified in the respective columns of the above rate to be true and correct, so far as we have been able to ascertain them, to which end we have used our best endeavours.

Thomas Jones, Overseer,
John Thomas, [Churchwarden, &c. &c.]

The words "otherwise the rate shall be of no force or validity," apply solely to default in signing the declaration, and not to omission of any form given in the columns.

Reg. v. Fordham, 11 A. & E. 73. On appeal against a rate, the sessions quashed it. The property rated was not numbered according to the schedule of 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, but the numbers, for the most part, were wholly omitted, or else attached to the names of the occupiers, instead of the properties. The columns intended for the number of voters were left entirely in blank. The names of many persons were inserted without any sums being carried out against them in the assessment. In many places the column, which should contain the name of the occupier, was left entirely in blank, without even the word "ditto" under the name immediately preceding the blank; and the column which should contain the "arrears due or if excused," was improperly left in blank. It was contended that these omissions rendered the rate altogether void, and upon this ground the sessions quashed it. Lord Denman said, "The present and other discussions may, perhaps, induce the legislature to endeavour to give to the word 'void' and other similar words a more fixed signification, and to point out the consequences that are practically to follow from that signification. At present the courts have often great difficulty in construing the word. It is contended that this rate was void, because it did not follow the forms in the schedule of the Parochial Assessment Act. I am of opinion that the words 'of no force or validity,' apply only to a non-compliance with the last requirement, viz., that the declaration at the foot of the form shall be signed by the churchwardens and overseers. I am, in some degree, led to this conclusion by a consideration of the serious consequences that would follow from another construction; for, if a rate which does not exactly correspond to the various forms detailed in the schedule is to be absolutely void, all parties concerned in levying it would be exposed to actions of trespass; or the same consequence, perhaps, might follow, if some jury hereafter should think that the rate had not been made on the net annual value of the hereditaments. But by confining the words, which make a rate 'of no force or validity,' to a rate wanting the declaration required by the words immediately preceding, no violence is done to the language of the act, nor is any inconvenient consequence introduced. I think that the sessions were wrong in quashing this rate on the ground that it did not contain the particulars directed by the act; the act gave them no power to quash it on that ground." Patteson, J. "I am of the same opinion. The 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, requires that a rate shall contain certain particulars, but, if they are omitted, does not say what is to be the consequence; for the words which are relied upon as invalidating this rate, apply, in my judgment, to the want of the declaration only, and not to the want of the other particulars in the schedule. As the act gives no appeal against a rate because it is not made out according to the forms of the act, it follows that the sessions could not quash this rate on that account. What other consequences may ensue from an omission to make the rate according to form—whether the parish officers may be indicted—it is unnecessary to say. Williams, J. "I am of the same opinion, and will add one word, as the question arises for the first time. The non-observance of all the forms in the schedule of the act is, in my opinion, no ground for considering a rate as a nullity; the only ground, according to the second section, is the want of the declaration at the foot of the rate. Suppose ten thousand persons to be rated; if any one particular in the schedule is omitted in the rate, is the person levying to be made a trespasser, and exposed to suits without number? I think the sessions were wrong in quashing this rate for the want of form, and that they should have proceeded to try the appeal upon the merits." Coleridge, J. "I am of the same opinion. There are, no doubt, many cases in which the word 'void' and other similar words have been modified by the construction of courts of justice. In construing any new act, I should be unwilling to extend this practice. But, in construing the act now before us, I think, in point of literal rendering and without looking to the consequences, that one rendering is as probable as the other. The words 'that otherwise the said rate shall be of no force or validity,' occur at the end of a long period, and may be applied either exclusively to the want of the declaration, or generally to the want of that or of any other of the requisites in the section. I may then look at the consequences incident to either rendering. Can it be said that a rate, made in a large parish, is to be void, if any one of the multiplied requirements of the statute or of the commissioners, as to matters of form, is neglected? On the other hand, if it is only the neglect to sign the declaration which is to invalidate the rate, no perplexity ensues; what is required in that respect is a plain, practical proceeding, and any one can see whether what is required has been done or not. Forms, indeed, for rating are given by the act, and ought to be followed, but what is to be the consequence of not following them is not stated. There may of course be an appeal under 17 Geo. II. if a party can bring himself within that act by showing that he is aggrieved; but, as the act gives no power to quash for want of form, the sessions were wrong in quashing the first rate." Lord Denman, C. J. "Rex v. Newcombe (4 T. R. 368) was a very distinguishable case. The statute expressly made any rate invalid, of which due notice had not been given; and, though due notice had not been given of the rate, it was contended that a mandamus should go to the defendants, who were justices, commanding them to issue distress warrants for levying."

11. Form of Rate, Allowance, &c.

The rate must show upon the face of it in respect of what property the assessment is made upon each individual.

Rex. v. Aire & Calder Navigation, 2 B. & C. 713. The property in respect of which the appellants were rated, was specified, but as to all other persons it was not particularised or specified. Abbott, C. J. "The objection to the form of the rate is decisive. If any person wished to appeal, on the ground that another was underrated, how could he tell in respect of what property the rate was imposed?" See Rex v. Bromyard.

A rate in one gross sum for rent of mines, and also for moors and wastes, is bad.

Rex v. Welbank, 4 M. & Sel. 222. The defendants were rated thus: The trustees under the will of G. Browne, for 2000*l.* annual rent paid by the Arkengathdale and Derwent Mine Company, for the Arkengathdale lead mines and other minerals and fossils (except coal), within the parish of Arkengathdale, and also in respect of their being owners and occupiers of the moors and wastes within the parish of Arkengathdale. Amount, 2000*l.*; assessment, 150*l.* (being 1*s.* 6*d.* in the pound). Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This rate appears to be ill on this single ground, that it is a conjoint rate in respect of two things, one of which is not rateable. The rent is clearly not the subject of rate, the other may or may not be. But it cannot be good as a conjoint rate." Le Blanc, J. "If these trustees had been rated in a large sum in respect of their being the owners and occupiers of the moors, commons and wastes, equal to the profits they derive from the mines, perhaps the court might have said, we will not enter into the question of proportion; but here the rate is imposed in respect of two distinct properties, namely, the rent and the surface of the land."

The description of the property assessed must also be in such terms as to show it was in point of law primâ facie rateable; and therefore it must not be described as merely a way or an entrance, &c.

A preceding or even ancient rate may be a good rule for future assessments, but it cannot be confirmed as a standing rate; but to be equal it should be altered as circumstances have altered. Rex v. Wrexham Regis, 1 Bott, 123.

Rate by a limited authority.

A rate made under a limited authority ought to disclose, on the face of it, the power under which it is made. Reg. v. Ipswich, 8 Dowl. 103.

Allowance of the rate by the justices.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, they (the overseers), or the greater part of them, shall take order from time to time by and with the consent of two or more such justices of the peace as is aforesaid, &c. (See that stat. ante, 11.)

And this consent is usually given by the justice signing the rate, with their allowance thereupon, thus:—

Form of allowance.

We, two of her majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, one whereof is of the quorum, do consent unto and allow of this assessment: witness our hands the day of 18 J. P.
K. P.

11. Form of Rate, Allowance, &c.

The sessions have no original power to order an assessment.

But this consent is to be understood of two justices out of sessions; for the sessions have no original power to order an assessment to be made, but only if it come before them by way of appeal; for in such case the party would be deprived of the benefit of appealing. (2 Lord Raym, 798.)

And if the justices refuse to sign and allow the rate, the court of King's Bench will grant a mandamus to compel them; and an attachment if they keep out of the way to avoid the mandamus. (Rex v. Edwards, 1 Bla. 637.)

The justices cannot refuse signing a poor rate.

Rex v. Justices of Dorchester, 1 Stra. 393. A mandamus issued to the justices to sign a poor-rate. Before the return, a motion was made to supersede it for several objections to the fairness of the rate. But by the court: "The two justices are necessary to sign the rate only by way of form; for it is the churchwardens and overseers that have the power of making it; and whether it be a fair rate or not, is proper for the jurisdiction of the sessions, and was never intended for examination." The justices returned that they could not allow the rate, it not being a just and proper rate; and the court quashed the return, and ordered an attachment.

Semble. The allowance of a poor-rate by justices is still a mere ministerial act, notwithstanding 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, s. 1, which says that no rate shall be allowed which is not made upon the net annual value of the property rated.

Held, that at all events, they cannot refuse to allow a rate on the sole ground that it is not in conformity with the valuation made by order of the poor law commissioners, under sect. 3.

Reg. v. The Earl of Yarborough, 12 A. & E. 416; 3 P. & D. 491. On an application for a mandamus to compel the defendants to sign and allow a rate made for the relief of the poor of Brading, it appeared that, by an order of the poor-law commissioners, a new survey and valuation had been taken of the lands &c. in the parish, and that the overseers had made a rate upon the alleged net annual value of the rateable property, but the rate was not in all respects in conformity with the survey and valuation, certain alterations having been made by them, which, in their judgment, rendered the same more equal. The defendants had refused to allow the rate, which was in the form and contained the declarations required by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, on the ground that it varied from such survey and valuation. Lord Denman. "Every reader of law, probably, has been surprised at finding that the allowance of a poor-rate by justices is a mere ministerial act. It seems very extraordinary that they should be called in, and yet not permitted to exercise any judgment in the matter. But this rule has been settled and acquiesced in for a long course of years. The parochial assessment act does not, in terms, get rid of the old law, but certainly uses language somewhat inconsistent with it, in enacting that no rate shall be allowed which is not made upon an estimate of the net value. The justices in this case would certainly have brought themselves within the very terms of the first section, if they showed that the rate was not made upon such an estimate; but, even then, I cannot believe that the legislature intended to make the allowance of poor-rates other than ministerial, and I think it would be highly inconvenient so to alter the law. In Queen Elizabeth's time, the justices were almost the only persons who could read and write, and there might then have been good reason for appealing to their judgment in such a matter; but now, overseers are, generally speaking, persons of respectable attainments, and may, more safely than in former times, exercise their own judgment in assessing the parish; and the parochial assessment act itself requires them to state by the declaration, which is a necessary part of the rate, that they have virtually exercised their judgment. There seems, therefore, to be no reason, from the necessity of the case, why the allowance by the justices should not be a ministerial act now, as well as formerly. The justices in this case have not attempted to bring themselves within the terms of the act, by showing that the rate was not made upon an estimate of net annual value, but they rely specifically upon this—that the rate did not follow the valuation made under the authority of the poor-law commissioners. I will not flinch from saying that I think the justices cannot refuse to allow a rate even where they are of opinion that the rate is not made upon a proper estimate of annual value, as required by the act; for I think it was simply intended to lay down a rule which the parish officers were to take as their guide, and themselves carry into operation. And with regard to the valuation, for non-conformity to which the justices rejected this rate, though undoubtedly the opinion of scientific men may be most useful, and should have all respect paid to it by the overseers, yet they must exercise their own judgment in the last resort, and assess property accordingly. It is to be observed that, if the justices will not allow a rate, no provision is made by the act as to what is then to be done: no appeal is given in such an event; and the parish might be left without any fund for supporting its poor. The view which the magistrates have taken of this case is certainly very natural with reference to the words of the act; but I think that they were in error, and that this mandamus must go." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion. I think that the magistrates should have acted as they would have done before the late statute. The overseers may frequently think it prudent to adopt the valuation made under the authority of the poor-law commissioners, but are not bound to do so. They may discover errors in the valuation, and therefore pass it by altogether. The magistrates, I think, ought not to have refused to allow this rate, on the ground that it was not made according to the valuation. They have no power to amend the rate, and there is no appeal from their decision; so that, if they will not allow the rate, there can be no rate at all; and an application must be made for a mandamus to make a rate. The act has provided two stages of appeal in the case of incorrect valuation, and has made special provision as to the notices, &c. A third stage of appeal to the justices could not have been intended, for there is no provision as to notice or any other matter connected with it. The two stages of appeal that are allowed are against the rate, not against the valuation." Patteson, J. "I do not wonder that the justices, looking at the terms of the parochial assessment act, should think they had the power of withholding their allowance of this rate. At the same time it appears to me that they were mistaken in their construction: the act does not require the rate to be made upon such an estimate as shall satisfy them of its correctness. If the rate is in the form prescribed, and the overseers make the prescribed declaration that the rate has been made, to the best of their belief, according to the provisions of the act, that satisfies the requisition of the first section, (unless there is good reason for supposing that their declaration is false and collusive,) whether they turn out to be right or wrong. It is no part of the magistrates' discretion to go into particulars; they are merely to see that the rate bears the general character required. With respect to the valuation under the third section, I cannot think that it was intended to be binding, even where there has been no subsequent alteration in the value of property. There are no words in the act to signify that, after such a valuation has been made, the rate shall be in conformity with it. So the section of the poor-law amendment act that has been referred to, does not say no rate shall be allowed which is not according to such valuation; it avoids this, and merely says that all rates grounded on the valuation shall be allowed, without even requiring them to be grounded on it." Williams, J. "I agree in thinking that the act furnished the magistrates with good reason for conceiving that they had the power which they have exercised. I do not know whether the question might not have been doubtful to my mind, if I did not see that there is a provision made by the 6th section for the exercise, on appeal, of that very power over the valuation which they have assumed in the first instance. If the form of rate, as prescribed by the act, is observed, I do not see that the justices have any other discretion than they had formerly." Rule absolute.

Aldermen of London.

A parish extending into two counties or into two liberties.

Sect. 9 enacts, "That if it shall happen any parish to extend itself into more counties than one, or part to lie within the liberties of any city, town, or place corporate, and part without, that then the justices of every county, as also the head officers of such city, town, or place corporate, shall deal and intermeddle only in so much of the said parish as lieth within their liberties, and not any farther, and every of them respectively, within their several jurisdictions, to execute the ordinances before mentioned concerning the nomination of overseers, the consent to binding apprentices, the giving warrant to levy taxation unpaid, the taking account of churchwardens and overseers, and the committing to prison such as refuse to account or deny to pay the arrearages due upon their accounts; and yet, nevertheless, the said churchwardens and overseers, or the most part of them, of the said parishes that do extend into such several limits and jurisdictions, shall, without dividing themselves, duly execute their office in all places within the said parish, in all things to them belonging, and duly exhibit and make one account before the said head officer of the town or place corporate, and one other before the said justices of peace."

Rate for a parish comprehending a borough ought to be confirmed by a justice of a county and of the borough.

Rex v. Gordon, 1 B. & Ald. 524. Where a parish contained within itself a borough not co-extensive with it, and the mayor of the borough, on a return to a mandamus for allowing a poor-rate made by the churchwardens and overseers of the whole parish, stated a custom which had existed since stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, of appointing separate churchwardens and overseers, and of making separate rates for the borough and for those parts of the parish which lay without the borough; it was holden that such custom was invalid, and the return was quashed. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The 9th section of the 43d of Eliz. specifies and enumerates many acts that may be done separately, where a parish is partly within a town corporate, and partly without; but it does not mention the act of making rates. Now this of itself affords a very strong presumption that the legislature contemplated the making of one entire rate for the parish; and, besides, that section, after directing in what way the churchwardens and overseers are to be appointed, enacts expressly that they shall, without dividing themselves, execute their offices in all places within the said parish. That shows distinctly that one rate only for the whole parish must be made, and prohibits the making of separate rates by the separate bodies of churchwardens and overseers, as has been, according to the custom stated in this return, done within this borough. I think this return to the mandamus bad."

Only one rate for the whole, though a custom for two.

Distinct rates may now be made where borough and parish have had separate assessments for sixty years.

But by 59 Geo. III. c. 95, separation of towns corporate or franchises from the parish in which they are situate shall be deemed lawful in case it shall appear that such separation has not commenced within sixty years before the passing of that act.

Publication.

Notice to be given on the Sunday next after allowance.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 1, the churchwardens and overseers or other persons authorised to take care of the poor, shall give or cause to be given public notice in the church of every rate for the relief of the poor allowed by the justices, the next Sunday after such allowance; and no rate shall be esteemed or reputed valid and sufficient so as to collect or raise the same, unless such notice shall have been given.

Notice not to be read in the church, &c., but affixed at the doors.

The mode of giving this notice was altered by the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vic. c. 45, which recited that by divers acts, relating (inter alia) to poor-rates, public notice was required in the church, and enacted, that from the 1st of January, 1838, all notices which by any law, statute, or custom, or otherwise, have been given in churches, or chapels, during or after divine service, shall be reduced into writing, and copies thereof, printed or written, shall previously to commencement of the divine service on the several days on which such notices have been heretofore given in the church or chapel, or at the door, be affixed on or near the doors of all the churches and chapels within such parish; and such notices when affixed shall be in lieu of the several notices heretofore given, and shall be valid to all purposes.

11. Form of Rate, Allowance, &c.

Reg. v. Marriot, 4 P. & D. 440; 12 A. & E. 779. On a rule for a mandamus to grant a warrant of distress for the amount of a poor-rate, it appeared that notice of the rate had been affixed on the door of the church of St. Andrew, Pershore, only, whereas the parish also contained five chapelries, each having a chapel of its own. The five chapelries had existed as far back as could be traced, and had been treated and reputed as distinct parishes, each making its own rates and maintaining its own poor separately, and they were altogether unconnected for parish purposes either with each other or the rest of the parish of St. Andrew. The rate in question was made at a vestry meeting for the residue of the parish, which residue also maintained its own poor separately from the five chapelries, and was itself a reputed parish, and the rate did not extend to any of the chapelries. Lord Denman. "The recent statute merely substitutes a written notice for the oral notice formerly required by 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 1, to be given 'in the church.' The notice is now to be affixed to the doors of all the churches or chapels within 'such parish or place.' In the place in question there is one church only, and notice has been given there." Rule absolute.

Where a parish has several districts, each having its own chapel, and separately maintaining its own poor, notice on the chapel door of that district alone for which the poor-rate is made is sufficient.

Reg. v. Whipp, 7 Jur. 193; 11 L. J. 64, M. C. By a lighting and watching act for Clitheroe, the overseers for the purpose of collecting, raising, and levying the rate for lighting and watching, are to proceed in the same manner as for levying money for the relief of the poor. In Clitheroe rates for the relief of the poor had been published, by affixing them to the door of the church of St. M. only, there being two other churches in the township:—Held, that since the passing of 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vic. cap. 45, notices with reference to the poor-rates ought to be affixed to the doors of all the churches in the place; and that this rate, having been published by affixing it to the door of the church of St. M. only, was bad.

The publication must be on all the churches in the township.

Rex v. Newcombe, 4 T. R. 368. On a mandamus to compel two justices to grant a warrant of distress to levy a poor-rate, it appeared that the rate was not published till the third Sunday after it was allowed. The rate had been confirmed on appeal. Lord Kenyon. "This application is answered by the act of parliament, which requires a particular step to be taken before the rate can be 'valid;' namely, that public notice shall be given of the rate in the church on the next Sunday after it is allowed: that direction was not pursued in this case, and consequently the rate itself is invalid. Suppose the parish officers were to give notice of the rate at some other public place in the parish, it would not be sufficient, though it might be equally notorious. What is said in Hutchin v. Chambers (1 Burr. 579; 2 Ld. Keny. 204), is perfectly right, as applied to the inequality of the rate. But this is a radical defect in the rate itself, which nothing can cure." Buller and Grose, Js. concurred.

Want of publication renders the rate invalid.

Sibbald v. Roderick, 3 P. & D. 106; 11 A. & E. 38. In replevin, the defendants avowed for a distress as overseers for a poor-rate. The plaintiff was rated for tithes in several rates, but it appeared on the face of the rates that they had been published on Sundays, which were not the Sundays following after they had been respectively allowed; and Gurney, B., held the rate was invalid, and that as the distress and demand had been for one gross sum, the distress was illegal; and a verdict was entered for the plaintiff, and a motion was made to enter a verdict for defendant. Cur. adv. vult.—Lord Denman stated that the court was of opinion that the ruling of the learned baron was correct, and that, as any rate of which notice had not been duly given was invalid, the objection taken at the trial must prevail. Rule refused.

Same point.

In Bennett v. Edwards (see post, 328), in giving judgment, Bayley, J. observed, "It is said that there was no proper publication in church, because the notice did not state that the rate had been allowed, but merely that it would be collected forthwith. Now the act requires no such publication in words. All that it requires is, 'that the churchwardens and overseers, or other persons authorised to take care of the poor in every parish, township, &c., shall give or cause to be given public notice in church of every rate for the relief of the poor allowed by the justices of the peace the next Sunday after the same shall have been so allowed; and that no rate shall be reputed valid and sufficient, so as to collect and raise the same, unless such notice shall have been given.' It does not say that notice shall be given 'that the rate has been allowed,' but 'of every rate allowed.' This has been done here. It must have been in fact allowed, or the publication would be useless. A notice that a rate is about to be collected ex necessitate implies that it has been allowed."

12. Of Inspection of the rate.

Inhabitants may inspect the rate and have copies.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 2, it is enacted, "That the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or other persons authorised as aforesaid (i. e. to take care of the poor) in every parish, township, or place, shall permit all and every the inhabitants of the said parish, township, or place, to inspect every such rate at all seasonable times, paying one shilling for the same, and shall upon demand forthwith give copies of the same or any part thereof to any inhabitant of the said parish, township, or place, paying at the rate of 6*d.* for every twenty-four names."

Penalty for refusal

By s. 3 it is enacted, "That if any churchwarden or overseer of the poor, or other person authorised as aforesaid, shall not permit any inhabitant or parishioner to inspect the said rates, or shall refuse or neglect to give copies thereof as aforesaid, such churchwarden or overseer, or other person authorised as aforesaid, for every such offence shall forfeit and pay to the party aggrieved the sum of 20*l.* to be sued for and recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's courts of record, wherein no essoin, protection, or wager of law, or more than one imparlance, shall be allowed. See also, 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 13, 14, 15, post.

Rules of commissioners may be inspected, and copies taken.

Every owner of property, his agent, or any rate-payer within any union, may inspect every rule or order issued for the union by the commissioners. The inspection is to be free of any charge. Copies are to be furnished at the rate of 3*d.* for every folio, and copies may be taken by paying 1½*d.* for each folio. 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 78, s. 18.

The demand to inspect the rate must be made at a reasonable time and place by an inhabitant who is aggrieved.

Spencely v. Robinson, 3 B. & C. 658; 5 D. & Ryl. 572; 2 D. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 551. In an action on the statute it appeared that the plaintiff was an inhabitant of Coxwould, and the defendant overseer. The rate in question was published on the 28th of March. About eight o'clock of the 19th of April, the plaintiff sent his son to the defendant, to request that he would come to him at his (plaintiff's) house. The defendant went and saw the plaintiff and his attorney; the plaintiff asked the defendant to allow him to inspect the rate, and tendered him one shilling. The defendant said that he durst not allow it; he was ordered not to do it. The plaintiff's attorney then asked him for a copy of the rate. The defendant then went away and related what had taken place to Mr. Newton, a magistrate, and stated that he had not shown the rate, because he was informed that he was not obliged to show it. Mr. Newton told him that he was, and pointed out the clause, and advised him to go back immediately and show the plaintiff the rate, and take a copy of it next morning as early as possible to the attorney. The defendant did return to the plaintiff's house, in about two hours after the inspection of the rate had been demanded, and offered to show him the rate, and the defendant made out a copy that night and delivered it to the plaintiff's attorney early the following morning. The latter said that it was too late, for the plaintiff could not appeal to the next sessions. The defendant said that he would waive all objection to the notice. The defendant, on the 17th of April, had met the plaintiff's attorney in Helmsley market, which is about eight miles from Coxwould, and he then asked him if he had a copy of the rate, for he was employed by the plaintiff, and wished to see one. The defendant said that he should have one if he was entitled to it, and the attorney replied that he should be at Coxwould on Monday the 19th, and should expect to have one. Bayley, J., told the jury, that although there was a refusal at one time to permit an inspection of the rate, the question was, whether that refusal was not done away with by what subsequently took place, the defendant, within two hours after the refusal, having offered to allow the plaintiff to inspect the rate, and having delivered a copy to the plaintiff's attorney early next morning; a party was bound to give an overseer a reasonable time to do what the law required; and that, if the jury thought that the defendant had complied with the demand in a reasonable time, the defendant was entitled to a verdict. The jury found a verdict for the defendant. On a motion for a new trial it was urged, that as permission to inspect the rate had been once refused, a right of action vested in the plaintiff. Abbott, C. J. "My doubt in this case has been, not whether the learned judge left the proper question to the jury, but whether he ought to have left any question at all to the jury. I think that the plaintiff ought to have been non-suited." After reciting sect. 2, he added, "The person, therefore, to whom an inspection is to be allowed, or a copy to be given, must be an inhabitant. The defendant, therefore, was not bound to attend to the request made by the attorney of the plaintiff on the 17th." His lordship here read the next clause, sect. 3, and said, "The latter words plainly import that the penalty is to be given to the person who has sustained an injury by the act of the overseer. Now here the plaintiff sustained no injury, for he was not deprived of his appeal by what took place, as it might have been entered at the next sessions, and the justices had power to adjourn it to a subsequent sessions. The question left to the jury was, whether the defendant had, within a reasonable time, complied with the request of the plaintiff to be permitted to inspect the rate, or to have a copy? Before any right of action could vest in the plaintiff, by reason of the defendant's not permitting him to inspect the rate, a request must have been made for such permission at a reasonable time and place. The house of the overseer, where he may be fairly supposed to keep the rate-book, must be the reasonable place for making such a request or demand. Now, in this case, the overseer, without having any notice that the rate-book is required, is desired to come to the plaintiff's house, and the demand to inspect the rate-book is made at a place where it was known he could not have the book with him. That was an unreasonable place for making the request. I think, therefore, that there was, in this case, no legal request or demand to inspect the rate-book. Then, as to the copy of the rate, assuming that the demand of a copy, made by the solicitor in the presence of the plaintiff, was a demand by the latter, the defendant was entitled to a reasonable time to comply with that demand. For although the statute requires the overseer to furnish the copy forthwith, that word must receive a reasonable construction, so as to give the overseer an opportunity of making the copy required. Here the copy was made during the night, and delivered the following morning. That demand was complied with in a reasonable time, and therefore the plaintiff ought to have been nonsuited." Holroyd, J. "I think that the demand to inspect the rate was not sufficient, because it was not made at a reasonable time and place. I think, also, that the plaintiff was not a party grieved, because he did not sustain any injury by the refusal to allow him to inspect the rate. The being an inhabitant does not make him a party grieved. It has been held, under the Bankrupt Laws, that unless the party be a creditor, he is not a party grieved, within the meaning of those statutes."

Bennett v. Edwards, 7 B. & C. 586; 1 M. & R. 482. In a similar action against an assistant-overseer, it appeared that the plaintiff and his attorney, Steele, required of the defendant to see the rates, but tendered no fee to the defendant for showing them. On a subsequent day they went together to the defendant's house; the defendant met them in the yard, close to the door. Steele said, "It is intimated to Mr. Bennett (the plaintiff), that the reason you refused to show the accounts was because the proper fees were not tendered. I hope you will take the money and let us see the rate." The defendant then said, "I cannot; I have the books, but I have orders not to show them;" and a moment afterwards added, "Bennett may see them by going to the vestry," (explaining, upon inquiry, that he meant the select vestry, who had consented to meet at short notice, should the plaintiff apply for inspection of the rate and accounts). The plaintiff then tendered 1*s.* 6*d.* and said he demanded inspection of the poor-rate; and the defendant said he had orders not to show them. A rate was allowed on the 17th May, 1827, and published in church on the 20th, in the form following: "This is to give notice, that a rate or assessment of one shilling in the pound will be collected forthwith." The next preceding rate had been made the 8th December, 1826, and published on the 24th. The action was brought before June 15th, so that no sessions intervened between the time of the refusal and the commencement of the suit. The plaintiff was nonsuited; and on a motion for a new trial, Bayley, J. said, "In the course of the argument six questions have been presented, on one only of which we have felt any doubt. First, the presence of the attorney has been made an objection to the mode of making the demand; and it is said, that, not being a parishioner, he and the plaintiff improperly required the defendant to give them inspection. But it appeared that the attorney had explained to the defendant that he asked for inspection on behalf of Mr. Bennett, his client; and although by the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 2 and 3, an inhabitant alone is entitled to inspect the rate, yet his attorney, or any other person, may go with him to make the demand; or in case of an improper refusal, how can the demand be proved? Secondly, I think the plaintiff was a party aggrieved. Here the plaintiff had a right to see the rate, in order to satisfy himself whether he was fairly dealt with, and whether other parties were assessed at all, or to the full value, or whether he was overrated; and this inspection was wrongfully denied him. Fourthly, the objection that there was not a sufficient demand, is answered by the fact that the plaintiff asked for the rate. There was no rate in esse at the time of such demand except this, which was published in church on the 20th of May, and demand was made on the 23rd. Fifthly, it is said that the refusal was not absolute, because the books were offered to be produced at the vestry. But if a party entrusted with the rate has no right to insist on terms, then a refusal qualified by such terms as he has no right to insist on, is an unlawful refusal; and he thereby commits the offence of not permitting the parishioners to inspect the rate, within the words of this act of parliament. The remaining question on which we doubt is, whether the defendant, as assistant-overseer, be liable within the act of parliament. We all think that this rule ought not to be made absolute for entering a verdict for the plaintiff. For if we decide that an assistant-overseer may be liable to the penalty imposed by the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 3, it will still be a question of fact whether the defendant was such an assistant-overseer. If it was part of his duty to produce the rate, the plaintiff will be entitled to a verdict. But if that was no part of his duty, there ought to be a nonsuit. Assuming, therefore, that we should be of opinion that an assistant-overseer (whose duty it is to produce the rate) is an overseer within the meaning of the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 3, it will still be a question for the jury, whether the defendant was such an overseer." Holroyd, J. "The law knows what an overseer is, but it does not know what is an assistant-overseer. He may be appointed generally to do all the business of an overseer, as a deputy, or only to keep the accounts, or perform other particular business. If it were his duty to do all the acts which an overseer is bound to do, then he ought to have produced the rate. A jury must decide this by ascertaining the nature of his duty." Cur. adv. vult.—Bayley, J. "The question reserved for our consideration was, whether this action was maintainable against an assistant-overseer. The select vestry are to determine and specify the duties to be performed by the assistant-overseer. It did not appear upon the trial what duties the defendant was liable to perform. He may be liable to perform all or only some of the duties of overseer. It must depend on the nature of his appointment, therefore, whether it was part of his duty to exhibit the rate to the plaintiff in this case. There having been no evidence to show that it was his duty, as assistant-overseer, to produce the rate, the case must go down to another jury, in order that the nature of his duties may be ascertained." At the second trial, in addition to the former evidence, it appeared that the plaintiff had given the defendant notice to produce his appointment to the office of assistant-overseer; but he refused to produce it. Parke, J. left it to the jury to infer, from the conduct of the defendant when the rate was demanded of him, and from the fact of the non-production of his appointment, that it was part of his duty, as assistant-overseer, to produce the rate. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff on those counts which charged the defendant as assistant-overseer. Upon a motion in arrest of judgment (8 B. & C. 702; 2 M. & R. 482), Bayley, J. said, "I agree that he is not a person authorised to take care of the poor within the meaning of the statute. Neither is he a churchwarden. Is he then an overseer? Certainly not for all purposes, but for this I think he is. The 59 Geo. III. authorises the appointment of assistant-overseers, and every person so appointed is authorised to execute all such of the duties of overseer as shall in the warrant of his appointment be expressed. And therefore it is not sufficient to aver that the defendant was assistant-overseer; but that must be stated which expressly, or by necessary implication, shows that he was an assistant-overseer with the duty in question cast upon him. If the duty of keeping the parish books and rates is imposed, I think the consequence follows that he must allow the inspection of them. If this were otherwise, the original overseer, when applied to for permission to inspect, might answer that he had them not: the assistant-overseer might say, that it was no part of his duty to exhibit them; and thus the 17 Geo. II. would be inoperative. I am, therefore, of opinion that when the duty of keeping the rate is imposed, the duty of allowing an inspection of it is imposed also." Littledale, J. "The duties of an assistant-overseer are certainly undefined, nor can we tell correctly what they are without seeing the warrant by which he is appointed. The rate-book might be delivered to him for the purpose of collecting the rate only; but then the plaintiff must have been nonsuited. We are, therefore, bound to presume after verdict that the defendant was proved to be such an assistant-overseer as made it his duty to produce the rate to the plaintiff, and in general we may presume that when a person has the custody of the parish books, he has them for lawful purposes for which they may be wanted." Parke, J. was of opinion that the declaration was sufficient to warrant a judgment for the plaintiff. "It is alleged that he, as such assistant-overseer, had the rate in his possession at the time it was demanded. According to Shreves v. Parker (1 T. R. 141), we must assume that it was delivered to him for some purpose connected with the duties of his office; and as those duties can only be some of the duties of the principal overseer, he would have the rate in the same way as the overseer himself. If so, it follows that he was bound to produce it when lawfully demanded, and is liable to a penalty for refusing to do so. If this were otherwise, the parishioners might be altogether deprived of the means of obtaining an inspection of the rate."

If defendant neglect, after notice, to produce his appointment on the trial, his duty may be inferred from his conduct.

The duty to allow inspection will be implied from the custody of the books.

On a writ of error the judgment was given by Tindal, C. J. "In the argument of this case two objections have been taken: first, that an assistant-overseer is not within the 17 Geo. II., which imposes the penalty; and secondly, assuming that he is within the statute, that he is not liable upon this record. We think neither of these objections can prevail. With respect to the first, the words of the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 3, are (his lordship read the clause). It is said, that an assistant-overseer does not come within either of these descriptions. It may be admitted that he is not a churchwarden or overseer, but whether he be or not a person authorised to take care of the poor will depend upon the nature of his appointment." The learned judge then read the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7 (ante, 36), under which he was appointed, and added, "It must, therefore, depend upon the words of his appointment whether an assistant-overseer be or be not a person authorised to take care of the poor; and if they are large enough to embrace all the authority of the superior officer, then undoubtedly he would be, within the meaning of the statute, 'a person authorised to take care of the poor,' and liable to the penalty. It would, indeed, be a narrow construction of this statute to confine its operation to such officers only as were then in existence. It is true that it could not at the time be intended to apply to assistant-overseers, because such officers were not then known; but the legislature having created an officer, who does come within the description of the statute, it would be a narrow construction of an act, which is not merely penal, but remedial, to say that such an officer was not within its operation. Still it is said, that upon this record the defendant is not brought within its operation. Now the declaration contains an allegation that the defendant is an assistant-overseer, which allegation could not be proved, except by the production of the appointment, or by giving secondary evidence of its contents. Without adverting to any other allegation, the judge who had the warrant of appointment before him, would direct the jury that the case was not within the statute, unless by the appointment the defendant had authority to take care of the poor. After verdict we must therefore assume that the authority of the defendant was such as would satisfy the description in the act. But the declaration further alleges, that the defendant was requested to produce the rate, and had it in his possession as such assistant-overseer. At all events, therefore, if by his appointment he had no general authority to take care of the poor, he had a limited authority, part of which was to have the custody of the books; because we cannot after verdict intend that he had the book in his possession, otherwise than in the execution of his duty. The question therefore is, whether, after verdict, it must not be intended that he was authorised to have the care of the poor, or that it was his duty to have the custody and possession of these books? and in either view of this case the declaration would be sufficient. If this declaration had contained an allegation that defendant had authority to take care of the poor, no doubt could exist; but as it is doubtful whether he had that, or a mere limited power, and as the judge must have directed the jury to find for the defendant, unless by his appointment he came within the description of the statute, we must after verdict intend that he had either a general authority to take care of the poor, or a limited authority to have the rightful custody of the books." The learned judge then distinguished the case from Rex v. Everett (8 B. & C. 114; 2 M. & R. 35), and affirmed the judgment. (3 Y. & J. 458; 6 Bing. 230; 3 M. & P. 749.)

Batchelor v. Hodges, 5 N. & M. 75; 4 A. & E. 592. The plaintiff was an inhabitant of Windsor, and the defendant the assistant-overseer. The declaration alleged that on 10th July, 1834, a rate was made for the relief of the poor, allowed and published, and that the plaintiff requested the defendant, as such assistant-overseer, to permit him to inspect the rate, and tendered the defendant 1*s.* for the same; and although the defendant, as such assistant-overseer, had the rate in his possession, yet he would not permit the plaintiff to inspect it. Whereby, &c. The second plea was, that at the time when the plaintiff requested, &c. he had no right to inspect the rate, the same not being a subsisting rate for the relief of the poor of the said parish; and also that the rate was an old rate, and that the time for appealing against such rate had expired. Lord Denman, C. J. "It appears to me that this declaration is perfectly good. The decision of the court in Spenceley v. Robinson introduced, in effect, a new term into the act of parliament. The ruling in that case as to the present point (viz. that he must be rated and actually aggrieved), was abandoned by general consent in the late case, in which the declaration was held good, although, as in Spenceley v. Robinson, it did not state that the plaintiff was a rated inhabitant, nor that he was aggrieved by the refusal of inspection. An inhabitant may be grieved by the very fact of not being upon the rate. Then upon the second point we have been referred to Bennett v. Edwards,

An inhabitant of the parish, being rated, is entitled to inspection.

It is sufficient to charge that the defendant had the rate in his possession as assistant-overseer.

The right of inspection is not limited to a subsisting rate.

But see Rex v. George, p. 334.

in which it was said that an assistant-overseer was not a person who, as a matter of course, was authorised to take care of the rates; and to Edwards v. Bennett (in error), in which the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas said, that the objection to the declaration on that ground must have prevailed on demurrer. He may possibly have meant on special demurrer. I cannot think that, at all events, it is more than that. It seems to me to be impossible to bring any person more distinctly within the purview of the act of parliament than this defendant, who, it appears, was assistant-overseer, and as such had custody of the rates. A refusal to produce the rate by the party thus possessing the means of withholding it, is the very mischief which the statute was intended to remedy." Littledale, J. "The second point appears to me to be decided by Bennett v. Edwards. With respect to the other point:—The plaintiff is within the words of the act of parliament, inasmuch as he is 'an inhabitant.' He may have an interest in seeing the rate, although not himself rated. He may desire to see whether he is rated or not, as there are some privileges connected with the being rated. The act of parliament says nothing about 'rated inhabitants:'—we have no right, therefore, to say that it is necessary that he should appear to be such." Williams, J. "I am of the same opinion. We have no right to import a term into the act of parliament. If the legislature had intended that none but rated inhabitants should have the right of inspection, the enactment should have been so expressed. If the plaintiff, as an inhabitant, had a right to inspect, and inspection was refused, he was a party aggrieved within the meaning of the act. With respect to the other point:—Here it appears, on the face of the declaration, that the defendant was assistant-overseer, and as such had the possession of the rate; and this, I think, brings him within the language of the act, which is very general." Coleridge, J. "I think that the defendant is quite right in giving up the second plea, as well as the others. There can be no doubt that, under this act of 17 Geo. II. c. 3, and 17 Geo. II. c. 38, the rule applies equally as well to old rates as to modern rates. The overseers are bound by the 13th section of the latter act to keep a book, wherein to enter attested copies of all rates and assessments; which book is to be carefully preserved in some public place, whereto all persons assessed or liable to be assessed may freely resort. There are two objections to the declaration. With respect to the first, we must look at the words of the statute. It would be extraordinary if a declaration in the words of the statute were held not to be good upon the face of it. Here it is in the words of the statute. As to the second objection:—We must look at the sections which give the right of inspection and impose the penalty. There are three sets of persons liable—churchwardens, overseers, or other persons authorised as aforesaid,—i. e. (by reference to the 1st section,) 'authorised to take care of the poor.' The very term 'assistant-overseer' of itself imports that he is a person 'authorised to take care of the poor.'" Judgment for the plaintiff.

To subject a person to this penalty he must not only have the custody of the rate, but have the care of the poor.

Whitchurch v. Chapman, 3 B. & Adol. 691. By a local act for certain incorporated parishes, guardians of the poor were appointed, and were authorised to appoint a clerk, and to make rates; and all poor-rates and books purporting to be rates made for the said parishes, and all papers relating to the settlement of the poor, were to be delivered by the churchwardens and overseers to the clerk of the guardians for the time being, who was to cause the same to be preserved and filed. The clerk to the guardians paid the casual and out-poor weekly, and transacted some other matters relating to the poor, and had the custody of the books. Lord Tenterden. "No persons are subject to the penalty imposed by 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 3, but churchwardens, overseers, or persons authorised to take care of the poor. The defendant was neither. The guardians were the persons so authorised. In Bennett v. Edwards (ante, 328), the defendant was assistant-overseer; the case therefore fell within the words of the act, and he appeared to be the only person who had possession of the rate." Littledale, J. "In Bennett v. Edwards, the defendant, who had the custody of the rate, was a person authorised to take care of the poor. Here, by the local act, the clerk of the guardians is to have the custody of the poor-rate, but the guardians are the persons who are authorised to take care of the poor, and the demand of inspection ought to have been made to them." Parke and Taunton, Js. concurred.

Mandamus may be issued to compel allowance of inspection of books, &c. although the time for appealing has elapsed; but the party applying should state some grounds.

Rex v. Clear, 4 B. & C. 899; 7 D. & R. 393. A rule was obtained for a mandamus to churchwardens, commanding them to permit J. P., a rated inhabitant of the parish, to inspect the accounts relating to the poor, for the years 1821, 1822, 1823, and 1824, at all reasonable times, paying, &c. as required by the act. Bayley, J. "The right of inspection given by the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, is not general, but for the remedy of the evils contemplated by the statute. The applicant should, therefore, have shown some ground for desiring to inspect the books; and for want of such statement I think that this rule must be discharged. It is no answer to the application, that in a subsequent clause a penalty is imposed; that is not given by way of compensation to the party grieved, but it is imposed for the relief of the poor, and to punish the offender." Holroyd, J. "In Com. Dig. Mandamus (A), it is stated that the writ of mandamus is granted to prevent failure of justice, and for the execution of the common law, or of a statute, or of the king's charter, but not as a private remedy to the party. The applicant not having stated the grounds upon which he desires to inspect the books, has not brought himself within that rule for granting a mandamus. His right as a parishioner is a mere private right, for which the court will not grant it. The penalty, indeed, is not such a specific legal remedy as would prevent our interference, but inasmuch as I think the party should have pointed out some public ground for the court to proceed upon, and has not done so, this rule must be discharged." Littledale, J. concurred.

There may be other reasons besides the right of appeal.

On an application for a mandamus in behalf of a rated parishioner, to allow him an inspection of the accounts of the expenditure of the parish moneys kept by guardians of the poor, appointed under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, Lord Tenterden, C. J. "We have no doubt that the party is entitled to inspect the books at a reasonable time. Assuming that he has no right to appeal, or that the time for appeal is gone by, he may have other good reasons for inspecting the books. He has a right to see what has been done." Rule absolute. (Rex v. Great Farringdon, 9 B. & C. 541.)

A churchwarden cannot sue the overseer for the penalties under this stat.

Wethered v. Calcutt, 10 L. J. 123; 6 Jurist, 487. In an action for penalties under 17 Geo. II. c. 3, it appeared that the plaintiff was churchwarden of Marlow, of which the defendant was overseer. The plaintiff applied to the defendant and offered him the requisite sum for a copy of the rate, and the defendant promised to let him have a copy, but did not do so; the defendant, however, had directed his attorney to make a copy for the plaintiff, but the plaintiff could not get it without the payment of 1*l.*, (the attorney said the defendant had so ordered him), and 5*s.* for the attorney's letter informing the plaintiff that the copy was ready for delivery on such payment. The plaintiff had paid his assessment. On rule for a nonsuit, Tindal, C. J. said, "The only question is, whether, upon the facts proved, the case is within the statute. I think the act uses the word 'inhabitant' in contradistinction to 'overseer' or 'churchwarden,' for if the rate were properly made, the churchwardens and overseers would have been present at the time of the making, and the legislature could not suppose that they would want to inspect the rate again. The object of the legislature was the protection of the inhabitants generally as against the makers of the rate. Has this plaintiff brought himself within that object and intent? I think not. It has been argued that the defendant virtually admits his liability; but it cannot be that if a man make a voluntary promise to perform an act which the law will not compel him to perform, he shall thereby render himself liable to a penalty. The action is wrongly conceived." Cresswell, J. "I am of the same opinion. The three sections of this act intend to provide a sufficient remedy, as set out in the preamble, and for the same persons. The first is a remedy, that churchwardens and overseers shall give public notice of every rate; the second, that they shall permit all the inhabitants of the parish to inspect the rate, and give copies of it if demanded; the third, that if they shall refuse or neglect to do either, they shall underlie the penalty. And the same class of persons is evidently intended in each section. Again, the churchwardens and overseers are supposed to be parties to the making of the rate. They have a much higher right, as far as the books are concerned, than the right of inspection: they have a right to the custody of the books. The statute could not, therefore, have contemplated them in these sections." Rule absolute for a nonsuit.

13. Relief from Rate in Cases of Poverty.

13. Relief from Rate by Justices, with Consent of Overseers, in Cases of Poverty.

13. Relief from Rate by Justices, with consent of Overseers, in case of Poverty.

By 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 11, it is enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace acting for the county, riding, division, or jurisdiction, in which any district, parish, township, or hamlet shall be situated, in petty sessions assembled, on application made to them by any person rated to any rates or cesses within any such district, township, parish, or hamlet, to be discharged therefrom, and proof of his or her inability, through poverty, to pay such rate or cess, with the consent of the churchwardens and overseers of such district, parish, township, or hamlet, or of such other person or persons as is or are competent to act, under the authority of any act or acts of parliament, for the ordering, management, control, or direction of the poor of any such district, parish, township, or hamlet, to order and direct that such person shall be excused from the payment of such rate or cess, and to strike out his or her name therefrom: and the sum at which such person was so rated in such rate or cess shall not hereafter be collected, or any person or persons charged therewith, or in any manner called or liable to account for the same, or for omitting to collect or receive the same."

Justices in petty sessions, with consent of parish officers, may discharge paupers from the payment of parish rates.

If the occupier is excused on account of poverty, the owner cannot be rated. (Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 5 D. & R. 359; 2 B. & C. 516.)

They cannot assess the owner.

14. Of Appeals to the Petty and General Sessions, and Remedies under Local Acts.

14. Of Appeals and Remedies under Local Acts.

A person aggrieved by a poor-rate may be relieved by appeal either to the petty or quarter sessions, and sometimes by application to local authorities, under particular statutes.

No appeal will lie unless it is given by statute. A party, therefore, cannot appeal for the purpose of trying if the rate was bonâ fide made for the purposes for which it professed to be made. (Reg. v. J. Middlesex, 8 Dowl. 103.

Appeal must be given by statute.

If the rate be a nullity, or the person charged be not rateable at all, he may then not only appeal, but also dispute his liability, when his goods have been distrained, in an action of trespass or replevin. (Milward v. Caffin, 2 Bla. Rep. 1336; Durant v. Boys, 6 T. R. 580.) But if there be anything legally due for poor-rate, or there has been a distress under several warrants, and one of them was valid, then neither trespass nor replevin lies, but only a special action on the case for an excessive levy. (1 Adol. & Ell. 264.) It is always safest to appeal.

When the rate is a nullity.

The rate is made under the authority of the 43 Eliz c. 2, and by s. 6 of that act it is provided, "That if any person or persons shall find themselves grieved with any cess, or tax, or other act done by the said churchwardens and other persons, or by the said justices of peace, that then it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace at their general quarter sessions, or the greater number of them, to take such order therein as to them shall be thought convenient, and the same to conclude and bind all the said parties."

The appeal clause in 43 Eliz.

17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, enacts, "That in case any person or persons shall find him, her, or themselves aggrieved by any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor, or shall have any material objection to any person or persons being put on or left out of such rate or assessment, or to the sum charged on any person or persons therein, or shall have any material objection to such account as aforesaid, or any part thereof, or shall find him, her, or themselves aggrieved by any neglect, act, or thing done or omitted by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or by any of his majesty's justices of the peace; it shall and may be lawful for such person or persons, in any of the cases aforesaid, giving reasonable notice to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place, to appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, division, corporation, or franchise where such parish, township or place lies; and the justices of the peace there assembled are hereby authorised and required to receive such appeal, and to hear and finally determine the same; but if it shall appear to the said justices that reasonable notice was not given, then they shall adjourn the said appeal to the next quarter sessions, and then and there finally hear and determine the

The right of appeal is given to persons who are aggrieved by the rate. A person omitted from a rate is not necessarily a person "aggrieved."

The simple fact of being left out of a poor-rate, where no improper motives are shown for making the omission, is no ground for an appeal.

Rex v. George, 6 A. & E. 305; 1 N. & P. 451. J. George appealed against a poor-rate for St. Giles, in the isle of Ely, on the ground that he was not rated for the house he occupied. The sessions confirmed the rate. Case:—The house of the appellant had been rated during the occupancy of a former tenant, and up to the time when it ceased to be occupied, at 6*l.* per annum, but the last rate was not paid. It had been unoccupied for a short time. On account of the difficulty of obtaining payment of the rates, it was not afterwards rated. The appellant had then become the occupier, and expressed his willingness to be rated, and had requested the parish officers to rate him, but they had not done so. The parish officers have not of late rated similar houses, on account of the difficulty of obtaining the rates. The defendant cited in his favour the observation of Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Uffculine, 2 Const. 235, who said, "The 17 Geo. II. says, 'that where there is a franchise to be enjoyed, a man shall not be deprived of his franchise;" and he further argued that a party omitted might lose his right to vote under the Vestry Act, 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 60. Lord Denman. "Must a rate of 6*d.* per annum be collected from a parishioner, if the parish can levy enough without descending so low? The question cannot be affected by a privilege being incident to the being rated. Lord Mansfield seems to speak merely of the object of the act, not of its effect. And there is no personal injury." The defendant urged that the statute did not limit his right to a pecuniary injury. Lord Denman. "The power to rate an occupier does not impose a duty towards the occupier, though certain rights may result to him from the power being exercised. A rate might be sufficient which could not reach the party. If every one is to be rated, however small the rate to be imposed on him, the expense of collecting might be greater than the profit." Williams, J. concurred. Coleridge, J. "I cannot say that the simple omission is a grievance, or that any particular grievance is shown here; therefore the right of appeal does not arise." Order confirmed. See Batchelor v. Hodges, p. 330-1.

Appeal against a rate on a rent charge.

The same privilege of appeal against a rate made on a rent-charge is given to the owner as to the occupier. Sect. 70 of 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71.

Several having a joint grievance may join in a notice of appeal.

In Rex v. Sussex, 15 East, 206, it was objected that the appellants should have given separate notices. But on Rex v. White being quoted, Lord Ellenborough said, "he thought that that case, which had been much considered, was authority sufficient to support the present appeal."

There may be one appeal against several rates.

Rex v. Justices of Suffolk, 1 B. & Ald. 640. This was an appeal against four distinct rates, and it was urged that it was not competent for the appellant to do this. Bayley, J. "The act which gives the appeal states that a party who may find himself unequally taxed or assessed may appeal against any such rate. It does not say that he must appeal against that rate per se without joining it with the others, which, being monthly, may have been made in the interval between one sessions and the next. The joint appeal may be then considered as a separate appeal against each rate, and if the sessions should be of opinion that injustice would be done by hearing the appeal against the four rates jointly, they might determine upon them separately; but they are not bound to do so. The party therefore, may legally appeal against the poor-rates in the manner adopted by him in the present case. (a)

14. Of Appeal &c. under Local Acts.

Rex v. The Justices of London, 15 East, 632. An appeal against a poor's-rate in London or Middlesex must be made, as in all other counties, to the next practicable general quarter sessions; though the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, in its terms gives the appeal to the next general or quarter sessions; it appearing from other parts of the act as well as from other acts in pari materiâ, that those terms are used synonymously, and though in the two counties named there are four general as well as four general quarter sessions.

Meaning of "general" or "quarter" sessions.

The following are some of the remedies provided by local acts:—

Under local acts.

Rex v. Justices of Kent, 9 B. & C. 283. By a local act, the management of the poor of Greenwich was vested in the churchwardens, overseers, governors and directors of the poor, and an appeal to them was given to any person thinking himself aggrieved by any thing to be done by virtue of the act, and if the appellant should be dissatisfied with their determination, then an appeal was given unto the quarter sessions. A parishioner applied for relief against a rate to the churchwardens, overseers, governors, and directors, upon which, at a meeting regularly held, a resolution was moved, seconded, and carried, that no further notice of this application should be taken; against which resolution he appealed to the sessions. Lord Tenterden, "In this case a rate was made for a sum of money ordered to be paid out of that rate to S. (the vestry clerk). The appellant objected to that payment, and applied for relief under the local act to the churchwardens, overseers, governors, and directors assembled at a meeting on the 16th of July. They resolved that they would take no notice of his application for relief: they refused, in fact, to hear the appeal at all. The proper course under those circumstances would have been to have applied to this court for a mandamus to compel them to hear his appeal. If they had heard it, and come to a determination upon it, and he had been dissatisfied with that determination, he might then have appealed to the quarter sessions. In Rex v. Tucker (3 B. & C. 544; 5 D. & R. 434), the justices at petty sessions heard the evidence and dismissed the appeal."

If the act directs the appeal to commissioners in first instance, that course must be pursued.

Rex v. St. James, Westminster, 1 Ad. & El. 241; 4 N. & M. 252. By a local act for the relief of the poor in St. James, Westminster, it was provided that if any person should find himself aggrieved by any rate, he shall first apply to two justices, and if not relieved, shall be obliged to pay such rate, and then upon an appeal to the quarter sessions next after payment of such rate, the sessions may cause so much money to be returned as shall appear to the justices to have been overpaid, and to make such order as they think fit, which order was to be conclusive. The Earl of Burlington under this provision applied to two justices, who examined witnesses as to the value of the premises, and made an order (b) for the reduction of the rate. A rule was obtained to quash this order for insufficiency, and after argument, Lord Denman said, "The clause in question is an extraordinary one, and I should recommend the parish to have it made clear as soon as possible. I have a difficulty in inferring any authority in the justices to act upon an occasion of this kind from the words, 'if not relieved.' Still it must have been intended to give some power; and if so, what is that power? It can only be to relieve the individual, and that is by amending the rate as far as it applies to him; and such amendment can be grounded only on an opinion formed by them that the party had been incorrectly rated. The objection here taken is not to what they have done, but to the reason they have given. They have said that they thought the principle of the rate erroneous, but that is immaterial. They had no authority to quash the rate; their power was only to amend it so far as it affected the individual; and I cannot say that they should not have acted to that extent, because they have at the same time declared that they thought the rate erroneous in principle. (a) It may be so, and yet the error in principle may not affect any other person in the parish. If others were prejudiced by the amendment, the same remedy was open to them as to Lord Burlington. The justices have relieved a party whom they thought to be overrated; whether they thought so for good reasons or bad, or more or less extensive in effect, is, in my opinion, immaterial." Taunton, J. "In my own opinion it follows by necessary implication from the words used, that the justices have authority to relieve, and consequently to form their conclusion as to granting relief in the way that appears to them most effectual." Patteson, J. "I certainly feel myself hampered by the words of this act: if, however, it is at variance with the general law of appeals, we cannot help that." The learned judge then quoted the clause as above, and added, "I cannot understand that the legislature should do so absurd a thing as to direct an application to justices, and then oblige the justices to say to the persons applying, 'We have no power to relieve you, therefore you must go to the sessions.' As the party aggrieved cannot by this clause go to the sessions till after he has applied to the justices, it must have been meant that they should have power to hear the complaint and to relieve upon it. It is extraordinary that no power is given to administer an oath; and the justices have acted wisely and properly in not administering one. I think, however, we must take it by implication that the justices have power to deal with the complaint made by any person under it to any extent that may be necessary." The same judge observed during the argument, "It appears strange that this act gives the parish no appeal where the justices decide unfavourably to them." Williams, J. concurred.

By the local act of St. James, Westminster, two justices have the power to relieve.

(a) Three defendants, convicted of unlawful fishing, on a joint hearing may join in a notice of appeal, although three separate convictions were returned to the sessions. Reg. v. J. Oxfordshire, 12 L. J. 40, M. C.

Sudbury act gives an appeal, first to the borough sessions, and then to the county.

Rex v. Justices of Suffolk, 1 B. & Ald. 640. By a local act relating to the poor of Sudbury, power was given to make a rate; and an appeal might be made against it, "first, to the justices of the peace of the town of Sudbury at their general quarter sessions next after the making and demanding the same, or at any other sessions to be held for the said town." A further appeal was given against the order of the justices of the town at their sessions, to the justices of the county at the general quarter sessions. At the January sessions for the town, the appellant instituted his appeal against four rates, made respectively on 17th September, 19th October, 16th November, and 14th December preceding. The borough sessions determined against him, and he appealed to the county sessions. Bayley, J. "The true construction of the clause is this: the legislature alluded to the general sessions which might be holden within the borough, and which might happen before the quarter sessions, not depending on that act of parliament by which the latter are regulated: the clause means that the party may appeal either to the quarter sessions or to the general sessions next after the rate, as the case may be. I think the appeal as to the first rate was clearly out of time."

Parochial assessment act.

Justices acting in petty sessions to hold four special sessions in the year to hear appeals against poor-rates, for inequality, or unfairness.

A more speedy remedy against a rate has been provided by the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, which enacts, by s. 6, that the justices acting in and for every petty sessions division shall four times at least in every year hold a special sessions for hearing appeals against the rates of the several parishes within their respective divisions, and shall cause public notice of the time and place when and where such special sessions will be holden to be affixed to or near to the door of the parish church of the said parishes, twenty-eight days at the least before the holding of the same; and such special sessions shall and may be adjourned from time to time by the justices there present as they may think fit; and at such special or adjourned sessions the justices there present shall hear and determine all objections to any such rate on the ground of inequality, unfairness, or incorrectness in the valuation of any hereditaments included therein, which decision shall be binding and conclusive on the parties, unless the person or persons impugning such decision shall within fourteen days after the same shall have been made, cause notice to be given in writing of his, her, or their intention of appealing against such decision, and of the matter or cause of such appeal, to the person or persons in whose favour such decision shall have been made, and within five days after giving such notice shall enter into a recognisance before some justice of the peace, with sufficient securities, conditioned to try such appeal at the then next general sessions or quarter sessions of the peace which shall first happen, and to abide the order of and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the justices at such quarter sessions, or any adjournment thereof; and such justices, upon hearing and finally determining such matter of appeal, shall and may, according to their discretion, award such costs to the party or parties appealing or appealed against as they shall think proper, and their determination in or concerning the premises shall be conclusive and binding on all parties, to all intents and purposes whatsoever: provided always, that no such objection shall be inquired into by the said justices in special session unless notice of such objection in writing under the hand of the complainant shall have been given, seven days at least before the day appointed for such special session, to the collector, overseers, or other persons by whom such rate was made; provided also, that the said justices in special sessions shall not be authorised to inquire into the liability of any hereditaments to be rated, but only into the true value thereof and into the fairness of the amount at which the same shall have been rated. And by s. 7, that the justices present at any such special or adjourned session shall, for the aforesaid purpose, have all the powers of amending or quashing any such rate so objected to of any parish or other district within their division, and likewise of awarding costs to be paid by or to any of the parties, and of recovering such costs, which any court of quarter sessions of the peace has upon appeals from any such rate, except as herein excepted: provided always, that no order of the said justices shall be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster: provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to deprive any person or persons of the right to appeal against any rate to any court of general or quarter sessions: provided also, that no order of the said justices in special session shall be of any force pending any appeal touching the same subject-matter to the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace having jurisdiction to try such appeal, or in opposition to the order of any such court upon such appeal.

Seven days' notice to be given of objections.

Justices may act with all the powers of justices in quarter sessions.

It is sufficient if the recognisances required by the sixth section be within the five days verbally acknowledged before a justice, the record of the recognisance may be perfected afterward from the minute then made. (Reg. v. J. St. Albans, 8 A. & E. 932.)

A verbal acknowledgment of the recognisance is sufficient.

Where the parish is not within any borough, the appeal must be to the county sessions.

Appeal to county justices.

Where the parish in which the rate is made is situated within a borough, the appeal, under certain circumstances, may be made to the justices of the borough. By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, the justices and sessions of boroughs have power over appeals against rates, made for places within the borough, exclusive of the county. (Rex v. St. Mary Taunton, 1 Bott, 282.) But their jurisdiction is modified by the 17 Geo. II. c 38, s. 5, which provides in all corporations or franchises which have not four justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons in any of the cases aforesaid, where an appeal is given by this act, to appeal, if he or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division wherein such corporation or franchise is situate.

To borough justices.

Under 17 Geo. II. c. 38.

And by 1 Geo. IV. c. 36, it is enacted that "in all corporations and franchises not having more than six justices of the peace, nor having jurisdiction or authority over two or more whole parishes or wards contained within such corporation or franchise, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, in any of the cases mentioned or referred to by the said act or acts, or either of them, where an appeal is given by the said act or acts, or either of them, to appeal, if he, she, or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding or division wherein such corporation or franchise is situate, in as ample manner as if such corporation or franchise had not four justices of the peace: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken to extend to any city or town corporate being a county of itself."

Justices of the county have jurisdiction in boroughs to which no grant of quarter sessions made; but the borough, not the county justices, where such sessions are granted.

By s. 111 of the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76), it is enacted that after May, 1836, the justices of the county in which any borough is situate, to which a grant of quarter sessions shall not have been made, "shall exercise the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in and for such borough, as fully as by law they and each of them can or ought to do in and for the said county; and no part of any borough, in and for which a separate court of quarter sessions of the peace shall be holden, shall be within the jurisdiction of the justices of any county from which such borough was exempt before the passing of that act." (See Reg. v. Bridgwater, p. 339.)

Where corporation justices consist of a greater number than four an appeal lies to them at sessions against a poor rate, although there be less than four who are not interested in the question.

Rex v. Justices of Essex, 5 M. & Sel. 513. Upon a rule for a mandamus to receive an appeal against a poor's-rate for the parish of Saffron Walden, the case was, the town and parish of Saffron Walden are co-extensive. The town is a town corporate, and by the charter the mayor during his mayoralty and for one year next ensuing, the recorder and the deputy recorder, and the two senior aldermen (making together six), are constituted justices. The corporation have held a court of quarter sessions from the date of their charter. The mayor is elected from the aldermen, and the aldermen from the inhabitants, and, except the recorder and deputy recorder, the justices composing the court of quarter sessions must be resident in the parish of Saffron Walden. The appellants gave notice, and (among others) to the mayor and recorder, as being two of the persons in respect of whom they were overrated: and the other town justices, except the deputy recorder, were also rated in the said assessment. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Of the six corporation justices, consisting of the recorder, the deputy-recorder, two senior aldermen, and two other persons, it was contended that the last four were disqualified by law from sitting upon any appeal in any matter respecting the poor-laws, as being in respect of their inhabitancy and liability to be rated within the borough, on that account incompetent, and that these being judicial acts, as persons interested, they were, in the language of one of the cases cited, tacitly excepted. And the case of Greate Charte and Kennington (2 Str. 1173), and of Foxam Tything, in Com. Wilts (2 Salk. 607), were relied on to this effect; but upon looking into the 43 Eliz. c. 1, 16 Geo. II. c. 18, and 17 Geo. II. c. 38, we are of opinion that the justices of the borough of Saffron Walden are not disqualified from sitting as a court of appeal under the poor-laws, on the ground of their being rated or chargeable with the rates of the place within which their jurisdiction is to be exercised. By stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, as head officers of the town corporate, they, being justices of the peace, have the same authority within the limits and precincts of their jurisdiction, as is limited, prescribed, and appointed by that act to justices of the peace of the county, 'and no other justices of the peace are to enter or meddle there.' Being invested with the like jurisdiction, both original and appellate, on the subject of the poor-laws with justices of the county, and with the sort of ne intromittant provision in their favour as to its exercise which I have last stated, there occurred in Mich. term, 16 Geo. II., the case in 2 Str. 1173, in which it was held that a justice could not join in removing a pauper from his own parish. This decision in its letter, if it should continue to be acted upon as a general rule of law, would have wholly disabled the justices of a great many towns corporate from acting in the execution of the poor-laws, both in an original and in an appellate character, as justices in respect to the same; and it is fair to presume, from the very nearly contemporary date of the stat. 16 Geo. II. c. 18, with this decision, that this act was introduced to obviate this inconvenience; for reciting, 'that doubts had arisen whether, according to the laws and statutes then in force, his Majesty's justices of the peace might lawfully act in any case relating to the parishes and places to the rates and taxes of which such justices respectively are rated or chargeable,' it enacts, 'that it shall and may be lawful to and for all and every justice or justices of the peace for any county, riding, city, liberty, franchise, borough, or town corporate, within their respective jurisdictions, to make, do, and execute all and every act or acts, matter or matters, thing or things appertaining to their office as justice or justices of the peace, so far as the same relates to the laws for the relief, maintenance, and settlement of poor persons, or to any other laws concerning parochial taxes, levies, or rates, notwithstanding any such justice or justices of the peace is or are rated to or chargeable with the taxes, levies, or rates within any such parish, township, or place, affected by any such act or acts of such justice or justices as aforesaid.' However, inasmuch as from the greatness of the number of justices of the peace for counties, the attendance of any particular justice could be spared upon appeals, it provides 'that that act, or anything therein contained, should not authorise or empower any justice or justices of the peace for any county or riding at large, to act in the determination of any appeal to the quarter sessions for any such county or riding, from any order, matter, or thing relating to any such parish, township, or place where such justice or justices of the peace is or are so charged, taxed, or chargeable as aforesaid; anything therein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.' Here it will be observed, that 'justices of the peace for cities, liberties, franchises, boroughs, or towns corporate,' who are all included by name in the enabling clause of this statute, are not included in this prohibitory provision in the case of appeals, which prohibition is confined expressly to justices of the peace for counties and ridings at large only. The stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 5, probably adverting to and meaning to obviate the danger of admitting justices, under any bias or interest in the subject-matter of the appeal, to sit upon such appeals, where from the smallness of the number of the attending justices, such bias or interest shall be likely to operate with prejudicial effect upon the administration of justice, provides, 'that in all corporations and franchises, which have not four justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, in any of the cases aforesaid, where an appeal is given by this act, to appeal, if he or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division, wherein such corporation or franchise is situate;' where the corporation justices consisted of a larger number of persons than four, thinking it probably unnecessary to interfere with the exclusive jurisdiction on this subject, which they derived under stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, which has already been observed upon. We are therefore, upon a view of the provisions of the several statutes referred to on this subject, and adverting to their policy and object, of opinion that the legislature meant, in the case of borough justices (where the whole number of them was four or more), as in the present case, to leave their jurisdiction under 43 Eliz. entire, not curtailed or abridged, from suspicions of possible abuse: a liberal confidence on the part of the legislature, which ought to be repaid by the most perfect impartiality and justice on the part of those to whom such a jurisdiction is under such circumstances entrusted." Rule discharged.

Justices may act, though they are rated.

An inhabitant in the outlying parts of the parish of Bridgwater may appeal against a poor's rate to the county sessions.

Reg. v. Bridgwater. 2 P. & D. 586, 10 A. & E. 711. The whole of the borough and parish of Bridgwater is within the county of Somerset. Bridgwater is a borough, having a recorder and court of quarter sessions, under 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76. Before the passing of that act the borough of Bridgwater had justices of its own, and a right to hold separate quarter sessions, but their charter had no non-intromittant clause. The ancient borough contained a part only of the parish, but the jurisdiction of the borough justices was co-extensive with the parish. The boundaries of the borough were altered by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, and the present boundaries exclude some parts of the parish of Bridgwater, and include several small parts of two adjoining parishes, namely, Hembdon and Durnleigh. Since, and under the authority of the municipal reform act, a separate court of quarter sessions has been granted to this borough, but the borough justices and the recorder have no jurisdiction beyond the limits of the borough. Before the municipal corporation act, the borough had only four justices, but at the time of this appeal there were seven justices for the borough, and it was then divided into two wards The appellant lives, and the whole of the land for which he is rated is situate in that part of the parish without the limits of the borough All the persons, the omission of whose stock in trade from the rate was objected to by the appellant, are inhabitants of that part of the parish which lies within the limits of the borough, and the whole of their stock in trade is within that part of the parish of Bridgwater which is within the borough The rate was allowed by two justices of the county of Somerset, and by three justices of the borough of Bridgwater The parts of the rate which applied to the inhabitants residing within the borough are distinct and separate from those parts which apply to the inhabitants residing without the borough, but the whole is only one rate The declaration, signed by the churchwardens and overseers, and the allowance by the justices, are at the foot of the whole rate It was objected, that the county quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal Lord Denman "Looking at the different acts on this subject, from the 43 Eliz down to the 1 Geo IV c 36, I think, in the case of a parish situate like the present, there was an appeal to the county sessions Then sect 111 of the municipal corporation act enacts, that no part of any borough which has a court of quarter sessions shall be within the jurisdiction of county justices, from which such borough was exempt before the passing of the act. Bridgwater, not being exempt, does not come within this provision, and therefore remains subject to this jurisdiction The boundary act (6 & 7 Will IV c 103) ought to have provided for the case of a parish situated like this, so as to have allowed the appeal for the entire parish to the borough sessions, which would be much more convenient, but, as it has not done so, we cannot supply the defect Patteson, J "The question turns entirely on the construction of section 111 The general point is a very curious one, for it may be that, in certain cases, where a parish is situated partly within a borough, and partly within a county, the latter part may have no right of appeal anywhere, and that it is a casus omissus under the 43 Eliz c 2 It is not however necessary to go into this point, as it does not arise in the present case, for here the whole parish, before the passing the 5 & 6 Will IV c. 76, was within the jurisdiction of the borough justices Up to the passing the 17 Geo II there can be no doubt on this head Nor did that statute make any difference because Bridgwater always had four justices But then came 1 Geo IV c 36, which gave a concurrent jurisdiction to the county justices, because Bridgwater had not more than six justices It must be conceded, therefore, that after that statute there might have been an appeal to the county as well as to the borough sessions The Municipal Corporation Act then takes away (sect 8) part of the parish from the borough, and gives it to the county, both as to locality and jurisdiction The question, therefore, arises, whether these circumstances bring themselves within the casus omissus alleged to exist on the 43 Eliz It is very extraordinary if the court should be obliged so to construe an act as to bring a parish within a casus omissus in which it ought never to have been placed, and we should certainly be very unwilling to adopt such a construction But it might be so, though no case has ever been decided upon the point Section 111 enacts, that no part of the borough shall be within the jurisdiction of county justices, if exempt before the passing of the act, and if Bridgwater had had more than six justices before that time, the point certainly would have arisen But here the whole of the parish had the opportunity of appealing to the county at large, and I see nothing in sect 111 to alter that power, but think it was intended to leave matters as to jurisdiction exactly in statu quo, and that, as an appeal, before passing the act, would lie from the whole parish to the county, so it will now No argument has been urged as to the existence of more than six justices at present, nor could there well be, because the functions of borough justices, under the existing corporation law, are totally different from what they were before the passing the act Williams, J "It is alleged here that the appellant is seeking to make an alteration in the state of things in a borough, with which he is wholly unconnected But at the time of passing the 5 & 6

Will. IV. c. 76, there was an appeal to the county sessions, and that statute has not altered the law in that respect. The appellant, therefore, is only using a power which he enjoyed before."

Amendment of Rate.

Amendment of rate under 41 Geo. III. c. 23.

Upon all appeals from any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor of any parish, township, vill, or place, the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace shall, and such court is hereby authorised and required (in all cases where they shall see just cause to give relief) to amend such rate or assessment, either by inserting therein or striking out the name or names of any person or persons, or by altering the sum or sums therein charged on any persons, or in any other manner which the said court shall think necessary for giving such relief, and without quashing or wholly setting aside such rate or assessment: provided always, that if the said court shall be of opinion that it is necessary, for the purpose of giving relief to the person or persons appealing, that the rate or assessment should be wholly quashed, then the said court may quash the same, but nevertheless, all and every the sum and sums of money in and by such rate or assessment charged on any person or persons, shall and may be levied and recovered by such ways and means, and in such and the same manner, as if no appeal had been made against such rate or assessment: and all and every the sum and sums of money which any person or persons charged in such rate or assessment shall pay, or which shall be levied upon or recovered from him, her, or them, shall be deemed and taken as payments on account of the next effective rate or rates, assessment or assessments, which shall be made for the relief of the poor of the same parish, township, vill, or place."

On appeal from any poor-rate, the sessions may insert or strike out names, or alter the sums.

Or if necessary for giving relief may quash it, but the sum to be paid and payments to be deemed on account of next rate.

In Rex v. Milton, (ante), an application was made to the Court of Queen's Bench, to amend the rate, but the court thought that the act was confined to the quarter sessions.

Queen's Bench has no such power.

The overseers have no power to refer the validity of a rate to arbitration, but the sessions may, it seems, "arrest the adjudication at sessions until the parties have had an opportunity of making a new valuation. Thorp v. Cole, 2 C. M. R. 367, & 1 M. & W. 531.

Rate cannot be referred.

Time of appealing.

Time of appealing.

Before some recent decisions, it had been thought necessary to enter and respite an appeal at the next practicable sessions, even though the order, &c., was served too late to give such notices as the sessions required for trying an appeal. However, a more sensible rule has now been adopted. And in Rex. v. Justices of Southampton; Rex v. Justices of Devon; and Rex v. Justices of Kent, 8 B. & C. 639, and in notes, it was determined that it was not necessary to enter and adjourn an appeal when there was not sufficient time to give the notice of trial required by the sessions. (a)

The next sessions means the next sessions at which it is practicable to try the appeal.

An appeal against a poor-rate must be made to the next sessions after the publication of the assessment, for it is by making the rate that the party is aggrieved. Rex v. Micklefield, 1 Bott, 113; Cald. 507.

In Rex v. Atkins, 4 T. R. 12, it appeared that the rate was made in October, 1789, and allowed in the November following, against which the defendant appealed to the next Easter sessions, when the appeal was dismissed with costs, because it was not made to the sessions next after the allowance. The court, without hearing any argument, confirmed the order of sessions, on the authority of Rex v. Penryn and Rex v. Micklefield.

Appeal must be to the next sessions after the allowance.

Rex v. The Justices of Sussex, 15 East, 206. On the 5th of October a rate was allowed, and on the following day (Sunday) it was published in the parish church of Horsham. The Michaelmas quarter sessions were holden at Petworth, on the 8th of October, there being only one intervening day between the publication of the rate and the quarter sessions, which was too short a time to inspect the rate, to see if the inequalities in the former rate had been continued, and whether the property omitted in former assessments had been inserted in the rate, so as to determine the deponent whether or not to appeal against it at the said sessions. The court determined the notice to be bad, and confirmed the rate. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., asked, "why the parish officers made their rate so close upon the time of the sessions; it appeared as if they had done it with a view of ousting the parties of their appeal. The court had decided that morning that the next sessions meant the next practicable sessions at which an effectual appeal could be lodged. If by the late publication of the rate the parties are driven into such a narrow point of time as not to be able to make an effectual appeal at the next sessions, those must be considered the next when such appeal can be made effectually."

One intervening day between the publication of a rate, and the next immediate quarter sessions, is not sufficient for an effectual notice of appeal.

Against what an appeal lies.

Rex v. Justices of Norwich, 3 D. & R. 42. By 10 Anne, the city of Norwich, and hamlets and liberties of the same, were incorporated for the purpose of better employing and maintaining the poor thereof; and the guardians thereby appointed were empowered from time to time to ascertain what aggregate sums would be necessary for that purpose, and to ascertain what proportion each parish, &c., should contribute, and then certify the same to the justices, two of whom were to issue their warrant, requiring the proper officers of each parish, &c., to rate and assess the amount on the respective inhabitants; and if any person, parish, &c., should be unequally assessed, he might appeal at the next sessions held after such assessment made and demanded. Under this act, the governors certified that the hamlet of L. ought to pay a certain proportion of an assessment made upon the whole city, and two justices issued their warrant, requiring the collectors of the hamlet to assess that sum upon the inhabitants; the hamlet being aggrieved by such assessment may appeal against both the certificate and the warrant thereon, as being an assessment made and demanded, within the meaning of the appeal clause in the statute.

Notice of Appeal.

A notice in writing of the grounds of appeal must be given to the overseers and to the parties interested in the event of such appeal.

Notice to be given to the churchwardens and overseers, stating grounds of appeal.

41 Geo. 3, c. 23, s. 4, enacted that "All notices of appeal from or against any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor, or from or against the account of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, township, vill, or place, shall be in writing, and shall be signed by the person or persons giving the same, or his, her, or their attorney on his, her, or their behalf; and such notices of appeal shall be delivered to or left at the places of abode of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, township, vill, or place, or any two of them, and the particular causes or grounds of appeal shall be stated and specified in such notice; and upon the hearing of any appeal from or against any such rate or assessment, or account, the court of general or quarter sessions to which such appeal shall be made, shall not examine or inquire into any other cause or ground of appeal than such as are or is stated and specified in the notice of appeal."

Appeals may be decided, if the parties consent, although notice be not given.

Sect. 5. "Provided nevertheless, that with the consent of the overseers, signified by them or their attorney in open court, and with the consent of any other person interested therein, the said court of sessions may proceed to hear and decide upon such appeal, although no notice thereof shall have been given in writing: and also that with the like consent such court may hear and decide upon grounds of appeal, not stated or mis-stated in such written notice, where any notice shall have been given in writing."

Persons appealing against any rate shall give notice, not only to the churchwardens, &c., but also to the persons interested, &c.

Sect. 6. "If any person or persons shall appeal against any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor, because any other person or persons is or are rated or assessed in such rate or assessment, or is or are omitted to be rated or assessed therein, or because any other person or persons is or are rated or assessed in any such rate or assessment at any greater or less sum or sums of money than the sum or sums at which he, she, or they, ought to be rated or assessed therein, or for any other cause that may require any alteration to be made in such rate or assessment with respect to any other person or persons, then and in every such case the person or persons so appealing for the causes aforesaid, or any of them, shall give such notice of appeal, in writing, as hereinbefore mentioned, not only to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor, or any two or more of them, but also to the other person or persons so interested or concerned in the event of such appeal as aforesaid; and such other person or persons shall, if he, she, or they shall so desire, be heard upon the said appeal; and it shall be lawful for the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace, on the hearing of such appeal, to order the name or names of such other person or persons to be inserted in such rate or assessment, and him, her, or them to be therein rated and assessed in any sum or sums of money; or to order the name or names of such other person or persons to be struck out of such rate or assessment, or the sum or sums at which he, she, or they is or are rated or assessed therein, to be altered in such manner as the said court shall think right; and the proper officer of the said court shall forthwith add to or alter the rate or assessment accordingly."

Sessions may amend the rate.

Rex v. Justices of Suffolk, 1 B. & Ald. 640. Bayley, J. "The fourth ground of appeal is, that the appellant is rated in a greater and higher proportion than all the other inhabitants and occupiers whose names are mentioned in the said rate. It is contended that this made it necessary to give notice to all those other inhabitants and occupiers, amounting in the whole to 364 persons. But that is not necessary. The 41 Geo. III. c. 23, first gave to the justices the power of amending the rate appealed against, instead of altogether quashing it, but required the grounds of the appeal to be stated, and notice to be given to the parties affected by the appeal. So that where the ground is that A. B. or C. are under-rated, it would be necessary to give notice to those individuals; but where the ground of complaint is, that the party appealing is over-rated in respect of all the rest, then it would be necessary, because the alteration sought is the diminution of his assessment only, and the rest of the rate remains entire." The other judges concurred.

Notice to the individuals unnecessary where the ground of appeal was that the appellant was rated higher than the other persons named in the rate.

Rex v. Brooke, 9 B. & C. 915; 4 M. & R. 719. In an appeal against the rate, the notice stated the grounds to be, that two persons, who were named, had rateable property and were omitted. But no notice of appeal having been given to either of those persons, the sessions confirmed the rate without going into the merits. Bayley, J., after quoting Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 453, as furnishing an argument in support of the order of sessions, said, "Before the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, whenever a party had been improperly omitted out of a rate, the sessions were bound to quash it. That statute was passed to remedy that inconvenience, but then it was thought unjust that a party should be affected by having his name inserted in a rate without notice, and the 41 Geo. III. c. 23, was passed to remedy this evil. The preamble of that statute recites, that by 17 Geo. II. power was given to the justices upon appeals from rates to give relief without altering the rate in other respects. But if the argument now urged were to prevail, the sessions would no longer have the option of amending the rates: they might in all cases of omission be compelled to quash them, and so appeals would be doubled in number. The 6th section, however, is general, and applies equally to all cases of amending or quashing rates. It provides in plain unequivocal terms, that if there is an appeal against a rate because some person who ought to have been rated has been omitted, notice shall be given to such person; and if it be not given, the appeal shall not be heard. The sessions in this instance have done right, and their order must be confirmed." Littledale and Parke, J. concurred.

Where the ground of appeal is that a person has been omitted, the sessions have no jurisdiction unless notice has been given to that person.

It is a good ground of appeal that the rate does not show on the face of it in respect of what property the several persons are rated. For "if any person wished to appeal, on the ground that another was under-rated, how could he tell in respect of what property the rate was imposed?" Abbott, C. J. Rex v. Aire and Calder Navigation, (ante).

Ground of appeal.

Rex v. Bromyard, 8 B. & C. 240; 2 M. & R. 280. This was an appeal against a poor rate. The rate did not describe the property in respect of which the several persons were rated. But this was not stated in the notice

But the sessions cannot quash the rate on this ground, unless it is stated in the notice of appeal.

as a ground of appeal. The sessions, however, quashed the rate upon this objection, subject to the opinion of the court. Bayley, J. "There can be no doubt that it ought to appear on the face of the rate in respect of what property the assessment is made upon each individual charged in the rate: and if the omission of that statement had been pointed out by the notice, as one of the grounds of appeal, it would have been a sufficient ground for quashing the rate. In many instances the specification of the property in respect of which the assessment is made, will give no further information to the parties to be affected by the rate, than the fact of their having been rated at a specific sum. But still the party rated has a right to know in respect of what property he is rated, in order that if he is over-rated in respect of that property he may appeal. If however he be satisfied with the amount of the sum for which he is rated, he will not appeal, because it will not be his interest to have the rate corrected. By 41 Geo. III. c. 23, the legislature intended to limit the expense of appeal, and lessen the labours of the justices at sessions. (He then read the 4th section, ante, p. 219, and continued.) Now, suppose there were no notice of appeal whatever, could the sessions quash the rate upon the ground that it was bad for a defect apparent on the face of it? clearly not. Or could the sessions quash the rate for such a defect, if a general notice of appeal were given, without specifying any cause? They certainly could not, because the statute prohibits their inquiry into any causes of appeal except those mentioned in the notice. For the same reason they cannot, in a case where certain causes of appeal are specified in the notice, go into others not specified. It is said that the words 'examine and inquire' are applicable to those cases only where extrinsic evidence is required to show the defect of the rate, and not to cases where the defect appears on the face of it. But we should not do justice to the intention of the legislature, if we entered into so very critical an examination of the language of the act. When the language of a deed is made the subject-matter of discussion, in order to ascertain thereby its legal effect, it may be said to be the subject of examination and inquiry. It has been said that this rate is illegal and void on the face of it, because the property in respect of which the assessment is made is not specified. I am of opinion that it is not illegal and void upon that ground, unless that be pointed out as a specific cause of appeal in the notice. That is one ground of objection which will render the rate liable to be quashed. In Rex. v. Aire and Calder Navigation, (ante), the objection was specifically pointed out in the notice of appeal." Holroyd, J. "It seems that the sessions had no jurisdiction to consider this objection, unless it was specified in the notice as a ground of appeal. They had no jurisdiction whatever over the rate unless the notice required by the statute was given, except in the case provided by the 5th section (post). It has been argued that the words 'examine and inquire' are to be construed more narrowly than their natural import warrants, and the object of the legislature seems to require. The fourth section requires that all notices of appeal shall be given in a particular manner, and that the particular causes or grounds of appeal shall be specified in the notice. So far that section is directory, but in what follows, it is not merely directory, but prohibitory. It goes on, 'and upon the hearing, the sessions shall not examine or inquire into any other grounds of appeal than such as are specified in the notice.' Construing this according to the natural import of the words, I think that it means that the sessions shall not enter into any other causes of appeal than those specified in the notice: but assuming the meaning of those words 'examine and inquire' to be doubtful, I think we ought to put upon the clause that construction, which will have the effect of preventing the 'quashing of rates.' The inconvenience mentioned in the recital, which it was the object of the statute to remedy, and construing the clause with reference to that object, I think that the sessions had no power to enter into any other causes of appeal than those stated in the notice; and that being so, I think we must hold that the sessions had no jurisdiction to quash the rate upon the ground that the property in respect of which the assessment was made was not described, because that was not specified in the notice as a cause of appeal." Littledale, J. "By 43 Eliz. c. 2, the rate was to be made on every inhabitant in respect of certain descriptions of property. The property in respect of which individuals are assessed ought therefore to be specified in the rate for two purposes. First, that the parties rated may see whether they have the property, and that it is the subject of a rate: secondly, that other persons may see whether the rate be equally assessed. If the property is not specified, the rate is defective and informal; and that informality is a ground of appeal, provided it be made the subject of appeal by giving the required notice. The statute says, that the sessions shall not examine or inquire into any other causes of appeal than such as are specified in the notice. It is true that in this case there was a defect on the face of the rate itself, which would therefore appear on inspection. But if neither the person whose property is omitted, nor others who have an interest that the rate should be equal, make the omission of such property a ground of complaint, the justices have no jurisdiction to quash the rate on that account. I think that the words 'examine or inquire' apply to an examination by inspection as well as by extrinsic evidence. The word 'examine' is frequently used in the same sense as the word 'inspect.' Thus the 27 Eliz. c. 5, which gives the writ of error from K. B. to the Exchequer Chamber, enacts, that the record may be removed there to be examined by the justices and barons, and they are to have full power to examine all such errors as shall be assigned.' Now when error is assigned upon a matter of law, it appears upon the face of the record, and whether there be good cause of error or not is ascertained by inspection of the record, and not by extrinsic evidence. So, in 31 Edw. III. c. 12, which gives the writ of error from the law side of the Exchequer to the Chancellor and Treasurer, the word examine is used in the same sense. I therefore think that the sessions could not take notice of this objection to the rate."

The sessions have a discretion to hear an appeal against a rate at the sessions next after it is published; but where it is the practice to adjourn the hearing to the next sessions after the appeal is entered, the appellant is entitled to try then, the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, not being imperative in this respect.

Rex v. The Justices of Wilts, 8 B. & C. 380; 2 M. & R. 401. A rate for the parish of Laycock was published on the 16th of September, 1827. The quarter sessions were held on the 16th of October at Marlborough, which is 16 miles from Laycock. The appellant gave no notice of appeal before the Michaelmas sessions, but at that sessions the appeal was entered and adjourned as a matter of course. It was the usual practice of the quarter sessions for the county of Wilts to enter the appeal at the sessions next following the publication of the rate, and to adjourn it to the next sessions as a matter of course. At the Epiphany sessions, the justices refused to hear the appeal. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think that the sound construction of the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, is, that the justices are to receive an appeal against a rate at the next sessions after publishing the same, and that they are then to exercise a discretion whether they will hear and determine it at that sessions, or respite it to the next. It is impossible to say that the matter must at all events be determined at the first sessions. The statute expressly mentions one case where the justices are to adjourn the appeal, and that is where it shall appear to them that reasonable notice has not been given, but other cases may occur in which it may be fit to adjourn the appeal, even though reasonable notice has been given, as in the case of the unavoidable absence of a material witness. Here it appears that the practice of the sessions has been to allow appellants to enter their appeals at the sessions next following the publication of the rate, and to adjourn the hearing to the second sessions as a matter of course. That being the general practice, I think that the appellant in this case, who acted on the faith that such practice would be adhered to, ought not to be deprived of his right of appeal, and therefore that the rule for a mandamus ought to be made absolute. At the same time, I think it would be more beneficial to the public, and more consistent with the intention of the legislature, if the justices did not adjourn appeals against rates as a matter of course. I think they should endeavour to induce parties to try their appeal at the next practicable sessions after the publishing of the rate."

But the justices should not adjourn the hearing as a matter of course.

Bayley, J. "I am of the same opinion. It was competent for the justices at the first sessions after the publishing of the rate to refuse to receive the appeal unless there was proof that notice of appeal had been given; but they did receive the appeal. Having received it, it was then competent to them in their discretion to adjourn it, and they did adjourn it. I think the appeal ought to have been heard at the next sessions after that adjournment." Rule absolute.

14. Of Appeal &c. under Local Acts.

If there is time to give notice.

Rex v. Justices of Monmouthshire, 1 Bar. & Adol. 895. A rate was published on the 14th October, and the next sessions took place on the 23rd. At the January sessions an appeal was entered and respited. The sessions cannot refuse to hear it at the Easter sessions. Reg. v. Suffolk J., 8 Dowl. 618.

Appeal may be to an adjourned sessions.

Rex v. Justices of Sussex, 7 T. R. 107; 2 Bott, 965. The appeal may be made to an adjourned sessions. And in this case Lord Kenyon, C. J., referred to the case of Rex v. Monks Risborough, 2 Bott, 954, and Rex v. Hinderclave, 2 Bott, 956.

Application to sessions for the repayment of money where too high a rate is levied, under 41 Geo. III. c. 23, must be made either to the sessions at which the appeal was heard, or at which the rates were reduced.

Rex v. Justices of St. Peter's Liberty, York, 4 B. & Ad. 342. In August, 1828, the undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation were rated in Brotherton, in 150*l.* on a total annual value of 2000*l.* as "the owners and occupiers of a cut or canal, and that part of the river Aire lying within the township of Brotherton, the dams, locks, and weirs, tolls, dues, &c." They appealed against the rate at the October sessions, and the appeal was respited until the Christmas sessions, but the overseers of Brotherton had no notice in writing of the entry and respite, and in December they distrained a vessel belonging to the company for the rate. The company, to prevent the vessel being sold, paid the 150*l.* under a protest, and 13*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.* costs. At the Christmas sessions the appeal was heard, and a case granted, and the Court of King's Bench in Trinity Term, 1829 (9 B. & C. 820), decided that the company were not rateable in respect of the river, and sent the rate back to the sessions to be amended by striking out that part. While this appeal was pending, other rates were made on the company for the same amount, and in the same terms, and appealed against; and on an appeal against one rate in January, 1830, the sessions amended the same by striking out the words "and that part of the river Aire," subject to the opinion of the Court of King's Bench on the question whether the company were rateable for dams on the river; and that court on the 21st of January, 1832 (3 B. & Ad. 139), made a rule that the rate should be sent back to be amended by reducing it from 150*l.* to 15*l.* 16*s.*, the amount chargeable on the canal and lock. At the April sessions, 1832, the rates were reduced from 150*l.* to 15*l.* 16*s.* pursuant to the rules of court. A demand was afterwards made on the overseers of Brotherton for the difference in amount between the sums due from the company on the rates as ultimately amended, and the sums paid to the overseers of Brotherton, under the distress in December, 1828, and afterwards upon the subsequent rates. At the October sessions, an application was made by the company for an order of sessions on the overseers to refund the sums of money so paid to them, after deducting the amount of the several rates chargeable. That court refused to make any order, on the ground that the application ought to have been made at the April sessions, when the rates were altered. A rule nisi had been obtained for a mandamus to the justices to make the order. Denman, C. J. "The motion ought to have been made either to the court of quarter sessions which heard the appeal, or to the court which ordered the sums rated on the company to be decreased or lowered. The application here was too late." Littledale, J., concurred. Taunton, J. "The court of quarter sessions had no power to order money improperly paid to overseers to be refunded until this statute gave it them; and the statute gives the power to the court of sessions which heard the appeal, or at least to the court which orders the sums rated on any person to be lowered. No application was made in this case to either one or the other." Patteson, J., concurred. Rule discharged.

Which party shall begin.

Rex v. Newberry, 4 T. R. 475. Upon an appeal against a poor-rate the question was, which party should begin? The court said, that where the appellant alleges that he has no rateable property within the place, the respondent should first show that he has some property liable to be rated; for it is impossible for the appellants in the first instance to prove the negative. And Heywood, amicus curiæ, said, "that in Yorkshire, where more appeals of this kind were lodged than in any other county, when the appellant objected to his being rated at all, it is the practice for the respondents to begin: but if he object to the quantum of the rate, then the onus lay on him.

Where the appellant disputes before the sessions the quantum of the rate, it is not sufficient for the respondent to show that the appellant is in possession of some rateable property within the parish, they must also show some probable ground for the amount at which they have charged the party in the rate.

Rex v. Topham, 12 East, 546. The defendant appealed against a rate for Driffield, which the sessions confirmed. Case:—The defendant was rated as occupier of property of the annual value of 250*l.*, and the grounds of his appeal were, that he had no rateable property in the parish, and not to the amount at which he was rated. The respondents proved that the appellant was in the annual receipt of certain tithe-rents, originating in the Driffield enclosure act, of the annual value of 6*s.* 8*d.*; and that other sums were received by him for tithe-rents, but there was no proof of their amount. Here the respondents closed their case, insisting that as they had proved the appellant to be in possession of some rateable property, it was incumbent on him to prove that in fact he had been over-rated. The appellant insisted that this composition or rent was not rateable at all. The sessions held that it was rateable. The appellant then contended that as there was no proof of any specific sum having been paid beyond the 6*s.* 8*d.*, the rate ought to be amended by inserting that sum instead of the 250*l.* The sessions held that the proof of over-rating lay on the appellant, and confirmed the rate generally. The appellant was lessee of the prebendary of Driffield, who was entitled under the inclosure act, &c., to a yearly rent or composition in lieu of the tithes of corn, grain, and hay therein, of 267*l.*, to be paid by the owners and proprietors of certain lands in certain proportions. And by the act, in all future rates and levies in the said townships, the composition rents were to be assessed in the same proportion as the other landholders. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "The question is, whether a person, who I will suppose for the present is liable to be rated for something beyond the 6*s.* 8*d.*, can be rated to the amount of 250*l.*, and then left to pare down that assessment upon an appeal to the amount which it ought to be? He might as well have been charged to the extent of 50,000*l.*" [Parke said he could not pretend to argue that that could be done, but here the act of parliament stated the composition to be more than the appellant was rated for.] On which his lordship observed, "It is not stated as a fact in the case that the appellant was in the receipt of the rents and compositions to the amount of 250*l.* If the sessions have proceeded upon what the court has said in some cases, that if the party rated have rateable property in the parish they will not inquire into the quantum of the rate, they have egregiously mistaken the court. When the question before the sessions is upon the quantum of the rate, the officers making it must show to the justices some probable ground for the amount at which they charge the party in the rate. The mischief of any other rule would be enormous; a small occupier may be rated at once in the round sum of 1000*l.*, and left to struggle his way out of that charge as he can." For the appellant it was observed, that the question made at the sessions was, whether the appellant should begin by proving his case, that he was over-rated; or whether the parish officers should begin by proving a probable case for rating the appellant at so much? On which Le Blanc, J., said, "The court will have no difficulty in dealing with that naked proposition whenever it should be brought nakedly before them." The case was sent back to sessions.

The practice of the sessions, that the appellants should begin, is not so inconvenient that K. B. will control it.

Rex v. Justices of Suffolk, 6 M. & Sel. 57. This was an appeal by a person who was rated as the occupier of tithes and other things in a gross sum. According to the practice of the sessions the appellant ought to begin, but he refused to do so, and the appeal was dismissed. Upon a rule for a mandamus, Lord Ellenborough said, "As a general rule, I should say that the granting of a writ, which has for its object the reversal of the order of proceeding at quarter sessions, according to the rules of practice which there prevail, is not a jurisdiction, which, if the court possess it, it will be inclined to exercise, unless it be apparent that great injustice will follow the refusal of the writ. Now here the appellant did not dispute that he was rateable, but only the amount of the rate; and it is complained that the justices at sessions, according to their practice, called on him to begin and make good his allegation that he was over-rated. The appellant says that this was impossible; but he has not shown why, nor even now ventures to state to us that he was really over-rated; so that he stands merely on the irregularity of the rule of practice, as to which it is urged, that the sessions have not proceeded according to what is thought to be and perhaps may be a more convenient rule. But if under such circumstances the court were to interfere, I am apprehensive that we might be attaching to ourselves a most inconvenient jurisdiction. It would come to this, that wherever the practice at the different sessions should happen to vary, we should be called on to decide between them." Bayley, J. "I do not see that the practice complained of is so inconvenient as alleged, and if the court were to interfere in this instance we should have to grant a mandamus in every instance where the sessions proceed according to a rule of practice, which we may not think the most convenient." Abbott, J. "It would be a dangerous precedent if we were to grant this writ upon the cause alleged. In general a mandamus to the justices to hear, proceeds upon the statutes. This writ is asked, because of some supposed error in practice." Holroyd, J. "The case of Rex. v. Topham not only differs from this in the points stated for the opinion of the court, but the decision also proceeded upon the special circumstances of that case. At the conclusion it was stated that the question made at the sessions was whether the appellant should begin by proving his case that he was over-rated, or whether the parish officers should begin by proving a probable case for rating the appellant at so much. And the court observed that they would have no difficulty in dealing with that proposition when it should come nakedly before them. So that it clearly appears the court did not consider that they were determining the simple question in that case." Rule refused.

Appellant not to furnish the means to enable sessions to amend the rate.

Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 3 B. & C. 516; 5 D. & R. 359. See this case ante, 279. The appellant objected to the rate because certain ship-owners were not rated for their ships, and upon this point Abbott, C. J., said, "It was pressed on us in the argument, that as the appellants had not made out what was each ship's profit, they had not given to the sessions the means of amending the rate, but this is founded on a misapprehension of the duties of the parish officers and the appellant. Where property is rateable, it is the duty of the officers to include it in the rate, and to take what means they can to ascertain its value. It is not for them to omit it altogether and to cast upon the appellant—what is properly their duty—the burthen of proving its value. In cases of single omission, the difficulty might not be very great, but if all the property of a given description is omitted, the difficulty might be excessive. Before 41 Geo. III. c. 23, the omission of a single individual, who ought to have been included, compelled the sessions to quash the whole rate, and so as he was rateable at all, the extent to which he was rateable was not in question. The 41 Geo. III. requires the sessions to alter or amend a rate appealed against without quashing it; but with proviso that if the sessions shall think it necessary for the purpose of giving relief to the appellant to quash the rate, they may do so; and when a rate contains so many omissions that it can hardly be expected of an appellant that he should have evidence to show the extent to which each person omitted ought to be rated, and where the investigation before the sessions would be likely to exhaust more time than they could reasonably be required to give up, we think it would not be an improper exercise of their discretion to quash the rate and make the officers do in the end what they ought to have done in the beginning.

Overseers cannot abandon a rate.

The remedy by appeal must be pursued, for the overseers have no power to abandon a rate duly allowed and published. In Rex v. Justices of Cambridge, 4 Nev. & Man. 238; 2 Ad. & E. 370, the appellant paid his rate and gave notice of appeal, and then received notice from the overseers that they abandoned the rate, as it could not be supported, and that he might receive the money back. The money was afterwards tendered, but they refused to pay the costs, and an appeal was entered. The sessions made an order, "that the overseers of the poor did abandon the rate on the 8th day of October, and that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal." On a mandamus to hear the appeal, Lord Denman said, "The justices were not right in their judgment, for they certainly had a jurisdiction, and the rate exists at this moment." Rule absolute.

Yet they may so far abandon it as to refuse to incur expense in supporting it on appeal.

Reg. v. Fouch, 1 G. & D. 585, 2 Q. B. 308. Upon an appeal against a disallowance in the accounts of overseers of Warfield, the sessions confirmed the disallowance. Case:—The parish of Warfield, in the East Hampton union, was valued under 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, s. 3, by a surveyor. His valuation, having been objected to, was sent back to him; he made some alterations in it, but it was still disapproved of, and the parish refused to adopt it. After this the defendants and the other parish officers made a new valuation on their own responsibility, and made a poor's-rate on that valuation. Notice was given by the parish officers that this new assessment was made, and several persons inspected it and made no objection to it. The defendants subsequently made a rate upon this assessment. The rate was appealed against at the special sessions, under 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, s. 6, on the grounds of inequality, unfairness, and incorrectness in the valuation. The defendants attended on that appeal, with their solicitor, and supported the rate by evidence, but, after evidence heard on both sides, the justices in special sessions made alterations in the assessment of ten of the persons rated, some of them being raised and others lowered, but in some of the instances to a small amount only; and the justices in special sessions directed that the parties in the appeal should each pay their own expenses, and pay the amount of the fees of the magistrate's clerk in equal moieties. For the expenses incurred on the hearing of this appeal, the overseers inserted the following items in their accounts:—To the land-surveyor, 32*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*; to ditto, 31*l.*; to the solicitor, 21*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* These items were allowed by the auditor of the union, and at a vestry meeting held afterwards, the majority of the parishioners then present resolved that these expenses should be allowed. Before the justices in special sessions, these items were objected to, and disallowed. The question was, whether these items ought to have been allowed. Lord Denman. "This is a case in which I think the sessions have exercised a sound discretion, the question before them being, whether the costs of these parish affairs were to be visited upon the parish or not. I think that the parish officers were not justified in endeavouring to cast a useless expense upon the parish. Overseers have no right to litigate every case at the expense of their parish, and it ought to be generally known and understood that, if public officers will get into unnecessary litigation, they will not be allowed to charge their expenses to the parish. The meaning of the decision in Rex v. Justices of Cambridge is, that an abandonment of a rate after allowance will not prevent it from being still an existing rate; but, although, therefore, overseers cannot so far abandon a rate as to make it void, yet they are bound to do so under certain circumstances so far as they can, namely, to the extent of not bringing witnesses, or incurring expenses to support it. The only point of law upon which our opinion can be supposed to be asked in this case is, whether the quarter sessions were bound to allow these items in the accounts, which they clearly were not." The other judges concurred.

Expenses not allowed, though sanctioned by the auditor and the majority of the parishioners.

When the rate should not be quashed.

Rex v. Ambleside, 16 East, 380. The question intended to be submitted to the court in this case, was whether stock in trade was rateable? But Lord Ellenborough said, "Is there not another question, whether the rate ought not to have been amended instead of being quashed? It is an objection applicable (a) to one person, and the justices should have amended

(a) The sessions had quashed the rate because W. W. was not rated. This was the form of the case, but the notice of appeal pointed out several others similarly circumstanced.

14. Of Appeal &c. under Local Acts.

the rate and not quashed it. The 41 Geo. III., c. 23, was passed for the very purpose of enabling them to do so, in order to prevent the inconvenience of the parish being without funds for the maintenance of its poor in the mean time. We say, therefore, that this rate was not properly quashed, and ought to have been amended." (b)

When it may be quashed.

Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 452. The ground of appeal was that certain lands were omitted, which were in the occupation or possession of the corporation. The sessions quashed the rate, and granted a case, from which the court could not collect whether the burgesses stocked the land in right of their franchise or by permission of the corporate body, and the court were inclined to send the case back; but Lord Ellenborough said, "I think we may deal with the case as it is. Here is a large tract of property producing profit, which is liable to be rated, and no person in fact is rated for it. This property is stated to belong to the corporation, and it may be doubtful whether the occupation shown be their occupation or that of individuals. Under these circumstances, I cannot say the sessions have done wrong in quashing the rate. The rate therefore is quashed, because no person has been rated for property which ought to have been rated."

The sessions cannot award costs unless the appeal be entered.

Rex v. Justices of Essex, 8 T. R. 583. Notice of appeal against a rate was given, and on the day before the sessions countermanded, whereupon the parish officers applied to the quarter sessions for the costs of preparing to resist the appeal. But the court thought they had no authority under the statute to give costs, as no appeal was entered. Per Curiam: "The quarter sessions have no authority to award costs under the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, unless an appeal has been entered and determined. The determination of the appeal is a condition precedent to the power to give costs, the words of the act being, 'may award to the party for whom such appeal shall be determined reasonable costs,' &c., and the subsequent words, 'in the same manner that they are empowered to do in case of appeals concerning the settlement of poor persons,' &c., only relate to the mode in which those costs are to be recovered. By referring to the former statute under which costs may be given in two instances, and by mentioning only one of those instances in the latter statute, it is evident that the legislature did not intend by the latter to authorise the sessions to give costs in both cases.'"

But if entered, they may, though the rate is quashed by consent.

Rex v. Cawston, 4 D. & R. 445. Where an appeal against a poor's-rate was entered at the Midsummer, and respited until the Michaelmas sessions, and then further respited at the instance of the appellant till the Epiphany sessions, four days previous to which the respondents gave notice that they would not oppose the appeal, and it was accordingly allowed without opposition, the rate being quashed on the motion of the appellant's counsel, and costs allowed by the sessions; held that the appellant was entitled to costs as upon an appeal which had been "heard and determined" within the meaning of the stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4. Bayley, J., said, "Rex v. Justices of Essex is perfectly distinguishable from this case; there no appeal was entered. This appeal was heard and determined in the fair sense and meaning of these words. In the first place, as to the hearing: the appellant was bound to prove his notice of appeal before he could entitle himself to costs: and having done so, that would be a hearing.

(b) The court did not advert to the power given to the sessions to quash the rate, and the sessions might have been of opinion that relief could not be given to the appellant without quashing it. Wherever the amendments to be introduced are such as will essentially alter the character and proportion of the rate, so as to render it a new rather than an amended rate, it should be quashed. Thus if the ground of complaint is that personal property is altogether omitted (Rex v. Dursley, 6 T. R. 53), or that the real estate is taxed ten times more in proportion than the personal (Ib.), or that the rate is made upon a principle altogether erroneous (Rex v. Sandwich, Doug. 562), or that a large portion of property is altogether omitted, and it does not clearly appear who ought to be rated for it (Rex v. Aberavon, supra;) these, says Mr. Nolan, seem cases in which the rate ought to be quashed. Because, otherwise, the sessions must examine into the circumstances of every person in the parish, in order to render the rate perfect, and so make one altogether new, which the statute forbids. See another ground for quashing a rate, Rex v. Hull Dock Company, ante, 348.

Then, in the second place, the allowance of an unopposed appeal would be a final determination of it, so as to satisfy the statute. It is said that the appellant need not have gone to the sessions, because notice was given four days before that it was not intended to resist the appeal. If notice had been given by the respondents at the same time, that they meant to pay the costs already incurred, then the appellant need not have gone to the sessions, but he is obliged to go there to get his costs." Holroyd, J. "By allowing the appeal the sessions determined it. Suppose the justices, notwithstanding the respondent's notice, entertained a doubt as to the propriety of allowing the appeal, and desired to hear what the appellant could say on the subject, would not that be a hearing? Could it be said that was only a hearing on one side, and that both sides must be heard before the costs ought to be allowed? Surely not. I think the order must be affirmed." Littledale, J., concurred.

14. Of Appeal &c. under Local Acts.

Reg. v. The Recorder of Stamford, 1 P. & D. 72. On an appeal against a borough rate, at the Epiphany sessions, the town clerk, who appeared for the respondents (the town council), objected that the appeal ought to have been to an earlier sessions; but the sessions, on inspecting the rate, decided that the appeal was properly lodged. The appeal was then adjourned to the Easter sessions, and from thence, at the request of the respondents, to the Midsummer and Michaelmas sessions successively. Previous to the Michaelmas sessions, the town council abandoned the rate as a nullity. At the Michaelmas sessions the appellants proved their notice of appeal and their notice to produce the rate, but no one appeared for the respondents, although the town clerk was present in court. The appellants then moved for their appeal to be confirmed, with costs. The sessions decided that as there was no proof given of a rate, or, at all events, of a legal rate, it had no jurisdiction. Held, that the rate was sufficiently before the court to give it jurisdiction.

Where a rate had been inspected by the sessions, and the appeal adjourned, the court has jurisdiction over it, though not produced at the subsequent sessions, and see Reg. v. Stampmer, Q. B. 119.

Rex v. Prosser, 4 T. R. 17. On an appeal against a poor-rate, because certain persons were omitted to be rated, a parishioner who is liable to be rated, but who is not in fact rated, is a competent witness to prove the rateability of appellants.

Who may be witnesses.

This was before the 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 9, which enacts, that no person rated or liable to be rated, or supported thereby, or holding any office therein, shall be by reason thereof an incompetent witness for or against the parish. See also 3 & 4 Vic. c. 26, and 6 & 7 V. c. 85, post, Evidence.

Inhabitants not to be incompetent witnesses in certain cases on behalf of or against their parish.

The 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 13, enacts, that "Copies of all rates be fairly entered in a book by the overseers within fourteen days after appeals from such rates are determined, and shall attest the same by putting their names thereto; and every such book shall be carefully preserved by the overseers in some public or other place, in every such parish, whereto all persons assessed, or liable to be assessed, may freely resort; and shall be delivered over to the succeeding overseers as soon as they enter into their office, to be preserved, and produced by them at the quarter-sessions, when any appeal is to be heard or determined."

Copies of rates to be entered in a book after appeals determined.

Production of the rate.

Rex v. Uttoxeter, 2 Str. 932. Upon great debate and search after precedents, it was held that a certiorari would not lie to remove the poor-rate itself, the remedy being to appeal, or by action when a distress is taken, which will answer all the ends of justice in coming at an unequal rate; whereas if the rate itself should be required to be sent up, great inconveniences and delays would follow. Rex v. The J. of Salop, 2 Str. 975. But see Reg. v. J. Middlesex, 9 A. & E. 540, and the general principles relating to certiorari, under the title "Certiorari."

Rate not removable by certiorari.

15. Payment of the Rate, and enforcing same by Distress or otherwise.

"The proper mode of enforcing payment of an arrear of poor-rate is by summons and distress given by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4, and subsequent statutes; for it is a rule that upon a new statute which prescribes a particular remedy,

The remedies to enforce payment of rate.

15. Payment of Rate, and enforcing by Distress, &c.

that is the only one that can be taken. Therefore clearly no action will lie for a poor-rate." Denison, J. (Stevens v. Evans, post; Underhill v. Ellicombe, M'Cl. & Young, 456.) In one case, however, where a corporation had been rated, and it was doubtful whether there were any distrainable goods, a mandamus to pay was issued. (Rex v. Margate, 3 Bar. & Ald. 220; 2 Chitty's Rep. 356, S. C.) So payment of rates is enforced collaterally by the Reform Act, 2 Will. IV. c. 45, s. 27, and the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 70, s. 9, and the Vestry Act, 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 5, which incapacitate the party rated from voting unless he has paid the rate.

Persons removing out of parishes to pay a proportion of the rate, enforceable by distress.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 12, after reciting, "that whereas persons frequently remove out of parishes and places without paying the assessed rates on them, and other persons do enter and occupy their houses and tenements part of the year, by reason whereof great sums are annually lost to such parishes and places;" it is enacted, "that where any person or persons shall come into or occupy any house, land, tenement, or hereditament, or other premises, out of or from which any other person assessed shall be removed, or which at the time of making such rate was empty or unoccupied, then every person so removing from, and every person so coming into or occupying the same, shall be liable to pay such rate in proportion to the time that such person occupied the same respectively, in the same manner and under the like penalty of distress, as if such person so removing had not removed, or such person so coming in or occupying, had been originally rated and assessed in such rate; which said proportion, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained by any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace."

Rate to be levied by distress; and if no goods, then may follow commitment. (a)

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4, "it shall be lawful, as well for the present as subsequent churchwarden and overseers, or any of them, by warrant from any two such justices of peace as is aforesaid, to levy as well the said sums of money and all arrearages, of every one that shall refuse to contribute according as they shall be assessed, by distress and sale of the offender's goods, as the sums of money or stock which shall be behind upon any account to be made as aforesaid, rendering to the parties the overplus; and in defect of such distress, it shall be lawful for any two such justices of the peace to commit him or them to the common gaol of the county, there to remain without bail or mainprise until payment of the said sum, arrearages, and stocks."

Goods may be distrained in any part of the county.

17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 7. "The goods of any person assessed, and refusing to pay, may be levied by warrant of distress, not only in the place for which such assessment was made, but in any other place within the same county or precinct; and if sufficient distress cannot be found within the said county or precinct, on oath made thereof before some justice of any other county or precinct (which oath shall be certified under the hand of such justice on the said warrant), such goods may be levied in such other county or precinct by virtue of such warrant and certificate; and if any person shall find him or herself aggrieved by such distress as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for such person to appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county or precinct where such assessment was made, and the justices there are hereby required to hear and finally determine the same."

If not to be found within the district, &c., may be made out of.

By 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 12, it is enacted, "that the goods and chattels of any person or persons neglecting or refusing to pay any sum or sums of money legally assessed on and due from him, her, or them in respect of any rate for the relief of the poor, church cess, or highway cess, of any district, parish, township, or hamlet, for the space of seven days after the same shall have been legally demanded of him, her, or them, shall and may be distrained, not only within such district, parish, township, or hamlet, but also within any other district, parish, township, or hamlet, within the same county, riding, division, or jurisdiction; and if sufficient distress cannot be found within the same county, riding, division, or jurisdiction, then upon oath thereof made before any one or more justice or justices of the peace for any other county, riding, division, or jurisdiction, in which any of the goods or chattels of such persons shall be found, which oath such justice or justices are hereby required to administer and certify, by indorsing in his or their respective handwriting his or their name or names on the warrant granted to make such distress, the goods and chattels of the said person or persons so neglecting or refusing to pay as aforesaid, shall be subject and liable to such distress and sale in such other county, riding, division, or jurisdiction, where the same shall be found; and may by virtue of such warrant and certificate be distrained and sold in the same manner as if the same had been found within the district, parish, township, or hamlet, in or for which such rate or cess had been made or was due."

(a) By 27 Geo. II. c. 20, a power is given to justices granting a warrant of distress, to order the goods to be sold, unless the money is paid. And c. 2 empowers the officer making the distress, to deduct reasonable charges for taking, keeping, and selling the distress.

15. Payment of Rate, and enforcing by Distress, &c.

We have seen by 41 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 1 (ante), that although the rate be quashed, the sums charged are to be levied and taken as payment on account of the next effective rate.

Notice of appeal not to prevent a distress for a sum not greater than that assessed in the last effective rate.

41 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 2. "All and every the sum and sums of money at which any person or persons is or are or shall be rated or assessed, in any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor of any parish, township, vill, or place, shall and may be levied and recovered by distress, and all other lawful ways and means, notwithstanding the person or persons so rated or assessed, or any other person or persons, shall have given notice of appeal from or against such rate or assessment for any cause whatsoever: provided always, that if any person rated or assessed in any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor, shall give such notice of appeal as hereinafter mentioned, to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, township, vill, or place, or any two of them, then from and after the giving of such notice, and until the appeal shall have been heard and determined, no proceedings shall be commenced or carried on to recover any greater sum or sums of money from such person or persons than the sum or sums at which he, she, or they, or any occupier of the same premises, shall have been rated or assessed in the last effective rate which shall have been collected in such parish, township, vill, or place."

If rate quashed, sum charged is not to be paid, and all proceedings to be stopped.

By s. 3. "If the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace shall, upon appeal, order any rate or assessment for the relief of the poor to be quashed, it shall be lawful for the said court to order any sum or sums of money in and by such rate or assessment charged on any person or persons, or any part of any such sum or sums, not to be paid, and then and in every such case no proceedings shall, after making such order, be commenced: or if any proceedings have been previously commenced, such proceedings shall be no further prosecuted or carried on for the purpose of levying or enforcing the payment of any sum or sums which shall be so ordered by the said court not to be paid."

The rate to be recovered as altered by the sessions.

By s. 7. "If upon the hearing of any appeal from or against any rate or assessment, the said court shall order the name or names of any person or persons to be inserted therein, and him, her, or them to be rated or assessed at any sum or sums of money, or shall order the sum or sums at which any person or persons is or are therein rated or assessed to be raised or increased, then and in such case all and every the sum and sums of money at or to which such person or persons shall be so ordered to be rated or assessed, or to be raised or increased, or so much thereof as shall not have been already paid, shall and may be recovered in such and the same manner, and by such and the same means as if he, she, or they had been originally named in such rate or assessment, and rated or assessed therein at such sum or sums of money."

A warrant may be made to distrain before the time for which the rate is made is expired. Charlwood v. Best, 1 Bott, 261.

An overseer is not liable for the amount of rate over the money so levied to a guardian under 22 Geo. II. c. 83, and the rate is afterwards lowered on the appeal being heard, the overseer not being a wrong-doer will not be liable in money had and received.

lowered on appeal and paid over to a guardian.

Before any warrant of distress is granted, the person assessed must be summoned, and if the proceedings are under the 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 12, the rate must be demanded seven days before the warrant is granted.

A summons must precede a warrant of distress for a poor-rate, and without it the Court of K. B. will not issue a mandamus.

Rex v. Benn, 6 T. R. 198. On a rule for a mandamus to the defendants to grant warrants of distress against persons who had refused to pay a poor's-rate, it appeared that there had been no previous summons to the persons charged. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "I confess I cannot subscribe my assent to the decision in Rex v. Middlesex. (a) The payment of a poor-rate, unless it be set aside, must be enforced; and if the magistrates will not issue a summons to the person who refuses to pay the rate, the court will grant a mandamus to compel them to do it: but a summons must precede a warrant of distress, which is in the nature of an execution. On the summons, the party may show a sufficient reason to the magistrates why a warrant of distress should not issue; as, for instance, that he has already paid the assessment to one of the parish officers, who has not accounted for it. But it is an invariable maxim in our law, that no man shall be punished before he has had an opportunity of being heard: whereas if a warrant of distress were to be issued without any previous summons, the party would have no opportunity of showing cause why the execution should not issue against him. (b) But the next day the court granted a rule for a mandamus to the magistrates 'to receive such informations and complaints as shall be laid before them against persons refusing to pay the sums assessed upon them for the relief of the poor of the township of Whitehaven, and to proceed thereupon to levy the same.'"

Summons essential.

Rex v. Stafford, 5 Nev. & Man. 94. Before issuing a warrant it is essential that a summons should have been served on the party, or left at his present residence, calling upon him to show cause why a distress warrant should not issue.

Oath of the refusal to pay the rate must be made before the justices previously to distraining for non-payment.

Tracy v. Talbot, 2 Salk. 532. Holt, C. J. "The rate cannot be distrained for by virtue of a general warrant made before the rate: but there ought to be a special warrant on purpose; that is to say, the nonfeasance of the party shall not be left to the judgment of the officer, who may, out of private resentment, sell his neighbour's goods without sufficient cause; but oath of the refusal must be made before the justices. And it is reasonable that the party should be heard in his defence; for he may show cause variously why a distress should not be granted; as that the rate was not regularly allowed, or was not published in the church, or that he had given notice of appeal, or that no demand or refusal had been made, and the like."

A distress after tender by landlord improper.

Rex v. Cozens, Dougl. 426. On an application for an information against two justices of Dorchester for granting a warrant of distress corruptly, it

(a) Rex v. Justices of Middlesex, 1 Bott, 262. Motion for a mandamus to sign a warrant of distress for levying a poor-rate. It was the custom not to grant warrants without first summoning the party, and the justices refused to grant any warrants of distress, without first summoning the party. Lee, C. J. "A writ of mandamus will not give the justices any power they had not before, and therefore it is to be considered what powers stat. 43 Eliz. cap. 2, s. 4, gives them; and in that there is no direction that the party shall be summoned to show cause: nothing appears upon the affidavits that this is such a rate as a distress ought to be granted upon; but the whole is, that persons applying for the warrant did first refuse to take out a summons, which to me does not appear a sufficient cause why the mandamus should not go; if the justices have sufficient reason why they did not grant the warrant, it will appear upon the return of the mandamus." The other judges concurred. Mandamus granted.

(b) This case was approved of by Bayley, B. in Capel v. Child, 2 C. & J. 579, where that learned judge says, "I know of no case in which you are to have a judicial proceeding, by which a man is to be deprived of any part of his property without his having an opportunity of being heard."

appeared that the grandson of the owner of the house tendered the rate to the overseer for the owner, and not for the occupier, and the overseer refused to receive it, and the justices granted a warrant against the occupier. The right of voting for members in Dorchester depended on the payment of poor-rates. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "It is impossible for the defendants to excuse themselves on account of ignorance. In many parts of the kingdom the landlord pays the rates for the tenants." Twenty-eight rates had been paid in the same way; and his lordship strongly condemned the issuing of this warrant. Rule discharged, on payment of all costs by the defendants.

When doubtful whether distress would be lawful, mandamus will be refused.

A warrant should not be issued if the parties think there is reasonable ground to believe that the rate is void as regards the person summoned. In such cases the justices may decline to grant a warrant if the rate is questionable. The Court of King's Bench will not compel them (a) to enforce it. If the objection to the rate, however, is one of which the party can avail himself by appeal only, then the mandamus will be granted.

One writ for two rates.

One writ of mandamus may go, commanding the issue of two warrants of distress for two distinct rates against the same individual. Reg. v. Ellis, 7 Jurist, 107.

Not necessarily against all the justices.

Where there is no reason to presume that an improper selection has been made in moving for the writ, or no inconvenience can arise from such selection, it is not necessary that a mandamus should be directed against all the justices who refuse the warrants. Ib.

May be against a justice interested in the land.

A mandamus may be directed against a trustee of the lands rated, if he has acted as a justice in refusing the warrant. Ib.

Refusal on 25th Aug., application in Hil. Term sufficient.

A warrant of distress was refused by justices for one rate on the 25th August, and for a different rate on the 29th December. A mandamus applied for in the Hilary Term following, as to both rates, is in time. Ib.

If some justices refuse to act, an application may be made to others.

Application had been made on the 16th October to a bench of magistrates at Skipton, who, being equally divided, refused to act; and a second application was made on the 29th December to the justices of Keighley:—Held, that, as the first bench of magistrates were equally divided, and had dismissed the case, their jurisdiction did not attach so as to exclude the Keighley magistrates.

The justices cannot refuse to issue a warrant when the validity of the rate had been decided by the Queen's Bench. Reg. v. J. Middlesex, 12 L. J. 36. M. C.

Rate for lands not in the party's occupation is void.

No warrant ought to be granted where a person is assessed for lands which were not in his occupation, notwithstanding it had been confirmed on appeal. For the determining that a man may be assessed for what he does not occupy, is an excess of jurisdiction. Milward v. Caffin, 2 Bla. Rep. 1330. And in such a case trespass lies for the illegal seizure. Durant v. Boys, 6 Term R. 580.

So also where the party is assessed for some houses which he occupies, and others which he does not, he may dispute the legality of the rate as to the latter in an action. Governor of Bristol Poor v. Waite, 1 Ad. & E. 264.

So also for lands not in the parish.

So also where the assessment is for land in another parish; for that is an illegal tax, which the justices have no power to confirm. Weaver v. Price, 3 B. & Adol. 406. (b)

(a) It is a general rule that where magistrates have been called on to exercise their judgment upon the propriety of granting a warrant, the Court of King's Bench will not interfere, especially where there is a probability that an action will be brought against them upon such warrant. Rex v. Margate, 3 Bar. & Ald. 220; 2 Chit. R. 250, S.C.; Rex v. Dyer, 2 Adol. & El. 613; 4 Nev. & Man. 546; Rex v. Somersetshire, 4 Nev. & Man. 394. It was observed, (Rex v. Dyer), that it was a pity that acts of parliament relating to the poor-rates did not contain a clause indemnifying magistrates for what they did in obedience to the mandate of the court; the court would then take upon itself to see whether the thing required were within the provisions of the act. (See Rex v. Greame, 2 A. & E. 615; Rex v. Morgan, ib. 618.)

(b) Trustees were authorised to erect a chapel at Islington, and to borrow

15. Payment of Rate, and enforcing by Distress, &c.

But the rate may be enforced by distress, if the rate is not a nullity, and the justices had jurisdiction to allow the assessment. In Pitman v. Marshall, 9 Bing. 595, the plaintiff had been rated for his stock in trade, and the special case stated that the plaintiff had no personal property or stock in trade for which he was liable to be rated, unless his stock of drugs, &c., which he had as an apothecary, rendered him rateable. And it was held that as the plaintiff was an inhabitant of the parish possessing visible personal property, he was within the jurisdiction of the justices, and liable to be rated, although his rateable property might turn out to be worth nothing. See also Crease v. Sawle, ante, p. 239, and 4 Hag. Rep. 84.

Rated inhabitant cannot resist the rate in an action, though he had no rateable property.

Insufficient description of property furnishes no answer to a distress.

The want of a sufficient description of the property rated cannot be made the ground of objection to a distress for a rate. It can be made by appeal only. Curtis v. Kent Water Works Company, 7 B. & C. 314; Hutchins v. Chambers, 1 Burr. 580.

If one warrant is granted for several rates, and one of them has been quashed, the warrant is void. (b)

Hurrell v. Wink, 2 B. Moore, 417; 8 Taunt. 369. In replevin the defendant avowed as overseer under a warrant of distress granted against the plaintiff on the 9th of January, 1817, and executed on him on the 13th, for 104*l.* 17*s.* due for seven several poor-rates. The plaintiff appealed, but not in sufficient time as regarded six of the seven rates. The sessions quashed the last rate, on the ground that the plaintiff was not the occupier. Gibbs, C. J. "It was necessary that the sum actually due from the plaintiff for poor-rates should be demanded previous to the issuing of the warrant of distress, and that it was distinguishable from a distress for rent; that whatever might be due as the amount of rent might be distrained, and that although a larger sum were distrained for than was actually due, that the lessor might still be supported; as if a distress were made for three years' rent, and two only were due, still the avowant was entitled to recover for the two. So if a person bring an action for goods sold and delivered to the amount of 100*l.*, still he may only be entitled to recover 40*l.* But in neither of these cases is a precise and previous demand necessary as here, where the party distrained on is entitled to know what sum is actually due for poor-rates, previous to the issuing of the warrant under which the levy is made." Verdict entered for the plaintiff.

The precise sum due should be demanded previous to the issuing of the warrant.

Same Point.

So also, where one of the rates had not been published. See Sibbald v. Roderick, ante, and Price v. Quarrel, ante, 20.

A party making a distress for two rates, as to one of which only he is entitled to notice of action, is liable in trespass.

A defendant seized goods under a distress for a highway and poor-rate. No notice of action was given, to which the defendant was entitled under the highway act, and the plaintiffs obtained a verdict for the value of the goods seized for the poor-rate only. On a motion to enter a nonsuit, Lord Abinger said, "There is no ground for this application. It is not like the case of a man coming with one good warrant and one bad warrant, for there he could justify under the good one. Suppose the defendant had pleaded specially a justification under warrants both for highway-rate and poor-rate, that issue must have been found against him. He could not justify both the takings. He could not have made a tender of amends under the poor law act; at least he would not be entitled to notice." Rule refused. Lamont v. Southall, 5 M. & W. 416.

Several warrants and one seizure is not void.

When, therefore, there is only one warrant, authorising a distress for a good and bad rate, it is defective; but where several warrants were granted against a defendant, who was liable to be rated for some of the premises, but not others, the distress may be excessive, but the seizure is legal. Governor of Bristol Poor v. Wait, 3 Nev. & Man. 359; 1 Ad & E. 264.

Skingley v. Surridge, 12 L. J. 122. M. C. B. Parke delivered the judgment. "It was an action of replevin with cognizance under 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 19, and the points reserved for the consideration of the court were £30,000: they borrowed £32,000, and made a rate to pay the interest of it. This rate is bad in toto; and though the defect did not appear on the face of it, replevin will lie for the distress. Richter v. Hughes, 3 D. & R. 788. Similar points under the Land Tax Act. Charlton v. Always, 11 A. & E. 993.

three—1. Whether the goods of one churchwarden were liable to be seized under a distress made by the order of the other churchwarden and overseers for the poor-rate due from him. 2. Whether the demand of the rate by a person who acted as assistant overseer was sufficient to support the warrant of distress; and, if not, whether the warrant of distress was bad on that account. 3. Whether the distress was illegal by reason of the warrant being to levy 11*s.* 6*d.* for costs, as well as a certain sum for the rate. We think none of these objections ought to prevail.—1. The argument is, that one churchwarden or overseer has as much right to receive the poor-rate as another; and that, being also a person to disburse the rate, he may be considered as having already paid his own rate to himself; and that though he would therefore be accountable for it, he could not become liable to pay it to the then overseer: and if this rate could be recovered only by action, or other proceeding, wherein all the churchwardens and overseers were necessary parties, there would be great weight in the objection; the case would then be analogous to that of one of several debtors being made executors. But this is not the situation in which one parish officer stands to the others; all need not join in the application to the justices to enforce the payment by warrant of distress; the complaint of one is sufficient, and, consequently, the simple fact that the churchwarden or overseer who is liable to the rate, does not amount in law to a payment to himself; but if an overseer charges himself with the amount as received, and has applied it to parochial purposes, the justices would have the discretion (as they act judicially in this matter, Harper's Case, 7 T. R. 271) not to allow the overseers to have the warrant against him, which they otherwise would. Whether one parish officer can distrain on another for the rate will depend on the question, whether that other refused to pay the rate or not. In this case there was, beyond all doubt, a refusal altogether to pay, and the magistrates were justified in granting the warrant of distress. The case of Wethered v. Calcut (ante), is not an authority applicable to this case. The decision of the Common Pleas on the words of 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 2, which makes a churchwarden or overseer liable to a penalty for not giving a copy of the rate to every inhabitant or parishioner, was a case where the latter words were used in contradistinction to churchwardens and overseers, and, consequently, no such penalty attached to one churchwarden or overseer by the refusal of a copy to another. 2. The second question is, whether a warrant was valid on the ground of a demand and refusal of the rate by a person who was not an overseer. The objection to Till's appointment was, that although he was elected under the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, and appointed by warrant of two justices assistant-overseer to perform all the duties of overseer, he was not duly appointed, because the vestry did not specify that all those duties were to be performed by him as assistant-overseer; and unless they did, the justices had no power to appoint. The court are of opinion, that the minutes (a) were not to be construed as a nullity, which they would be unless the parish meant to appoint him as assistant-overseer. We think it was the necessary implication from that resolution, that the parishioners, in vestry assembled, meant to appoint Till an assistant-overseer, with all the duties attached; and, therefore, that the justices were perfectly right in considering that as evidence of the intention of the parish, that all the duties should be executed by the assistant-overseer, and that appointing him assistant-overseer was an obligation to perform all those duties. 3. The last objection was, that the distress was illegal, the costs of the summons and hearing before the two justices was included, and that the payment of these costs was not warranted by law. If this had not been a legal demand, it would not follow that the distress was illegal, because, on the face of the warrant, the sum demanded must be assumed to be a legal demand, as distinguished

The majority of the parish officers may distrain on a churchwarden for his poor-rate.

One overseer may apply for the warrant of distress.

Granting the warrant is a judicial act.

An assistant-overseer may demand the rate.

A minute of vestry, that "A. was elected assistant-overseer," justifies the two justices in appointing him to all the duties of an overseer.

Warrant not vitiated by the introduction of the costs.

(a) The minutes of the vestry were, "At a meeting held for the appointment of an assistant-overseer, W. Till was duly elected, at a salary of 40*l.* per annum."

A warrant for two things is legal, if the legal and illegal can be distinguished.

from the sum which is said to be an illegal demand, viz. the costs. The rate legally due was duly claimed and refused, and the plaintiff had the means of tendering the precise sum. Nothing was done under the distress which the warrant did not justify. The case differs from Milward v. Caffin, p. 355; Sibbald v. Roderick, ante; Hurrell v. Wenk, p. 356 (a); in which cases the legal could not be distinguished from the illegal part, and there was no demand of that sum which was lawfully due. The sum of 11*s*. was, however, due in this case under 18 Geo. III. c. 19. It was said there was no proof that the same had been given by the statute; but this was not made a ground of objection at the trial. It was argued, that the sum could not be recovered by distress under the st. of Eliz., which is true. It was also argued, that the distress for it could not be justified in general terms. But here the defendants did not need to justify the distress for that sum at all. They did nothing but what they were authorised to do, under the warrant of distress for the poor-rate alone, and were therefore justified under the st. of Eliz. If the poor-rate had been paid, and they had then stayed to raise the amount of costs, they must have justified specially. Nothing of that sort was done. The rule for disputing verdict for the defendant must be discharged."

Such costs not recoverable by distress.

Under a warrant of distress, defendants broke and entered the house: Held, that they were not acting in obedience to the warrant, and therefore not entitled to the protection of 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6.

Bell v. Oakley, 2 M. & Sel. 259. Under a warrant of distress for a poor-rate, the defendant knocked at plaintiff's door, and being informed that the plaintiff was from home, defendant tried to get in at the cellar, but failed; he then removed the fastening of a window, and got into the wash-house. Having found nothing within, the inner door being locked, he returned, and took some planks and other articles which were lying in the garden. It was contended, that there ought to have been a demand of the copy of the warrant, under 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The case of Money v. Leach (3 Burr. 1742; 1 Bla. 555), decides that the defendant, in order to avail himself of the objection upon the statute, must show that he acted in obedience to the warrant; in that case the officers apprehended a different person from that described in the warrant, and therefore not in obedience to the warrant; and Mr. Yorke, the then attorney-general, who was to have argued on behalf of the officers, gave up the point upon the second argument, as being too great a difficulty for him to encounter. Here the defendants, so far from showing that they acted in obedience to the warrant, commence by an unauthorised course of proceeding; it was a trespass in them ab initio; and I do not see how, after the case of Money v. Leach, they can stir this objection. That was a case of much public interest, and was decided upon great deliberation, and the matter was upon the record. If this had been a distinct subsequent trespass of the defendants, it might have presented a different question." Bayley, J. "In Price v. Messenger (2 Bos. & P. 158), the defendant, so far as he acted in obedience to the warrant, was under the protection of the statute, but he was holden liable for the seizure, which was not made in obedience to the warrant." Dampier, J. "The case of Money v. Leach decided, that where the justice cannot be liable, the officer is not within the protection of the statute. In this case, suppose notice had been delivered to the justice, for what could he have tendered amends? In Price v. Messenger, the justice might have been proceeded against upon the warrant." Rule discharged. See Peppercorn v. Hoffman, post, 360.

Distress shall not be deemed unlawful for want of form in the proceedings.

And by 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 8, 9, 10, "Where any distress shall be made for any sum or sums of money justly due for the relief of the poor, the distress itself shall not be deemed to be unlawful, nor the party or parties making it be deemed a trespasser or trespassers, on account of any defect or want of form in the warrant for the appointment of such overseers, or in the rate or assessment, or in the warrant of distress thereupon; nor shall the party or parties distraining be deemed a trespasser or trespassers ab initio, on account of any irregularity which shall be afterwards done by the party or parties distraining, but the party or parties aggrieved by such irregularity shall or may recover full satisfaction for the special damage he, she, or they shall have sustained thereby, and no more, in an action of trespass or on the case, at the election of the plaintiff or plaintiffs. Provided always, that where the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover in such action, he, she, or they shall be paid his, her, or their full costs of suit, and have all the like remedies for the same as in other cases of costs. Provided nevertheless, that no plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover in any action for any such irregularity as aforesaid, if tender or amends hath been made by the party or parties distraining before such action brought."

15. Payment of Rate, and enforcing by Distress, &c.

Commitment for want of distress.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4, "In defect of such distress it shall be lawful for any such two justices of the peace to commit him or them to the common gaol of the county, there to remain without bail or mainprize until payment of the said sum, arrearages, and stock."

What may be taken.

As a distress for a poor-rate is analogous in some respects to an execution, beasts of the plough are distrainable, though there may be sufficient goods without them (Hutchins v. Chambers, 1 Burr. 579); and working tools in a shop. (2 Show. 126.) And yet replevin lies. (Sabourin v. Marshall, 3 Bar. & Adol. 440.)

So also it seems money. But quære. (East India Company v. Skinner, 1 Bott, 257.)

Money.

Only the goods of the party assessed can be taken.

The goods only of the party assessed can be taken under the distress. The 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4, enacts, &c. "by distress and sale of the offender's goods." The 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 7, says, "the goods of any person assessed." It is otherwise as to the assessed taxes, for which any goods on the premises may be distrained. (Stevens v. Evans, 2 Burr. 1152; Juson v. Dixon, 1 M. & S. 601.)

Quære, Whether goods of party assessed in hands of executor can be taken? At all events the executor must be first summoned. See 2 Williams. Executors, 1083.

If the person charged shall die before payment, it has been doubted how far the deceased's goods in the hands of the executor or administrator are liable to answer the same. In Stevens v. Evans (2 Burr. 1152; 1 Bla. Rep. 284), W. Vesey was assessed to the poor-rate, and died intestate. Administration was granted to the plaintiff. After which two justices executed a warrant, in which it was recited, that the sum assessed had been demanded of Vesey, and (since his decease) of his widow; and then it required the officer to distrain the goods and chattels of the late William Vesey. An action was brought by the administrator, and a special case was stated, and the question was, whether the distraining the cattle, which were the goods of Vesey, in the hands of his administrator, was lawful or not? Mr. Justice Denison said, "The question is stated particularly upon this case, and is confined to the levying the money upon the representative of the person charged. I should think the event must have often happened in fact and experience. The practice is not stated. But, however, the question is, what the law is? and not what the practice is. It is a rule, that upon a new statute which prescribes a particular remedy, no remedy can be taken but the particular remedy prescribed by the statute. Therefore, clearly, no action of debt will lie for a poor-rate. The remedy given by the act of the 43 Eliz. must be considered with analogy to other like cases. This statute considers the person rated and refusing to pay as an offender, and gives no authority but to distrain the goods of the offender. Therefore no goods are liable to be distrained, by the words of this act, but the goods of the offender himself. I never apprehended that the goods of the person assessed to the rate can be charged in the hands of the representative. And therefore (as at present advised) I should think that this action will lie for taking them. I agree that this is in the nature of an execution; but yet it is personal: and I do not know that it is a lien upon the assets." Mr. J. Wilmot said, he had no doubt about it. "It is not stated in the case that a demand was made even upon Vesey (the person assessed), and that he refused payment, though it is so recited in the warrant; but that is not material; for I have not the least doubt but that the representative ought to have been convened before the justices, and asked what he had to say why he should not pay the rate assessed upon Vesey, his intestate. The case seems to be like a scire facias upon a judgment; upon which execution cannot be sued out against the representatives, without asking them what they have to allege why it should not be taken out. At the time of the teste of the warrant, they were the goods and chattels of the representative. If the teste had been prior to the death, they would have been the goods and chattels of the deceased; but if tested after his death, they are not his goods and chattels, but the goods and chattels of the representative: therefore, if the money had been demanded of the representative, I should have had great doubt whether this warrant and distress would not have been good; for I cannot think that by the death of the person charged with this rate, the assessment before made upon him and demanded of him would have been quite gone and lost to the parish, and could not have been any way come at; for though it may be a charge upon the person, yet it is a charge upon him in respect of the thing occupied. And though he be called an offender, if he refuse to pay it, yet he can be no otherwise considered as an offender, than every other debtor who refuses or neglects to pay his debts, and thereby renders his person and goods liable to be taken in execution, is so far treated as an offender, till he shall comply with the judgment awarded. And in experience I know it to be the case, that these payments by executors or administrators are often allowed to go in discharge of the assets of the testator or intestate; though I do not remember that it has been settled in what course of administration. Indeed it might be of too much consequence to put it into the power of justices of the peace to determine upon the administration of assets, as to the course in which they are to be administered. In Wallis and Hewit, at the sittings after H. T. 5 Geo. II., before Lord C.J. Eyre, in an action of trespass, two aldermen of London had made a warrant to distrain a man for a poor-rate. The man died intestate; but before that, there had been a demand made upon him, and refused by him, and a warrant of distress granted upon his refusal; and then he died. Eyre, C. J. held, that a distress could not be made after his death; or, if it could, yet the representative ought to have been summoned; and he held the property to be changed. A case was made, but I could not hear what became of it. Lord C. J. Eyre was a great lawyer. It would be strange that a distress should be taken upon a man's goods without hearing him, and it would make great confusion in the administration of assets: he may have paid or retained judgment debts, prior to this distress for the rate." Mr. Gould said, that if the want of a demand from the representative was insisted on, he could not pretend to maintain the case. Mr. J. Denison and Mr. J. Wilmot said, that this was an essential circumstance. And by the Court (Lord Mansfield, C. J., and Mr. J. Forster, being absent), judgment was given for the plaintiff.

No action of debt lies for a poor-rate. (a)

(a) This remedy is sometimes given by a local act. In such case, notice of the rate need not be averred. Robinson v. James, 20 L. J. 236, Q. B.

15. Payment of Rate, and enforcing by Distress, &c.

Servant of ambassador, when not privileged from distress.

Novello v. Toogood, 1 B. & C. 554; 2 D. & R. 833. Where the servant of an ambassador did not reside in his master's house, but rented and lived in another, part of which he let in lodgings, his goods in that house, not being necessary for the convenience of the ambassador, are liable to be distrained for poor-rates. Abbott, C. J. "I do not know how the privileges of an ambassador can be better defined than by laying it down as a principle that they extend only to what is necessary to the personal convenience, the dignity and the religion, of the ambassador himself."

Under a local act, goods of a tenant may be taken for a rate on the landlord

By a local act regulating the poor-rates of the parish of St. Martin in the Fields, the goods of any person occupying apartments, or a ready furnished house, may be distrained and sold for an assessment made on the landlord, and under a warrant against the landlord's goods; and it is not necessary to prove that the landlord had been previously summoned. Peppercorn v. Hoffman, 9 M. & W. 618. The constable is not authorised to impound the goods on the premises, but he may remain therein a reasonable time.—Ib.

When a distress was wholly illegal the owner of the goods may support an action of trespass or trover, or may replevy; or if the sheriff refuse to replevy on tender of a sufficient replevin bond, he is liable to an action on the case. (Sabourin v. Marshall, 3 Bar. & Adol. 440.) Case is the remedy when there has been a seizure under several warrants, one of which is defective. (Governor of Bristol Poor v. Wait, 1 Adol. & El. 264); and see further, ante, 356.

15. Payment of Rate, and enforcing by Distress, &c.

Remedies for an illegal distress.

The statute of Mailbridge extends to goods distrained for poor-rate.

In an action against an overseer or other person for taking a distress for a poor-rate, the defendant may plead not guilty; and notwithstanding the general rules as to pleading the special matter, the defendant may prove that the goods seized were the property of the party assessed, and collusively sold to the plaintiff. (Haine v. Davey, 4 A. & E. 892).

An overseer in action for taking a distress may plead not guilty.

16. Rate for Taxing others in Aid.

16. Rate for Taxing others in Aid.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 3, "If the said justices of peace do perceive that the inhabitants of any parish are not able to levy among themselves sufficient sums of money for the purposes aforesaid, that then the said two justices shall and may tax, rate, and assess, as aforesaid, any other of other parishes, or out of any parish, within the hundred where the said parish is, to pay such sum and sums of money to the churchwardens and overseers of the said poor parish, for the said purposes, as the said justices shall think fit, according to the intent of this law: and if the said hundred shall not be thought to the said justices able and fit to relieve the said several parishes not able to provide for themselves as aforesaid, then the justices of peace, at their general quarter sessions, or the greater number of them, shall rate and assess as aforesaid any other of other parishes, or out of any parish within the said county, for the purposes aforesaid, as in their discretion shall seem fit."

Anon. Fol. 25; 1 Nol. P. L. 241. In one parish there were two vills, and the justices recite in their order that one of the vills was very rich, and the other very poor; and further, that the vill which was rich did not pay half so much to the poor as the poor vill did. Objected, one vill ought not to contribute to another, because the statute mentions parishes only. 2. The reason given for charging the rich vill to contribute to the poor vill is uncertain; viz. because they do not pay half so much as the poor vill does, without showing that either vill pays anything to the poor. By the Court: "As to the first objection, surely this will come within the equity of the statute, though the statute only makes mention of parishes; and it is highly reasonable that one vill should contribute to another in the same parish. But this order must be quashed on the second objection, for the uncertainty."

A vill is within the equity of the statute.

Rex v. St. Helen's, Worcester, 2 East, 417. An order for taxing one parish in aid of another was held well; although the two parishes, together with others, were incorporated for the maintenance of their poor, with fixed quotas of contribution between each other, under special officers, who were empowered to purchase land for the erection of poor-houses, and for a burial-ground; there being a proviso in the act, that nothing therein should repeal or lessen the power of justices "to tax parishes in aid of others by virtue of the 43 Eliz. as fully as if this act had not been made."

One of several incorporated parishes may be taxed in aid.

Rex v. Griesley, Sett. & Rem. 259. The sessions rated the adjacent parishes: quashed, because the statute appoints it to be done by the two justices, and hereby they prevent an appeal. (See Dimchurch v. Eastchurch, 2 Salk. 480.)

The sessions cannot rate in aid.

St. Mary's v. St. Peter and Paul's, in Marlborough, 2 Str. 1114; 1 Bott, 406. Two justices order the overseers of St. Peter and Paul's to levy a sum towards the maintenance of the poor of St. Mary's. But the order was quashed by the Court; because the justices had delegated their power to the overseers: whereas by the statute they themselves are to make the rate on all, or on particular persons.

The assessment must be by the justices, and they cannot order the overseers to do it.

16. Rate for Taxing others in Aid.

Mandamus to make such rate.

In this case a mandamus was moved for to the justices, to make a rate for the support of the poor of the parish of St. Mary's, which was opposed, because the parish officers ought to make the rate, and the justices are only to sign it. To which it was answered, that this motion was grounded on this clause of the statute; and thereupon a mandamus was granted, directed to the justices; and as this is a matter of right, they ought to make a return. (16 Vin. Abr. 416.)

Justices, not overseers, must make it.

The justices are to make the taxation, and leave it to the churchwardens and overseers to levy it. (2 Salk. 480.)

The rate in aid may be on particular persons.

Resolved, that the justices may impose the charge upon any of the inhabitants of the neighbouring parishes, and are not obliged to put a general tax upon the whole parish. (Comb. 309; 1 Vent. 350; Fol. 29.)

The place must be different from the parish on the face of the order.

Either particular persons, or the whole parish, (Dimchurch v. Eastchurch, 2 Salk. 481,) may be charged.

It has been decided also, that it should appear by the order that the place on which the rate is made is not within the parish in aid of which it is assessed, and that this is necessary, although the names of both appear on the face of the order and are different. Rex v. Boroughfen, 1 Nol. P. L. 246. But in Rex v. St. Helens, 1 Nol. P. L. 246, (n.) Lord Ellenborough observed, that the diversity of name imports diversity of place, unless the contrary be shown. Anon. Fol. 25.

Several persons may be assessed.

Rex v. Boroughfen, Fol. 29; 1 Barnard. B. R. 122. There was a taxation of several persons in a parish: objected, that it should be of all the persons in a particular place or parish. The court thought it unreasonable that several persons in a parish should be charged, and not all, but that the words of the act are very strong; and did not quash the order for this objection.

The parishes must be in the same hundred.

St. Benedict v. St. Peter's, Fol. 31; 1 Bott, 409; 11 Mod. 269. Motion to quash an order on the parishes of St. Stephen and St. Mary Magdalen, in Norwich, in aid of the parish of St. Benedict, which was not able to maintain its own poor. Objection: these parishes are not in the same hundred; they are in the county of the city of Norwich, where there is no hundred, so the justices have no jurisdiction, though the sessions have in such case. Order quashed.

And so it must appear in the order.

In Boroughfen v. St. Jones, Fol. 27, 31; 1 Bott, 402, it did not appear upon the order that the parish which is charged to aid the other parish is within the same hundred. And it was quashed by the whole court.

Any division which is equivalent to a hundred is within the equity of the statute.

Rex v. Milland, 1 Burr. 576. Two justices tax the inhabitants of the tithing of Milland in aid of the parish of St. Peter's, Cheesehill, in the same county. The sessions stated that the tithing of Milland and the parish of St. Peter's, Cheesehill, both lie in the same liberty of the soke where the said parish lies. A soke substantially is a hundred, though called by another name. The court held they were not restrained to the particular word hundred, but it is sufficient if it be signified by any word equivalent. And the orders were affirmed.

Justices cannot rate in aid of a parish out of their jurisdiction.

In Rex v. Holbeche, 4 T. R. 778, it was determined that county justices cannot rate a parish within their jurisdiction in aid of another parish lying within a borough which has an exclusive jurisdiction.

The order must be for a time limited.

Rex v. St. Mary's in Marlborough, 2 Stra. 700; 1 Bott, 406. An order to contribute so long as we the said justices shall think fit must be quashed; for the discretion that is left in the justices is not to make a perpetual order, which this would be.

The sum may be imposed in gross for a year.

Rex v. Knightly, Comb. 309; 1 Bott, 399. A sum in gross was taxed upon a neighbouring parish for a whole year. This was objected to as unreasonable, because their ability may change; but the order was confirmed.

The order must be to raise a certain.

Rex v. Telscombe, 1 Stra. 314; 1 Bott, 403. By the court: the order for the contributory parish to make a rate at 6*d.* in the pound is ill for uncertainty; it should have been to raise such a sum certain.

The sum may be in gross.

St. Peter and Paul in Marlborough, 2 Stra. 1114; 1 Bott, 406. An order was made to contribute 60*l.* for the maintenance of the poor of the other parish. An objection being made to their ordering such a gross sum, the court held it in that respect to be well.

16. Rate for Taxing others in Aid.

County contributory.

And by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 3, if the said hundred shall not be thought by the said justices able and fit to relieve the said several parishes not able to provide for themselves as aforesaid, then the justices at their general quarter sessions, or the greater number of them, shall rate and assess as aforesaid any other of other parishes, or out of any parish within the county, &c.

The sessions may charge parishes out of the hundred, although two justices have not adjudged that the parishes within the hundred are unable to contribute.

Rex v. Percivall, 1 Stra. 56. Order of sessions, reciting that the parish is not able to maintain its own poor, nor any other parish within the hundred to contribute, therefore the justices at the sessions tax other parishes in another hundred. It was insisted that the statute gives no authority to the sessions to charge people out of the hundred till two justices have inquired whether any parish in the hundred can contribute. Parker, C. J. "I do not see to what purpose it would be for the two justices to make an order only to adjudge that no parish within the hundred is able to contribute. We will presume the sessions is satisfied of that, and if the two justices should make such an adjudication, yet the sessions must inquire into the truth of it; and if no order appear which charges any parish within the hundred, it is a sufficient ground for the sessions to act. If the two justices had charged any parish within the hundred, that would have stopped the sessions from proceeding; and the sufficiency of the hundred depends on this, whether two justices have ever charged the hundred. If the said hundred shall not be thought by the said justices able,—that is, if the two justices do not adjudge it so. If two justices should adjudge the hundred not able, yet, if other two justices adjudge the contrary, their charge would be good, and the sessions be ousted of their jurisdiction, notwithstanding the first adjudication." Eyre, J. "Here are two jurisdictions, that of the two justices and that of the sessions, and both are original jurisdictions. They are different in all respects, for the two justices have no power out of the hundred, nor the sessions within it. There need be no appeal from any adjudication of two justices, for that would be to appeal from a nullity." And the order was confirmed.

Rex v. Eastchurch, 1 Bott, 410. It was decided by Holt, C. J., that the sessions cannot make an original order on a parish within the hundred.

1. Of Overseers' Accounts, what to be delivered, and passing same.

Accounts of monies received under different statutes to be kept, examined, and passed.

The funds which are placed at the disposal of the parish authorities, for the provision of the poor, though arising chiefly from rates, are augmented by receipts from various sources besides the poor rates, which render it expedient that detailed accounts should be kept, and that they should be balanced and passed at different periods. Thus, the churchwardens and overseers are to account to the quarter sessions for all monies which they may receive under 5 Geo. I. c. 8, authorising levies on the property of husbands and parents who leave their children on the parish; and for what they may receive under 17 Geo. II. c. 20, authorising levies in certain cases on the property of lunatics. And see 7 Jac. I. c. 3, as to accounts of monies charitably given to bind out apprentices.

By the militia act, 43 Geo. III. c. 47, s. 21, the overseers were directed to give an account of allowance made to militia men, &c.; but by the 60th section of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, so much of the statutes that required relief to be given to the wives and families of substitutes, hired men, or volunteers in the militia, are repealed.

Guardians' accounts.

Proportion for each parish.

At the monthly meeting required by the 24th section of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, it is by the same section enacted, "That the treasurer shall produce, fairly written, one account of the debt incurred in the preceding month, for utensils and materials for the purpose of manufacture, and for furniture, alterations, or repairs of the buildings, and also for the salary or allowance to the governor or treasurer, and servants (if any), in which account the rent of such house or houses, buildings, and premises, if the same shall be rented, shall be charged in the month next after such rent shall become due, according to the terms of the agreement for taking the same; which account, when settled and agreed to, shall be signed by the said guardians attending such meeting: and the sums to be paid by each of such parishes, townships, and places, on that account, shall be settled and adjusted at such meeting, in proportion to the sums paid by each of such parishes, townships, and places, on account of their poor, on a medium of three years next preceding the date of such agreement (to be settled and ascertained at such first monthly meeting, in the manner to be specified by the said agreement so to be entered into for uniting as aforesaid, and according to the mode or form and table contained or referred to in the said schedule, No. XV.) and in like manner, and in the like proportions, at every succeeding monthly meeting: and the money shall be then, or within one week after, paid into the hands of the said treasurer, to be by him applied in discharge of the several articles and debts contained in such account: and the said treasurer shall also at the same time produce, fairly written, one other account of the victuals, beer, firing, and other necessaries, for the use and maintenance of the poor, and of the governor, at such house or houses, and all other incidental expenses; which shall be then accounted for and proportioned by the said guardians according to the number of persons which shall have been sent from each of the said respective parishes, townships, and places, and for the time they shall have resided in such house or houses within such month, according to the mode or form and table, and in the manner for that purpose also mentioned in the said schedule No. XVI.; and the sum due from each parish, township, or place, shall be specified at the foot of such account, which shall, when settled and agreed to, be signed by such guardians or the major part of them, and be afterwards inspected by the visitor, if not a guardian, and allowed by him, if he shall approve thereof: and in case default shall be made in payment of the respective sums so proportioned to be paid in respect of any such parish, township, or place, for seven days after the same shall be so settled and proportioned, and the money demanded, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace for the limit where such house or houses shall be situate, upon complaint made to him upon oath of such default, to levy the said respective sums to be settled and proportioned as aforesaid, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of any guardian of the poor for any such parish, township, or place, making such default: and at the end of every year the account shall be finally closed, and the balances paid and received, according to the mode prescribed by the said schedule, No. XVI."

III. c. 83. Assuming that he has no right to appeal, or that the time for appeal is gone by, he may have other good reason for inspecting the books. He has a right to see what has been done, and the Court of King's Bench will grant a mandamus, commanding the guardians, &c. to allow such inspection. Ante, 213.

Overseers' Accounts.

By the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 47, it is enacted, "That every person having the receipt or distribution of the monies assessed for the poor in any parish or union, or holding any books or goods relating thereto, shall once in every quarter, in addition to the annual account now by law required, and where the rules of the commissioners shall have come in force, then as often as the said rules shall direct, but not less than once in every quarter, render to the guardians, auditors, or other persons as by any statute or custom, or the said rules, may be appointed to audit such accounts, or in default of any such guardian, auditor, or other person being so appointed, then to the justices at their petty sessions, an account in writing of all monies and things committed to their charge, or received or expended by them on behalf of any such parish or union, and if required shall verify on oath the truth of the same, or subscribe a declaration to the truth thereof: and all balances due may be recovered in the same manner as any penalties and forfeitures are recoverable under this act: the proceeding not to exonerate surety."

accounts; and such auditor shall, four times in every year, that is to say, within thirty days after Lady-day, Midsummer-day, Michaelmas-day, and Christmas-day, audit the accounts of the union and of the parishes comprised therein, according to the laws in force for the time being for the administration of the relief of the poor. A form of certificate of allowance is given.

An indictment for not accounting must show a proper order for it, but personal service of the order not necessary.

Reg. v. Crossley, 2 P. & D. 319; 10 A. & E. 132. An indictment stated that the Poor Law Commissioners duly made an order that the auditor of a union should audit the accounts four times every year, viz., within thirty days of Lady-day, Midsummer, Michaelmas, and Christmas days, respectively; that a copy of this order was duly sent to the defendants, overseers of a township in the union; that it was the duty of the defendants to account to the auditor when the commissioners should order; that the defendants were required by the auditor to account within thirty days of Christmas-day, and refused. Other counts charged the defendants with a breach of duty in not accounting to the auditor when requested by him. This indictment is not sustainable under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 47, as the first count does not allege that the commissioners had made any order that the defendants should account at the specified periods, and as the act does not oblige them to account at the request of the auditor, a breach of which alleged duty was the offence charged in the other counts. The Poor Law Commissioners may be described in an indictment by their style of office. The averment that their order was sent to the defendants is sufficient under the 18th section, personal service of the order not being necessary.

These accounts are independent of and distinct from the final account which the overseers are bound to make at the expiration of their office.

The 7 Jac. I. c. 3, which entrusts them with the disposition of charitable donations given for the binding out of apprentices in places not corporate, requires that they shall, once every year in Easter-week, or within one month after Easter-day, make a true and perfect account before two or more justices of all sums employed by them in binding apprentices under that act, and of all bonds and obligations for payment of such sums, and of all monies remaining in their hands not employed; and at (or within ten days after) making the account, deliver to their successors all such obligations, bonds, and money remaining unemployed.

Accounts on going out of office to be submitted to justices.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, "The churchwardens and overseers so to be nominated, or such of them as shall not be let by sickness or other just excuse, to be allowed by two such justices of peace, or more, as is aforesaid, shall meet together at the least once every month in the church of the said parish, upon the Sunday in the afternoon, after divine service, there to consider of some good course to be taken, and of some meet order to be set down in the premises; and shall within four days after the end of their year, and after other overseers nominated as aforesaid, make and yield up to such two justices of peace as is aforesaid, a true and perfect account of all sums of money by them received, or rated and *sessed and not received, and also of such stock as shall be in their hands or in the hands of any of the poor to work, and of all other things concerning their said office; and such sum or sums of money as shall be in their hands, shall pay and deliver over to the said churchwardens and overseers, newly nominated and appointed as aforesaid; upon pain that every one of them absenting themselves without lawful cause as aforesaid, from such monthly meeting for the purpose aforesaid, or being negligent in their office, or in the execution of the orders aforesaid, being made by and with the assent of the said justices of peace, or any two of them before mentioned, to forfeit for every such default of absence or negligence, twenty shillings."

sums of money or stock which shall be behind upon any account to be made as aforesaid, rendering to the parties the overplus; and in defect of such distress, it shall be lawful for any such two justices of the peace to commit him or them to the common gaol of the county, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until payment of the said sum, arrearages, and stock: and the said justices of peace or any of them, to send to the house of correction or common gaol such as shall not employ themselves to work, being appointed thereunto as aforesaid; and also any such two justices of peace to commit to the said prison every one of the said churchwardens and overseers who shall refuse to account, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until he have made a true account, and satisfied and paid so much as upon the said account shall be remaining in his hands."

Parish officers shall make up and deliver their accounts to their successors.

The requisites of such accounts.

17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 1. "The churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall yearly and every year, within fourteen days after other overseers shall be nominated and appointed to succeed them, deliver in to such succeeding overseers a just, true, and perfect account in writing, fairly entered in a book or books to be kept for that purpose, and signed by the said churchwardens and overseers hereby directed to account as aforesaid, under their hands, of all sums of money by them received, or rated and assessed and not received, and also of all goods, chattels, stock, and materials that shall be in their hands, or in the hands of any of the poor, in order to be wrought, and of all monies paid by such churchwardens and overseers so accounting, and of all things concerning their said office. And shall also pay and deliver over all sums of money, goods, chattels, and other things, as shall be in their hands, unto such succeeding overseers of the poor; which said accounts shall be verified by oath, or by the affirmation of persons called Quakers, before one or more of his majesty's justices of the peace, which said oath or affirmation such justice or justices is and are hereby authorised and required to administer, and to sign and attest the caption of the same at the foot of the said account, without fee or reward. And the said book or books shall be carefully preserved by the churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, in some public or other place in every parish, township, or place; and they shall and are hereby required to permit any person there assessed, or liable to be assessed, to inspect the same at all seasonable times, paying sixpence for such inspection; and shall, upon demand, forthwith give copies of the same or any part thereof to such person, paying at the rate of sixpence for every three hundred words, and so in proportion for any greater or less number." (a)

Books may be inspected, paying 6*d*., and copies taken, paying 6*d*. for three hundred words.

Penalty on parish officers not accounting as this act directs.

Sect. 2. "In case such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or any of them, shall refuse or neglect to make and yield up such account, verified as aforesaid, within the time hereinbefore limited or appointed, or shall refuse or neglect to pay and deliver over such sum or sums of money, goods, chattels, and other things in their hands, as by this act is directed; in either of the said cases, it shall and may be lawful to and for any two or more justices of the peace to commit him or them to the common gaol until he or they shall have given such account, or shall have paid or yielded up such monies, goods, chattels, and other things in their hands as aforesaid."

Accounts of churchwardens and overseers of the poor to be submitted by them to two or more justices at a special sessions.

By 50 Geo. III. c. 49, s. 1, after reciting 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, and 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 1, and that two or more justices should be empowered to examine and correct, and to allow and approve every such account before the same shall be signed and attested, it is enacted, "That in all cases where any such account is required to be made and yielded, and to be signed and attested as aforesaid by virtue of the said last recited act, every such account shall be submitted by the churchwardens and overseers to two or more justices of the peace of the county, dwelling in or near the parish or place to which such account shall relate, at a special sessions for that purpose to be holden within the fourteen days appointed by the said last recited act for delivering in such account; and such justices shall and they are hereby authorised and empowered, if they shall so think fit, to examine into the matter of every such account, and to administer an oath or affirmation to such churchwardens and overseers of the truth of such account, and to disallow and strike out of every such account all such charges and payments as they shall deem to be unfounded, and to reduce such as they shall deem to be exorbitant, specifying upon or at the foot of such account every such charge or payment and its amount, so far as such justices shall disallow or reduce the same, and the cause for which the same is disallowed or reduced; and it shall be lawful for such two or more justices, and they are hereby required to signify their allowance and approbation of any such account under their hands, and to sign and attest the caption of the same at the foot of such account, in manner directed by the said last recited act: and in case such churchwardens and overseers or any of them shall refuse or neglect to make and yield up or to submit such account, or to verify the same by oath as aforesaid, or to deliver over to their successors within ten days from the signing and attesting such accounts, any goods, chattels, or other things, which on the examination and allowance of such account in manner aforesaid shall appear to be remaining in the hands of such churchwardens or overseers, it shall and may be lawful for any two or more justices of the peace to commit him, her, or them, to the common gaol, until he, she, or they shall have made and yielded such account, and verified the same as aforesaid, or shall have delivered over such goods, chattels, and other things which shall appear to be so remaining in his, her, or their hands as aforesaid; and in case such churchwardens or overseers, or any of them, shall refuse or neglect to pay to their successors, within fourteen days from the signing and attesting such account, any sum or sums of money or arrearages which on the examination and allowance of such account in manner aforesaid shall appear or be found to be due and owing from such churchwardens or overseers, or any of them, or remaining in their hands, it shall and may be lawful for the subsequent churchwardens and overseers, by warrant from any two or more justices of the peace, to levy all such sum or sums of money by distress and sale of the offender's goods, rendering to the parties the overplus; and in default of such distress, it shall be lawful for any such two justices of the peace to commit the offender or offenders to the common gaol of the county, there to remain without bail or mainprize until payment of such sum or sums of money or arrearages as aforesaid."

Penalty for neglect, &c.

The above provision, by s. 6 of the same statute, is restrained from affecting parish officers exempted under local acts from rendering such accounts.

It is discretionary with the justices to commit an overseer refusing to account.

It is not imperative on the justices to commit an overseer who refuses to account. A very old and infirm man was elected churchwarden, but never sworn in, and although he signed the poor-rates, he had never interfered in their collection, or received any of the parish monies. He rendered no accounts, but the justices refused to commit. On an application to the King's Bench for a mandamus to compel them to commit, it was held, that although it was the duty of the party to render some account, as the statute required an account of monies rated and assessed and not received, and of all things concerning the office, yet the statute does not compel, but only authorises the justice to commit, and as the justices had exercised a discretion, the rule as to them was discharged with costs. (Rex v. Justices of Norfolk, 4 B. & Ad. 238; 1 Nev. & Man. 67.)

The 50 Geo. III. c. 49, which requires churchwardens and overseers to submit their accounts to two justices at special sessions within the fourteen days appointed by the 17

Lester's case, 16 East, 374. Lester, late overseer of Paddington, was in custody under a warrant by two justices for not delivering in his accounts to the succeeding overseers within fourteen days from their appointment. It was contended, that the 50 Geo. III. c. 49, which directs the accounts to be submitted to two justices at a special sessions, within the fourteen days appointed by the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, was substituted for the obligation to deliver them over to the succeeding overseers. By the 50 Geo. III. the overseers who refuse or neglect to submit the accounts to the justices, are made liable to be committed; if, therefore, they have fourteen days allowed them for submitting their accounts to the justices, how can they be required within that time to deliver them over to the succeeding overseers? The duty imposed by one act is inconsistent with and would interfere with the other. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The provision in the 50 Geo. III. seems rather to apply to the manner of examining the accounts when yielded, leaving the accounts still as before to be delivered over to the succeeding overseers; but they are also within the fourteen days to be submitted to the justices for examination. An ulterior means is afforded of investigating them before the justices; the act only means that they shall be exhibited to the justices; it is, therefore, for a different object. It is very expedient that the succeeding overseers should have the accounts delivered in to them immediately from the former overseers, which is the object of the 17 Geo. II.; then the 50 Geo. III. directs that the account so to be delivered shall be submitted to the justices to be examined and approved by them; that, therefore, is manifestly cumulative." Le Blanc, J. "The churchwardens and overseers are to deliver in to the succeeding overseers their accounts verified on oath before one or more justices, who are to sign and attest the same; that is provided for by the 17 Geo. II. By the subsequent act, the accounts are to be submitted to two or more justices at a special sessions; and power is given them to examine and approve such accounts, and they are required to signify their approbation of them under their hands, and then to sign and attest as directed by the former act. This provision, therefore, is perfectly consistent with the provision in the former act."

Overseers' Accounts.

Geo. II. c. 38. for delivering in the said accounts to the succeeding overseers, is not a substitution in lieu of that provision in the 17 Geo. II. but is cumulative; and if the overseer refuse to deliver in such accounts to the succeeding overseers within the fourteen days, he may be committed.

Rex v. The Justices of Colchester, 5 B. & A. 535; 1 D. & R. 146. The sessions may hear an appeal against the overseers' accounts, passed by two justices, pursuant to 17 Geo. II. c. 38, at a petty sessions; although they have not been examined and allowed at a special sessions, pursuant to 50 Geo. III. c. 49.

The sessions have jurisdiction to hear an appeal against overseers' accounts which have not been previously allowed at a special sessions, pursuant to 50 Geo. III. c. 49.

Goff's case, 3 M. & Sel. 203. Goff was committed, for that he having been collector of the rates for Richmond, refused to account and pay over the moneys collected by him to W. S., the person duly authorised to receive them; and he was committed until he should have made a true and fair account, and until such money as upon the said account should appear to be remaining in his hands should be paid to W. S.; and the keeper of the gaol was required to keep him until he should be discharged by due course of law. It was contended that the warrant was void for directing the detention till he should be discharged by due course of law. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If there was any uncertainty on the face of the commitment, I should have agreed with the argument; but coupling the premises with the conclusion, is it not in effect the same as if the warrant had directed the gaoler to detain the party until he had accounted? We must read the warrant as if the magistrates had in the conclusion recited over again the adjudication." Le Blanc, J. "Some precise authority ought to be shown to justify the court in adopting the objection made to this warrant. When the party has accounted and paid over the money, he will be entitled to be discharged by due course of law." The prisoner remanded. (This case qualifies the Mayor of Northampton's case, post 377.)

Commitment of a parish collector of the rates to gaol, there to remain until he should have made a true account, and until such money as should appear to be in his hands should be paid by him or his sureties, was held well, although it concluded by directing the gaoler to keep him until he should be discharged by due course of law.

Justices cannot commit a man for not accounting before the time allowed for rendering an account has elapsed. The accounts cannot be withdrawn from the two justices to whom they were first submitted, for the purpose of referring them to others; and if this be done, the allowance or disallowance of such others is void, and any unreasonable delay by such justices may be corrected by an application to K. B. But although the sessions cannot delegate their authority, they may remit such accounts to such two justices before whom they were first laid, as that is merely desiring them to execute their original authority. (Rex v. Townsend, Bott, 323; S. C. Vin. 417.) This was before 17 Geo. II. c. 38.

Rex v. The Justices of Middlesex, 1 Wils. 125; 1 Bott, 317. A mandamus was granted to swear Carr, late overseer, to the truth of his account, Justice refusing to swear an overseer.

Overseers' Accounts.

upon an affidavit made by Carr, that he had delivered in an account to the justices, and was ready to swear to the truth thereof, but that they had refused to swear him. It was objected, that the accounts consisted of gross sums, and the justices asked him some questions touching the particulars, which he refused to answer, and therefore they refused to swear him to his account. By the Court: "A mandamus is a matter of course, and we cannot refuse to grant it. If the justices have any legal objection, they may return it upon the mandamus. And if any person think himself aggrieved by the account, he may have his remedy by appeal."

to his account may be compelled by mandamus.

If a rated inhabitant makes an objection to the accounts, the justices at the special sessions are bound to examine them, and allow or disallow the items. If they refuse, and the fourteen days have expired, a mandamus will be granted. Reg. v. J. Middlesex, 8 Dowling, 89.

Justices must examine into objected items.

Rex v. Peake, 1 Keb. 574; 1 Bott, 308. The churchwarden was committed for refusing to account for all moneys received and disbursed by him, and of all such things as concerned his office. But upon an habeas corpus he was discharged; for if he be committed as overseer, it must be so expressed in the mittimus, although to be overseer be annexed to the office of churchwarden, for the justices have no power over him as churchwarden.

Churchwarden may be punished as an overseer: but in the commitment he must be called overseer.

By the stat. 23 Geo. III. for regulating the affairs of the poor of Birmingham, the guardians and overseers thereby appointed are directed to adjust their accounts at quarterly meetings of their own body; and an appeal is given to the sessions in respect of all matters done by virtue thereof: but the statute is silent as to any submission of the overseers' and guardians' accounts to magistrates, as required by the statute 50 Geo. III. c. 49; held, however, that a mandamus would lie to the guardians and overseers to pass their accounts in the manner required by that statute. Rex v. Warwickshire (Justices), post, 371.

Accounts under the Birmingham Act.

17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 3. "If any overseer shall die, or remove from the place for which he was appointed, or become insolvent, before the expiration of his office, on oath thereof made, it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace to appoint another in his stead, who shall continue in office until new overseers are appointed; and if any overseer shall remove as aforesaid, he shall, before such removal, deliver over to such churchwarden, or other overseer of the same place, his accounts, verified as aforesaid, with all rates, assessments, books, papers, sums of money, and other things concerning his office, under the like penalties as are inflicted by this act on an overseer refusing to do the same after the expiration of his office; and if any overseer shall die as aforesaid, his executors or administrators shall, within forty days after his decease, deliver over all things concerning his office to some churchwarden or other overseer of the same place, and shall pay out of the assets left by such overseer all sums of money remaining due, which he received by virtue of his said office, before any of his other debts are paid and satisfied."

Overseer dying or removing, his accounts to be delivered to churchwarden, &c.

When a parish extends into more counties than one, or lies partly within and partly without the liberties of any corporate place, the officers of such a parish shall make one account before the head officers of the place corporate, and one other before the justices of the county. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 9.

Parish within a borough.

Before the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, the first section of which prescribes the manner of preparing the accounts, a very general and unsatisfactory statement of them seems to have been tolerated. Thus where two justices committed an overseer till he should make a true account, he having produced an account in gross of his receipts and payments, and refused to produce his books or a particular account of the moneys received on rates assessed, or of the particular payments making up the sum charged in gross; the Court of King's Bench discharged him from custody, saying that the justices had no authority to commit in this manner by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, for that an account was confessed to have been tendered. (Rex v. Corrocke, 1 Show. 395; 1 Bott, 310; Walrond's case, ib. 314).

expended, is not such an account as the statute (17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 1) requires. The overseers must do a great deal more. They are to give to the succeeding overseers a just, true, and perfect account in writing, fairly entered in a book or books, to be kept for that purpose, of all sums of money by them received, or rated and assessed and not received. Now a mere balance sheet will not show what sums have been rated and assessed and not received. The overseers clearly ought to verify and deliver over the sort of account required by the very terms of the statute. Any usage to the contrary cannot dispense with the provisions of the act of parliament. Per Abbott, C. J. Rex v. Justices of Worcestershire, 3 D. & R. 299. And a writ of mandamus was issued to the justices to hear and determine a complaint against the ex-overseers for not properly accounting pursuant to the statute. Ib.

Rex v. Justices of Warwickshire, 2 D. & R. 299. Abbott, C. J. "One question is, whether these accounts have been passed: I mean passed so as to direct the attention of those who are to pass them to a particular item which is the subject of objection. I do not say that in the investigation of voluminous accounts, such as these, the attention of the parties is to be directed to the expenditure of every shilling which may have been paid by the guardians in the ordinary discharge of the duties of their office, such as trifling sums paid to paupers, or minute expenses of that description. The strong fact here alleged is, that a very large sum of money (a) had been paid for a particular purpose, the legality of which payment might be doubted. It is now supposed to have been paid under the sanction of the authority of the magistrates, before whom it was the duty of the guardians and overseers to pass their accounts, but against the opinion of many persons, who thought that such a disbursement ought not to have been made. It is alleged that the overseers and guardians were apprised of such objections, before they proceeded to pass these accounts. Under such circumstances, it was their duty, in seeking to have the allowance of such an item, to have directed the attention of the magistrates to that item, so that they might exercise their judgment upon the subject, and allow or disallow it, according as they were satisfied or dissatisfied with it. What is the allegation in this case? The party who makes the affidavit states that he was present when the accounts were submitted to the justices, but that the attention of the justices was not called to nor did they proceed to examine the whole of the items, but merely looked at the summary, in which was a lumping sum of 2000*l.* paid to the constables. There is no affidavit, on the other hand, to show that the parties inquired into or had their attention directed to the component parts of that sum. I am therefore clearly of opinion that we ought to make that part of the rule absolute which prays for a mandamus to the overseers and guardians to pass their accounts; and it will be competent for them to make a return thereto."

Mandamus will lie to compel guardians to make a fresh account, the former account having passed without calling the attention of the justices to a large objectionable item.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, poor-rates in hands of overseer are to be paid by his executors in preference to all other debts. (2 Bla. Com. 511.) As to the proof in bankruptcy against an overseer, see Ex parte Exleigh, 6 Ves. Jun. 811; Chitty's Eq. Dig. 725.

Payment of rate by executors.

By bankrupt.

By 17 Geo. II. ante, the overseers are required to permit any person assessed or liable to be assessed to inspect the accounts—a provision similar to that already considered, as to the poor-rate.

Inspection of accounts.

Rex v. Great Farringdon, 9 B. & C. 541. A rated parishioner has a right to inspect the accounts of the expenditure of the parish, kept by guardians of the poor, appointed under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83. Assuming that he has no right to appeal, or that the time for appeal is gone by, he may have other good reason for inspecting the books. He has a right to see what has been done, and the Court of King's Bench will grant a mandamus, commanding the guardians, &c. to allow such inspection. Ante, 213.

A rated inhabitant has a right to inspect guardians' accounts.

(a) The sum allowed was nearly 400*l.* for prosecuting a man for a libel on two justices, relating to their conduct in committing a pauper for returning to a parish from which he had been removed.

Overseers' Accounts.

The overseers are not bound to permit parties to take extracts from all parochial books.

Rex v. The Vestrymen of St. Marylebone, 6 N. & M. 600; 5 A. & E. 268. The court cannot compel the officers of a parish to permit the rate-payers of the parish to take copies of or extracts from a book containing all parochial rates and accounts of all moneys received for parochial purposes, but not containing any account of parochial disbursements, kept under the directions of a local act.—So although the parish have adopted the provisions of 2 Will. IV. c. 60, (the Vestry Act.)

One overseer cannot sue another for refusal.

One overseer cannot sue another for refusing an inspection of accounts. Wethered v. Calcut, ante. See Skingley v. Surridge, ante, and Rex v. J. Gloucestershire, post, 381.

2. What may be charged in accounts.

2. What may be charged in Accounts.

The overseers are entitled to take credit for all sums properly expended in the discharge of their duty, but not for disbursements to which the poor-rates and other moneys which come into their hands are by law inapplicable. See "Purposes of the Poor Rate," ante, 139.

Relief to the poor not registered.

By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 2, no parish officer shall (except upon sudden and emergent occasions) bring to the account of the parish any moneys he shall give to any poor person of the same parish who is not registered in the parish books as a person entitled to receive collection, upon pain of forfeiting 5*l.* And although the act does not go on to say that such items of expenditure shall be disallowed, the justices may very properly strike them out of the accounts.

Payments contrary to Poor Law Act to be disallowed.

By 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 89, "all payments, charges, and allowances made by any overseer or guardian, and charged upon the rates, contrary to that act, or at variance with any rule of the commissioners, are illegal; and every justice is hereby required to disallow such payments, &c.: provided always, that no allowance by any justice shall exonerate such overseer or guardian from any penalty or legal proceeding to which he may have rendered himself liable by having acted contrary to the rules of the commissioners, or to the provisions of that act."

What expenses overseer may charge. (a)

Overseers may justly charge to the parish whatever they have bonâ fide expended in providing work for the children of indigent parents, and for persons having no means of livelihood, in relieving those paupers who have claims upon the parish, and in the disposal of the stock raised for these purposes: indeed, it has been said that they may credit themselves with any money expended for the good and on the business of the parish. (Per Ashurst, J., Rex v. Micklefield, Cald. 509. (b)) But it appears by the same case, that an overseer proceeding through all the stages of an expensive law-suit, without the concurrence of a vestry, is personally liable. Of course they are entitled to charge whatever they have paid under the direction of a statute, or under any order upon them, or other legal process, as under 51 Geo. III. c. 79, and 52 Geo. III. c. 160, &c., or for costs of maintenance, removal, or appeal. (Vide Rex v. Essex, ante.) But it is not decided that the expenses of a law-suit, incurred by the officers without consulting the vestry, are chargeable in the account, unless, perhaps, where the emergency of the occasion allows no time for that precaution. In order to obtain the allowance of law expenses, the overseers must not have misconducted themselves in contracting them. In some instances the statutes which direct the expenditure of money authorise the overseers in express terms to charge it in their accounts: such are the enactments of 2 & 3 Anne, c. 6, s. 2; 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 1; 18 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 4; and 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 8.

Reg. v. Carpenter, 6 A. & E. 794. Overseers may charge in their accounts

(a) It has been held that commissioners of sewers may charge for law expenses bonâ fide incurred in the discharge of their duty, 1 B. & Ad. 223; and what waywardens may charge, Rex v. Fowler, 3 N. & M. 606.

the instalments of money borrowed under the authority of a statute for building workhouses, &c.; and if they neglect to pay it, a mandamus will lie to compel them to make a rate for the purpose, even after the lapse of many years.

2. What may be charged in Accounts.

for money borrowed and repaid under the authority of a statute.

It is presumed to be undeniable that the money advanced as an inducement to paupers, between whom an illicit intercourse has taken place, to marry, is a misapplication of the parish funds; and that if objected to on passing the overseers' accounts, such items must be disallowed. The question has never yet, it is believed, been before the superior courts; but it can hardly be said that expenses so incurred are for the relief of the poor, or can be classed among any of the objects to which those funds are by law applicable.

The expenses of a constable, in prosecuting an assault committed on him in the execution of his duty, cannot be paid by the overseer out of the poor-rate, and are not within the 18 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 4. Rex v. Bird, 2 B. & A. 522. See also Rex v. Seville, 5 B. & A. 180.

Overseers cannot charge in their accounts for money paid as a salary to one of the overseers.

Rex v. Glyde, 2 M. & Sel. 323, n.; In the accounts of the overseers, 12*l.* 10*s.* paid to W. as a salary was allowed. Lord Ellenborough. "This rule may be enlarged, subject to a case to be stated as to what the grounds for the allowance were, that we may ascertain that the salary was not meant as a pension to the overseer, which the law will not allow. We have no doubt on the face of the order that he has no title to a salary for any meritorious services, or for any services at all; but we would wish to relieve the parties if it has been paid in reality for the maintenance and keeping of the poor. Perhaps the best way will be to quash the order, and remit the case to the sessions to rehear the appeal."

The overseers are to be allowed only for their bare expenses. Per Aston, J., in Rex v. Lord Ashburnham, 2 Nol. P. L. 443, 462, n.

Salary of assistant overseer.

By 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, the overseers may be allowed the charge of a salary for an assistant. But such a charge was not allowed before the passing of that act, although made under the sanction of a vestry. Rex v. Welch, 1 Bott, 341; 4 Doug. 236.

Overseers cannot charge for making or collecting poor-rate, or making out list of defaulters, although authorised by a vestry.

Rex v. Gwyer, 2 Adol. & Ell. 216; 4 Nev. & Man. 158. The overseers are not entitled to charge in their accounts for making poor-rates, for making divisions of the same, for making copy of the same for the collectors, for payments to an accountant for examining, making up, and entering the accounts of the year, and list of defaulters on the rates, nor poundage for collecting the rates, although such charges had been authorised by the resolution of the vestry. This was an appeal against the accounts of a parish of great extent, with a population of 13,000 persons and an annual expenditure for the poor of 8000*l.* For some years there had been an assistant-overseer, but in the year in question the vestry resolved that none should be elected, but that the overseers should have power to call in what assistance they required; and the sessions found that the sums objected to were fair and reasonable. But it was held, that although these circumstances made it extremely reasonable that the sum should be allowed, that the sessions had no power to do so; and that the situation of overseers is like that of other persons upon whom the law casts burdensome duties without remuneration.

Defence of poor-rate.

The quarter sessions may be justified in refusing to allow the expenses of defending a poor-rate. Reg. v. Fouch, ante.

Defence of appeal against their accounts not allowed.

Under no circumstances can the expense of an appeal against the overseer's account be allowed out of the poor-rates. Rex v. Johnson, 5 A. & E. 340; 6 N. & M. 627.

Sessions no power to reimburse them before these statutes except in cases provided for by statute. Rex v. Tawney, ante; Rex v. St. Peter's, Chichester, Fol. 33: 1 Bott, 343; as a general rule, overseers cannot borrow money, unless under a special authority, and therefore a surety for the overseer is not liable for sums lent to the overseer and applied to parochial purposes. Leigh v. Taylor, 7 B. & C. 491.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 11, the succeeding overseers, by levying and getting in the arrears of any rate which their predecessors made, but from refusal or neglect of the party rated were unable to get in, might, and still may, reimburse the advances of those predecessors to the extent of the arrears so got in. And by 41 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 9, it is lawful to reimburse all sums which the preceding officers may have advanced during a time when no rate has been made, or where an appeal has been depending by which the whole rate might be affected.

So that, unless the non-payment of the rate have arisen from the remissness of the officers themselves, (which being no neglect or refusal of the party rated, comes not within statute 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 11,) or unless the officers, having made and collected the rate, have been imprudent enough to assess it too low, in which event the relief given by stat. 41 Geo. III. (G. B.) c. 23, s. 9, would not be applicable, the advances bonâ fide made by parish officers seem now to be secured to them, notwithstanding any accident by which they may have been unable to repay themselves during their year of office.

Before the passing of these statutes, where it appeared that an overseer had omitted to take credit in his account for a sum of money justly expended by him, it was held that the sessions had no authority, upon appeal, to order his successors to pay the money to his executor, although the vestry consented, (Rex v. Ware, Fol. 10; 10 Mod. 104,) for otherwise a man who came into the parish after the overseers' year, would be charged to the expense of that preceding year, while he had been contributing to the maintenance of other poor in another parish. (Id. Rex v. Goodcheap, 6 T. R. 159.)

But where one overseer is money out of pocket, and one of his co-officers has received a sufficiency to reimburse him, an order may be made on such officer. (Semble, Rex v. Limehouse, Fol. 22, 1 Geo. I.; and see 2 Nol. 457).

By the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, the two or more justices who took the account of the overseers, upon a balance found against them, might order all or any of them to pay such balance; and might issue warrants of distress to enforce the payment (see Rex v. Topsham 2 Salk. 484; Rex v. Bartlett, 1 Bott, 325; Rex v. Whitear, 1 Bott, 326); Rex v. Bill, cited by Lord Mansfield, in 2 Burr. 805, the overseers were indicted for not obeying the order of sessions in paying over the balance.

The 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 2, empowered any two or more justices to commit the overseers to gaol until they had given an account, and yielded up the moneys, goods, or other things in their hands.

And now by the 50 Geo. III. c. 49, s. 1, it is enacted, "that if the churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, refuse or neglect to deliver over to their successors, within ten days from the signing or attesting such accounts, any goods, chattels, or other things, which on the examination and allowance of such accounts shall be remaining in the hands of such churchwardens and overseers, the subsequent officers may, by warrant from any two or more justices, levy the same by distress and sale of the offender's goods, returning the overplus; and in default of such distress, the justices may commit the offender or offenders to the county gaol, to remain without bail or mainprize until payment." See construction, Lester's case, ante.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 6, the new officers, having received the book or books containing the account, they or one of them must keep such book or books in some public place; and shall permit any person there assessed, or liable to be assessed, to inspect the same at all reasonable times, for the fee of 6*d.*; and on demand shall give copies thereof, or of any part thereof, to such person, at the rate of 6*d.* for every 300 words, and in proportion for any greater or less number. Where there is a vestry within a parish or in a township, that assembly may direct in what custody the account shall be kept.

inhabitants, and taking copies thereof.

Balance must be paid over to successors.

Rex v. The Justices of Somersetshire, 2 Stra. 992. Mandamus to the justices to grant a warrant for levying the balance of the last overseers' account. They return, that there was such a balance, but that the vestry had ordered them to retain it, and employ an attorney to sue for some charity-money, and get it laid out for the benefit of the poor; that one Young was so employed, and the balance exhausted in fees; and that the overseers had engaged to pay Young: and for that cause they had refused to grant the warrant. But by the Court: "There must go a peremptory mandamus; for the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, says, the balance shall be paid over to the new overseers, under a penalty: and it is not in the power of the vestry to dispense with the statute."

One overseer may pay surplus in his hands to another overseer.

Malkin v. Vickerstaff, 3 B. & Ald. 89. A parish contained two divisions, each of which had separate overseers and separate rates, and their poor were also paid separately: the overseers of both divisions met at the end of every year, and in making up their accounts, if the overseers of the one had money in hand, they paid over the balance to the overseers of the other.—Held, that this was in effect one joint and entire parochial account, and that all the overseers were to be considered as joint overseers of the parish at large.

An overseer is discharged by his bankruptcy and certificate from a debt due in respect of a sum of money in his hands as overseer at the time of his bankruptcy, although this happen before the expiration of his year of office, before which time he cannot be compelled to account.

Rex v. Tucker, 5 M. & Sel. 508. Tucker and another were appointed overseers from Lady-day, 1815, to Lady-day, 1816; and Tucker received between Lady-day, 1815, and the end of January, 1816, 952*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, out of which he disbursed 770*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*, leaving a balance in his hands of 181*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* On the 6th February, 1816, a commission of bankruptcy issued against him, and he was declared bankrupt, and accounted, under the commission, for the balance; but having, before the commission, absconded from his house, the account books in his hands, as overseer, were taken away from his house by the churchwardens and overseer. At Lady-day, 1816, new overseers having been appointed, Tucker attended a vestry meeting, and made up his accounts by checking them with the account books in the hands of the overseers; from which it appeared that the above balance was due from him to the parish before he became bankrupt, and he offered to verify the account on oath. Afterwards he obtained his certificate; notwithstanding which, the justices issued their warrant upon the complaint of one of the overseers, that Tucker had not made and given in his account, and yielded up the moneys and things claimed by the parish to them, the succeeding overseers; under which warrant he was carried before the justices and committed. And upon a rule nisi for a habeas corpus, the doubt was, if his bankruptcy and certificate discharged the debt; and Rex v. Eggington, (1 T. R. 369) was cited, which, however, had not been approved of in Ex parte Exleigh (6 Ves. 811). It was also argued that an overseer is not like a mere trustee; he is indictable if he does not account and pay over the balance (Rex v. King, 2 Str. 1268; Rex v. Commins, 5 Mod. 179); though he cannot be called on to bring in his account until the year expires. (Rex v. Gibson, Bul. 20). Now, at the time of the defendant's bankruptcy, there was not any debt due from him as overseer for which he could be sued, nor any one to whom he could pay it until his successors were appointed; consequently this is not a debt proveable under the commission within the statutes of bankrupt.

But per Curiam, "The money in his hands at the time of the bankruptcy was debitum in præsenti, although he might only be accountable for it in futuro." It had been held, with respect to the land-tax collectors, that any of the parishioners might prove.

items, amounting to 42*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*; but the order of sessions did not direct Read to pay that sum over to the succeeding overseers. On Read's subsequent refusal to pay over this sum, an application was made to the defendants, as magistrates, to enforce payment under 43 Eliz. c. 2, ss. 2, 4; and 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 3; but they, conceiving they had no authority, declined to interfere. Lord Kenyon, C. J.: "It seems to me that these justices have jurisdiction in this case. The effect of the appeal was the ascertaining the quantum of the arrears; and then the statute attaches, and enables the magistrates out of sessions to enforce the payment of the balance." Grose, J. enforce payment of the balance of overseers' account after appeal, though the sessions do not make any order for payment.

Balance to be levied by distress, payment having been ordered by sessions on appeal.

Rex v. Hedges, 3 Salk. 533. On appeal against the allowance of the account, the sessions ordered the overseer to pay so much over, which they adjudged to be in his hands; and for not doing this they committed him. But by the Court: "They should have levied the arrears by distress and sale, and in default of distress, have committed him; for the sessions must execute their judgment in the same manner as the two justices must do."

For non-payment of balance there must be distress before commitment. (a)

Reg. v. Turner, 1 Bott, 341; Vin. Ab. Poor. (A), s. 4, n. If accounts are adjusted, and the overseers refuse to pay the balance, they cannot be committed immediately, but a warrant must issue to distrain upon them, and upon the return thereof there may be a commitment.

The warrant to levy the balance may be granted upon the application of one of the succeeding overseers, although the rest refuse to concur in such application.

Rex v. Pascoe, 2 M. & Sel. 343. On an application for a mandamus to two justices to grant a warrant of distress for levying 39*l.* 13*s.* 11½*d.* upon the late overseers of Ludyan, it appeared that their accounts for the year ending Easter, 1813, were submitted to the defendants for allowance, when the defendants disallowed several items, amounting to 43*l.* 1*s.* 11½*d.* and made an order for the said overseers so pay over the same to the present overseers. The late overseers appealed against the order, which appeal was dismissed for want of sufficient recognizance: but notwithstanding such dismissal, they refused to pay over the balance; whereupon application was made to the defendants for a warrant of distress, to levy the same on their goods. A summons issued, and the late overseers attended the defendants, when it appeared that they had paid over 3*l.* 8*s.*, but refused to pay the remainder; whereupon the defendants were required by one of the present overseers to issue their warrant of distress; but as the other two parish officers refused to concur with him in such application, the defendants thought they had no jurisdiction, for the want of the concurrence of the major part of the present churchwardens and overseers, and thereupon refused to issue their warrant. It was stated, that the overseer who made the request was not able to procure any other of his colleagues to concur with him. The Court said, that without imputing fraud in this case, they should be restraining the meaning of the statute too much if they did not put it into motion upon the application of any one of the overseers; that the mischief of a more strict construction would be great, for then the dissent of any one of the churchwardens and overseers would have the effect of suspending the statute. Per Curiam. Rule absolute.

Borough of Banbury, 1 Bott, 339. Where four towns lie in one parish, having each an overseer, and there is one rate for the whole, and one account, although each overseer collected and paid that of his respective town, and the inhabitants of each were respectively assessed by their respective overseers, the justices may order a distribution, where there is a want of money in some and a surplusage in others.

The Mayor and Churchwardens of Northampton, Carth 152, 1 Bott, 309 The mayor of Northampton committed the churchwardens, as overseers of the poor, for refusing to account, and the warrant of commitment concluded, until they be duly discharged according to law The court held the commitment void, because the warrant ought to conclude, there to remain until they should account, as the statute doth appoint And the difference is, where a man is committed as a criminal, and where only for contumacy for in the first case, the commitment must be until discharged according to law, but in the latter, until he comply and perform the thing required, for in that case he shall not lie till a sessions, but shall be discharged upon performance of his duty (See Goff's case, ante, 369)

Rex v Clapham, 1 Wils 305 A mandamus was granted to oblige the old overseer to deliver over the poor-rates to the new overseer, for, by the court, they are public books, and ought to be delivered over by one overseer to another, that all the parishioners may have access to them, and the overseer for the time being ought to have the custody thereof

Groome v Forrester, 5 M & Sel 314 Lord Ellenborough "This was a motion to set aside a verdict against the defendants, justices of Wenlock, in an action for false imprisonment This imprisonment complained of was the commitment of the plaintiff to the gaol at Shrewsbury, under the warrant of the defendants as magistrates, founded upon a conviction of the plaintiff as late overseer of the parish of Brosely, which conviction was had before the defendants, under the 17 Geo II c 38, against the plaintiff, for not delivering over to the succeeding overseers of the parish a certain book belonging to the parish, called the Bastardy Ledger, in breach of his duty under that statute, which required him to deliver over all such sums of money, goods, chattels, and other things, as should be in his hands, to such succeeding overseers In case of his refusal or neglect so to do, the statute (s 2,) authorises two or more justices of the peace to commit him to the common gaol, until he shall have paid and yielded up such moneys, goods, chattels, and other things in his hands The conviction, as far as relates to the withholding of the particular book in question, the offence charged in the information, is correct After finding him guilty thereof, it proceeds to adjudge that T——, the plaintiff and late overseer, for his offence aforesaid, (that is, in not delivering over the particular book, The Bastardy Ledger,) be forthwith committed to the common gaol at Shrewsbury, to be safely kept 'until he shall have yielded up all and every the books concerning his said office of overseer, belonging to the said parish' This is the adjudication, and the warrant of commitment follows the adjudication, and of course directed the gaoler to keep Groome until he should have yielded up all and every the books concerning his office of overseer, thereby, in effect, casting upon the gaoler the function of inquiring and determining what were 'all and every the books concerning the office of overseer,' upon the yielding up of which the gaoler was to discharge his prisoner, instead of requiring the gaoler to detain his prisoner (as it should

An overseer was committed for refusing to deliver over a certain book called The Bastardy Ledger, but he was committed 'until he should have yielded up all and every the books concerning his said office of overseer belonging to the parish The commitment is void have done) until he should have yielded up the particular book specified and described in the information, and for the non-delivery of which he was convicted. Such a commitment was certainly not authorised either by the letter or the spirit of the act of parliament, and subjected the prisoner to the risk of an imprisonment for an indefinite period, viz. until he had complied with a condition of greater extent than was imposed by the act of parliament; and where the gaoler who should have to detain him under the warrant had no adequate means of judging whether his prisoner should have, in fact, complied with the terms of such condition, and, of course, whether he was entitled to his discharge or not. This, it will be observed, is a conviction and commitment on the ground of a supposed contumacy; but the defendant could have been guilty of no contumacy in respect of the non-delivery of any other book or thing than that book which alone he had been required to deliver, viz. The Bastardy Ledger. The conviction and commitment, therefore, in respect of a supposed contumacy to any greater extent than that in which obedience had been previously required from him, must of course be unfounded. Previously to commitment for refusing to do a thing, there must have been a charge and proof, and the party cannot be committed 'until he does something,' which is not charged and proved upon him that he has previously refused to do. Assuming that the warrant is in this respect illegal and void, the question is, whether it be therefore void in toto; and if it be, whether the defendants, as committing magistrates, are liable to an action of trespass and false imprisonment for having committed the plaintiff thereupon. And that it is void in toto, the case of Milward v. Coffin, ante, is an authority; there Gould, J., in the absence of De Grey, C. J., said, 'It is fairly and candidly conceded, that if one of the rates be illegal, the whole warrant is bad; and I take the first to be illegal, for assessing the plaintiff beyond the extent of his occupation. All that related to the assessment of lands, not in the occupation of the plaintiff, was coram non judice; the justices therein exceeded their jurisdiction, and their determination is a nullity.' In 2 Inst. 52, there are to be found several good rules in respect to commitments: the fifth of which is, 'The warrant or mittimus, containing a lawful cause, ought to have a lawful conclusion, viz., and him safely to keep until he be delivered by law, &c., and not until the party committing doth further order.' Likewise, in 2 Inst. 591, there is a further rule: 'Now as the mittimus must contain the cause, so the conclusion must be according to law, viz., the prisoner safely to keep, until he be delivered by due order of law, and not until he that made it shall give other order, or the like.' The case of The Mayor and Churchwardens of Northampton (ante), is a leading case upon the proper form of conclusion of a commitment until a particular act should be done by the party committed. Bracy's case is an authority to the same effect; it is reported in 5 Mod. 308; 1 Salk. 348; 1 Lord Raym. 99; also in the margin of Carthew, 153, from which I cite it. One Bracy was committed by commissioners of the statute of bankrupts for refusing to answer; and they concluded their warrant, that he be committed to prison, there to remain, 'until he conform himself to our authority, and be thence delivered by due course of law;' and upon the return of a habeas corpus he was discharged, because this conclusion was not pursuant to the statute of bankrupts, and the Mayor of Northampton's case was cited for an authority. In Lord Raymond's report it is laid down, that if he had been committed 'until he should conform to their authority,' in the special matter, it had been good. And of that opinion was Lord Holt; and he said, that the word 'submit,' (which is the word in the statute, and not 'conform,') does not mean an act of humble submission, but only to make answer to the question proposed. In Salkeld's report, the court held the word 'conform,' instead of the word 'submit,' to be well enough, because it was of the same sense; but because the commissioners had other authorities besides that of examining, and it did not appear but that it might require a submission to them in other respects, and for that all powers given in restraint of liberty must be strictly pursued, and in this case they had but a special authority, and must not exceed it, they held the return naught. Yaxley's case, Carth. 291, was 'a commitment by the secretary of state, under the stat. 35 Eliz. for refusing to answer whether he was a Jesuit, &c., and on a habeas corpus he prayed to be bailed.' The exception to the commitment was, that the conclusion thereof was 'there to remain until he shall be from thence discharged by due course of law,' when the words of the statute are 'until he shall answer unto the questions:' and therefore the commitment ought to be special, according to the statute; and the Churchwardens of Northampton's case was cited and relied on; and for that objection the court held the commitment ill. Other cases might be cited to the same effect, such as Rex v. Hall, Cowp. 60. The foregoing cases are cases of discharge from commitment, on the ground of an illegality apparent on the face of the warrant. The two following cases, Baldwin and Wife v. Blackmore, 1 Burr. 595, and Crepps v. Durden, Cowp. 640, establish that in such case, that is, of warrants illegal upon the face of them, for an excess of jurisdiction in the magistrate, trespass is maintainable against the committing magistrate: and this was held in the latter case, although the conviction had not been quashed. In Baldwin and Wife v. Blackmore, a warrant to commit the wife, as an idle and disorderly person, for returning with her husband to the parish from whence removed, without a certificate, was holden to be void, and that trespass lay for the imprisonment under it. So, where the warrant ought to be to imprison for a month, and it is until discharged by due course of law. Crepps v. Durden, Cowp. 640, was a conviction in four penalties, for exercising his ordinary calling of a baker on a Sunday. As there can be but one offence on the same day, it was held an excess of jurisdiction, for which an action would lie before the convictions were quashed. There the question immediately before the court was, whether an objection could be made to the legality of a conviction before it was quashed, and it was held that it might. Upon these authorities, and the reason of the thing, we are obliged to pronounce that the commitment made in pursuance of the said adjudication in this case, as well as the adjudication itself, in respect to the imprisonment, being, in this particular, a clear excess of jurisdiction, was not warranted by law, and that the imprisonment thereunder was a trespass in the committing magistrates, for which this action is maintainable: which we cannot but regret, as the facts of the case would have authorised a commitment if the warrant had been framed in a manner conformable to the powers of the magistrates under the statute. The consequence is, that the rule nisi for setting aside the verdict must be discharged."

4. Delivering over Balance, Books, Chattels, &c.

The Court of K. B. will not, upon removal of an order of sessions allowing overseers' accounts, which is good upon the face of it, go into the merits of those accounts upon affidavit.

Rex v. James, 2 M. & Sel. 321. A rule was obtained for quashing an order of sessions, allowing the accounts of the overseers of Croydon. The order was general, allowing the accounts and dismissing the appeal, and ordering the appellants to pay 40*s.* costs. The defendants, in their affidavit, stated that these accounts contained sums in gross as monthly payments, without the items, some of which items were stated to be for charges illegal or excessive, and also for a salary to one of the overseers. Lord Ellenborough inquired "If there was any objection to the order upon the face of it, for otherwise the court would not go into the overseer's accounts upon affidavit. The sessions was the proper forum for deciding such matters: the time of the court would otherwise be absorbed in taking parish accounts." But it was urged that injustice might be done if there was no relief against accounts so made up as the present, without specifying any particulars; and Rex v. Battel, a recent case, was cited, where the court had granted relief against the overseers' accounts, upon a rule obtained upon affidavit that they contained a charge for an allowance paid to the overseer. Lord Ellenborough said, "If there is likely to be a defect of justice, the remedy must be by application to the legislature; for the court cannot enlarge the limits of its jurisdiction in order to supply a remedy; the sessions have jurisdiction over these matters; if, on the removal of the record by certiorari, it had appeared to be erroneous, this court would then have acted upon it." Rule discharged.

The reporters presume the case of Rex v. Glyde (ante), to be that alluded to in argument in the above case under the title of Rex v. Battel, which is printed by them in a note to the above case, and is stated to have been decided in Hilary Term, 1813. The rule for the certiorari was obtained upon an affidavit as above stated, but the case, as it appears, was decided upon objections apparent on the face of the order.

Secus, if illegal on the face of it.

But the court will disallow an item illegal on the face of it, without a special case, Rex v. Johnson, 5 A. & E. 340.

5. Appeals relating to overseers' accounts.

5. Appeals, &c., relating to Overseers' Accounts.

Appeal against the account must be to the next sessions.

The grounds of appeal must be stated in the notice, as in the case of an appeal against a poor-rate. See 41 Geo. III. c. 23, ante.

The 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 6, enacts, "That if any person shall find himself aggrieved by any act done by the said overseers or justices, he may appeal to the general or quarter sessions, whose order therein shall bind all parties."

And by 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, "If any person shall have any material objection to such account, or any part thereof, he may, giving reasonable notice to the churchwardens and overseers, appeal to the next sessions; but if reasonable notice was not given, then they shall adjourn the appeal to the next sessions; and the court may order and award to the party for whom the appeal shall be determined, reasonable costs, as in cases of settlement by 8 and 9 Will. III. c. 30." See the other part of this section, ante.

Corporations, &c.

And by s. 5, in all corporations or franchises, which have not four justices, persons aggrieved may appeal, if they think fit, to the next county sessions. See 1 Geo. IV. c. 36, ante.

The decisions respecting appeals against poor-rates will be found applicable in most cases when questions as to notice, the time of appealing, &c., arise upon appeals against overseers' accounts. See ante.

Where it is provided that appeals shall be first made to and determined by the governing body named in a local act, that course must be followed.

It may be expedient to repeat, that if the management of the parish poor be vested in the churchwardens, overseers, governors, and directors by a local act, which also gives an appeal to the body so constituted to any person aggrieved by any thing done under the act, and a subsequent appeal to the quarter sessions against their determination, if he is dissatisfied with it, this course of proceeding must be strictly pursued. See Rex v. Justices of Kent, 9 B. & C. 283, ante.

Removed by certiorari.

The order of the quarter sessions may be removed by certiorari, and objections apparent on the face of the order will be entertained.

An order of quarter sessions, on appeal against an account of overseers, is bad, if it does not appear, either by express averment or necessary intendment, to relate to the annual account, for otherwise it may relate to the quarterly account, which the overseers are directed to render by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 47, and in respect of which there is no appeal to the quarter sessions.

Reg. v. Spackman, 1 G. & D. 619; 2 Q. B. 301. The following was a material part of an order of the Wiltshire quarter sessions, made in October, 1839, upon appeal against the account of the defendants, as overseers of Bradford:—"On hearing the appeal of T. Savage, an inhabitant of Bradford, against the account of C. Spackman and the other overseers, &c., this court doth order that the following charges, &c., be disallowed." Lord Denman. "This order cannot be supported, unless it appear that the justices who made it had jurisdiction, and it is admitted that there was no jurisdiction unless the account appears to have been an annual account. Now it does not appear from the order what sort of account it was. There is another account to be rendered by overseers besides their annual account. It may be therefore that jurisdiction has been improperly exercised by the quarter sessions over an account which was not the annual account. This may have been the case consistently with this order, and it is not enough that the order could not have legally been made, unless it related to the annual account." Williams, J. "The argument in support of the order was not put higher than this—that it stood indifferent, upon the face of the order, whether it related to the annual or to the quarterly account, and that therefore, if we decided the order to be bad, it would only be by making intendments against it. But it is now settled law that it must not stand indifferent upon the face of an order of justices, whether they had jurisdiction or not—it must appear that they had. Here in one case they had jurisdiction, and in the other had not: either case is consistent with the order; it therefore does not show jurisdiction." Coleridge, J. "I am of the same opinion. The jurisdiction of the quarter sessions is confined to the annual account. Does this order of the quarter sessions refer to the annual account? It is said to be in the usual form, and it is said that down to the passing of the 4 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 47, no account of overseers, except the annual account, came before justices, and that there is nothing in that act to alter the usual form. That may be so, but forms grow out of the law, and, when the law is altered, forms must adapt themselves to the altered law. By the 4 Will. IV. there is another account to be rendered by overseers, over which the quarter sessions have no jurisdiction. We cannot tell to which of the two kinds of account this order relates. It is said that the recital in the order, that the account had previously been allowed by justices, shows that it could not be the new quarterly account, as the 47th section does not authorise the justices, before whom, in default of an auditor, the account is brought, to allow it, or to do any thing more than simply receive it. I do not agree in this construction of the section; I think the justices at petty sessions must have the same power with the auditor or other person for whom they are substituted, to 'examine, audit, allow or disallow' the account. This view is confirmed by what is directed as to paying over the balance of the account. The balance must mean the just balance which is found due after examination of the account." Wightman, J. "It is admitted that the quarter sessions had no jurisdiction unless this was the annual account of the overseers. The order contains no averment that it was the annual account; and though, before the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 47, it could have been no other account, yet now it may have been either the annual or the quarterly account. It is said that this order on the face of it relates to an account which had previously been 'allowed' by justices, and that therefore it must have been the annual account, because the justices under the Poor Law Amendment Act have no jurisdiction to 'allow' the account, although they are called on in default of the auditor or other person who is expressly authorised to allow it. If this construction is right, it would seem to follow that, where there is no auditor or other person appointed, the balance from the overseers cannot be called for until the end of the year, although, if there is such auditor or other person appointed, the balance may be called for directly. I think, therefore, the construction contended for is erroneous, and that this order is bad, as it does not appear, either by express averment or necessary intendment, to relate to the annual account, over which alone the quarter sessions can have jurisdiction." Order quashed.

An overseer may appeal against his co-overseer's accounts.

Upon an appeal against an overseer's accounts, it appeared that the appellant was a co-overseer with the respondent. It was objected that this was, in effect, an appeal against his own accounts. The sessions yielded to this objection and dismissed the appeal. Upon a rule for a mandamus, it was contended that the sessions had heard and determined the case, as they had examined a witness, quashed the appeal, and given costs to the respondent; and although they might have come to a wrong conclusion, yet, as they had decided the question, the mandamus ought not to be granted. But the court said, "that it was clear the justices had dismissed the appeal, not upon the merits, but because they thought they had no jurisdiction, which was a question of law; and if they were mistaken in that, the mandamus ought to go." It was then contended that one overseer could not appeal against the accounts of the other; that, although there were several individuals, their duties were not several, both having the same authority, and the same liabilities in the management of the poor. The court, however, were of opinion that the rule ought to be made absolute, and observed, that in this case it appeared each overseer kept a separate account; and it was clear each overseer may act by himself, and make separate disbursements, against which the other would have a right to appeal. It might happen, that one overseer might have grounds for appealing against the accounts of his colleague, which would be unknown to other persons. Besides, his being an overseer does not take away his right, as a parishioner, to appeal against the accounts of the other. The words of the act fully bear out this interpretation; and it is obviously for the benefit and protection of parishes that it should be so acted upon whenever a proper occasion presents itself. Rex v. The Justices of Gloucestershire, 1 B. & Adol. 1.

An appeal lies against the accounts of an assistant overseer.

Reg. v. Watts, 2 N. & P. 367; 7 A. & E. 461. On a case raising the question whether an appeal will lie against the accounts of an assistant overseer, the court said, "We see no reason to doubt that the account is the subject of an appeal. The assistant overseer is not the servant of the overseers of the parish, but of the vestry, from whom he directly receives his authority; an authority which may indeed be limited by the warrant of appointment, but which does not appear to be limited in the present case."

An appeal against overseers' accounts must be to the next general quarter sessions after the allowance of the accounts. The 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, in this respect limits the right of appeal given generally by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 6.

Rex v. The Justices of Worcestershire, 5 M. & S. 457. The overseers' accounts of the parish of Elmley Lovett, for the years 1814 and 1815, were allowed by two justices on the 31st March, 1815. Notice of appeal was given for the sessions to be holden on the 23d of April, 1816, at which sessions an appeal was entered; but the court refused to enter upon the merits, or to hear the appeal, on the ground that it came too late. And the question was, whether the appeal was in time. Lord Ellenborough. "In Rex v. Coode, (Cald. 464,) the Rex v. Lord Ashburnham was brought under the consideration of the court, and yet they came to a decision directly contrary to it; and where good sense and convenience are all on one side, one is almost led to regret that Sergt. Kerby's note of that case ever got into print. The plain meaning of the 17 Geo. II. in enacting 'that it shall be lawful to appeal to the next sessions,' where by a pre-existing act the appeal was without limitation of time, is to negative the power of appealing to any but the next. In Rex v. Coode, Lord Mansfield was of opinion that the 17 Geo. II. did confine the appeal, and the court agreed that they must decide that the statute had repealed the 43 Eliz. in this particular. I feel no inclination to disturb that decision, considering how much the public convenience is in its favour. I know not to what difficulties persons whose property is liable, and those who are bound to account, might be reduced, if we were to adopt a different construction. With respect to the objection, that the time may be too short to prepare for the appeal, if, upon any occasion, this should be made appear, the appeal may be lodged, and adjourned on a proper application." Bayley, J. "I think that the affirmative words of the 17 Geo. II. must be taken to imply a negative. If the statute had been silent as to the time of appeal, the 43 Eliz. would have attached; and it would have been open to the party to appeal at any time. But as the statute empowers the party to appeal to the next sessions, I think it virtually implies that he must appeal to the next sessions, and to no other." Abbott, J. "I agree that this rule must be discharged. The construction put on these statutes by my lord and my brother Bayley appears to be the true construction, conformably to the rule for the construction of acts of parliament so well laid down in the old cases, and adopted in Rex v. Coode."

Where overseers' accounts were not allowed till the last day that an effectual notice of appeal to the next sessions could have been given, and it did not appear when the party objecting had notice of such allowance: Held, that a notice of appeal to the next subsequent sessions for which an effectual notice of appeal could be given was good.

Rex v. Justices of Dorsetshire, 15 East, 200. Soon after the 17th of May, 1811, when the respondents ceased to be overseers, the account of Goddard's (one of the respondents) receipts and payments as overseer was submitted to the magistrates of the borough of Shaftesbury for their allowance, when Bowles objected to certain items, and stated, that if they were allowed he should appeal against the allowance; and thereupon the justices refused the allowance of the said account, but did not strike out the items objected to, alleging that the stat. 50 Geo. III. c. 49, was not imperative upon them, but only authorised them to examine the accounts of overseers if they thought proper. On the 8th of July, and not before, the account was verified on the oath of Goddard before two magistrates of the borough, and by them allowed; and the said 8th of July was the last day permitted by the practice of the sessions for giving notice of appeals to the then next sessions, which were holden in the same month of July: and the items objected to still remaining in the account, Bowles gave notice of appeal against such account and allowance to the next subsequent sessions holden on the 8th of October, at which sessions, the justices, conceiving that the deponent ought to have appealed at the former sessions, dismissed the appeal. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It seems to the court that in every view of the case the mandamus should go, whether this be a proceeding under the 43 Eliz., or under the 17 Geo. II.; for, supposing it to be under the 17 Geo. II., and supposing that statute in this respect to have repealed the 43 Eliz. (which from the cases cited seems by no means to be settled), still under the circumstances of this case, we think the July sessions could not be considered the next sessions for the purpose of appealing; for the allowance by the justices was on the 8th of July, the last day when any effectual notice of appeal could have been given; and it does not appear when the appellant had any notice of such allowance; and the transaction seems to carry with it the marks of design to defeat the appeal." Mandamus granted.

Time of appeal.

Reg. v. Watts, 7 A. & E. 461. Lord Denman. "The second point (as to the notice of appeal being in due time) may admit of some difference of opinion, but seems capable of being decided on principles of reason and convenience. Some cases have held that the time of allowance by the justices is that from which the time for giving notice must be calculated, (Rex v. Coode, Rex v. Worcestershire, ante.) The language of some others may be thought to import that every parishioner's right to appeal is kept alive as long as he is personally ignorant of the fact of such allowance. A strict adherence to either of these rules might obviously produce injustice; nor do we think that the cases, when fairly considered with reference to their circumstances, lay down either the one or the other. On the contrary, the court must on those occasions have had the words of the stat. 17 Geo. II. in their contemplation; which gives the right of appeal to the party grieved 'giving reasonable notice' to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace. The sessions have therefore to adjudge what notice is reasonable; which must depend on their usual practice. Still the word next, applied to the sessions, requires an interpretation; next to what period? Not to the period of examination by the vestry before allowance, because the justices upon their investigation, and before allowance, may have struck out every item to which parishioners feel an objection:—not to the allowance itself, because it may be unknown to all the parties interested;—nor to the fact of knowledge by any one disposed to appeal, because that would lead to an inconvenient inquiry into the particular knowledge of individuals, and might keep the officer's account subject to an appeal indefinitely. The only other period to which recourse can be had for this purpose is that when the parish had the opportunity of knowing the contents of the account. Thus, in Rex v. Thackwell, (post,) the time for giving notice was held to be properly reckoned from the time when the account was allowed and published. We think it may be correctly described as published at the time when it is deposited (according to the 1st sect. of 17 Geo. II.) with the churchwardens and overseers for public inspection, and the fact of depositing bonâ fide made known. In the present instance, the sessions have found that this was done on the 8th of May. Therefore, the June sessions, when the appeal was lodged, were the next sessions; and the notice was in due time. This makes it immaterial to inquire whether the appellant's affidavit of the time when he knew of the account was properly admitted; because the inquiry was completely immaterial. The court was consequently justified in entering on the merits of the appeal; and, having disallowed certain items, the rule for setting aside their judgment must be discharged." (a)

The "next" sessions, not the next after allowance by vestry.

But the next after accounts published.

Appellant's knowledge of the accounts.

Rex v. Thackwell, 4 B. & C. 62; 6 D. & R. 61; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 337. In this case the overseers of Monmouth went out of office on the 25th

The justices may respite the appeal,

(a) The accounts were allowed in vestry on the 2nd of April; and by the justices on the 3rd. Sessions were held on the 14th of April, and the notice of appeal must have been given on the 7th.

5 Appeals relating to Overseers' Accounts

March Their accounts were allowed by three justices on the 27th On the 7th April the next quarter sessions were held at Usk, thirteen miles from Monmouth On the same day, at two o'clock, when it was too late to enter an appeal, they delivered their accounts, allowed as aforesaid, to their successors At the following (Midsummer) sessions an appeal against the allowance of the accounts was entered, and respited, although the respite was objected to by the respondents, and at the Michaelmas sessions the order for the allowance was quashed Abbott, C J "It is quite clear that, under the circumstances of this case, the parties were not bound to appeal at the Easter sessions, and at the Midsummer, it was for the justices and not for us to decide whether it would be proper to respite the appeal to Michaelmas" Order of sessions confirmed

although the respondents do not complain of want of sufficient notice and object to the delay

Accounts must appear to have been allowed by the justices before the appeal

Rex v Bartlett, 2 Str 983 An order made at the sessions relating to accounts of overseers was moved to be quashed, because it did not appear that the accounts had been before the justices out of sessions, and they cannot come per saltum to the sessions On the other side it was said that it appeared there was an allowance, for the appeal is said to be against the disbursements and the allowance thereof, which the court will presume was regular But by the Court "It doth not follow that this was an allowance by two justices, for the parish might do it, and therefore, for want of jurisdiction, this order must be quashed"

A person has a right to appeal against all the accounts of the overseers though he has not been rated in every rate

In Reg v Gwyer, (ante, 373), it was contended that the appellant, not having been a rated parishioner during the whole of the year, could not appeal against such parts of the accounts as related to the expenditure before that period for which he was rated But the court decided that he might appeal against the whole account, because he had an interest in all the money that came to the hands of the overseer. As the surplus of that money was reduced, the subsequent assessments upon him would be probably greater in proportion, and, therefore, if there was an illegal application of the fund, he is not precluded from objecting to it

Churchwardens &c may appeal to quarter sessions against reductions made in their accounts

The 50 Geo III c 49, s 2, provides, "That if such churchwardens or overseers, or any of them, shall feel themselves, himself, or herself aggrieved by the disallowance or reduction of any such charges or payments, and be desirous of appealing against any order in that respect made by any such two or more justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for him, her, or them, to enter an appeal against such order at the next general or quarter sessions to be holden next after the tenth day for the making of such order, he, she, or they having first paid or delivered over to the succeeding churchwardens and overseers such sum and sums of money, goods, chattels, and other things as on the face of the account which shall have been submitted by him, her, or them to such two or more justices in manner aforesaid shall appear and be admitted to be due and owing from him, her, or them, or remaining in his, her, or their hands, and having also entered into a recognizance before one or more such justice or justices with two sufficient securities to be approved of by such justice or justices before whom such recognizance shall be acknowledged, in not less than double the sum or value in dispute, to enter such appeal at such next general or quarter sessions, and abide by such order as shall at that or any subsequent sessions be made on such appeal, and it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace assembled at such general or quarter sessions, on proof of the matters aforesaid, and on the production of such recognizance and proof of the same having been duly entered into, to adjourn such appeal if they shall see occasion, or to hear the same, and to examine into and to confirm or reverse such disallowance or reduction in the whole or in part, as to such justices at such sessions shall seem just, and in any such case the said justices at such sessions may (if they shall think fit) make an order that such churchwardens and overseers shall have the costs by them incurred upon any such appeal defrayed out of the poor-rates of the parish or place, and the order of the general quarter sessions in the execution of the powers given to them by this act shall be binding on all parties"

Power to adjourn

Costs

Sect. 3 provides, "That nothing herein contained shall take away or be construed to take away any power of appeal against any such account, by any other person entitled to appeal against the same by virtue of the said recited acts or either of them."

5. Appeals relating to Overseers' Accounts.

Sect. 4 enacts, "That every mayor, bailiff, or other head officer of every town or place corporate and city in Great Britain, or any two magistrates of such town or place corporate or city, being justice or justices of peace respectively, shall have the same authority by virtue of this act within the limits and precincts of their jurisdictions as is by this act limited, prescribed, or appointed to justices of the peace of the county, or any two or more of them, for the execution of this act; subject nevertheless to an appeal to the general or quarter sessions in every such town or place corporate or city respectively as aforesaid: provided always, that in any town or place corporate or city where there are not four justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, where an appeal is given by this act, to appeal, if he or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division wherein such town or place corporate or city is situate."

Appeal by any other person not taken away.

Magistrates of corporations shall have the same jurisdiction as two or more justices.

Sect. 5 enacts, "That no certiorari shall be granted to remove any order or proceeding of any general or quarter sessions, or of any justices, made or had under this act, into any superior court of record; but that all orders and proceedings of such sessions, and all orders and proceedings of such justices (subject to such appeal as aforesaid) under this act shall be final and conclusive to all intents and purposes."

Proceedings of quarter sessions final.

Sect. 6 provides, "That nothing in this act contained shall extend or apply, or be construed to extend or apply, to the accounts of any churchwarden or overseer of the poor in any parish or place where by the provisions of any act or acts relating to the poor of such parish or place, or by the construction of any such act or acts, such churchwardens and overseers are exempted from the rendering the accounts required by the hereinbefore recited acts of the 43rd year of the reign of her late majesty queen Elizabeth, and of the 17th year of the reign of his late majesty king Geo. II. or either of them; anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding: provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to the city of London."

Not to extend to churchwardens, &c., exempted from accounting under the recited acts.

Nor to the city of London.

Sect. 7 provides also, "That nothing in this act contained shall alter or repeal any of the provisions or regulations contained in the said recited acts of the 43rd year of the reign of her late majesty queen Elizabeth, and of the 17th year of the reign of his late majesty king George II. or either of them, other than and except only such provisions or regulations as are expressly mentioned in this act, and so far as the same are expressly amended or altered by this act."

Recited acts, unless where it is hereby expressly mentioned, not to be affected.

It will be perceived that s. 5 prevents the orders and proceedings of justices from being removed by certiorari, and makes the decision of the sessions final; but this only applies to appeals brought by churchwardens and overseers against the disallowance of any items in their accounts by the magistrates, leaving appeals by other persons as they stood under the prior act, 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4. Rex v. Bird, 2 B. & A. 522.

When certiorari taken away.

Notice of Appeal.

The 41 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 4 (which see ante), prescribes that the notice shall be in writing, and shall specify the particular causes or grounds of appeal. The following decisions have taken place upon this enactment.

Notice of appeal.

A notice of appeal against the allowance of overseers' accounts, which is merely general, stating that the different items, enumerating all of them, will be objected to, without stating the particular cause or ground upon which any one was objected to, is clearly insufficient. The sessions overruled the objection, but reserved a case on the point; and the court quashed the order on the ground that the notice was not sufficient. (Rex v. Mayall, 3 D. & R. 383; and 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 88.)

Where the notice insufficient.

Rex v. Sheard, 2 B. & C. 856; 4 D. & R. 480. By his notice, the Notice of Appeal.

A notice of appeal against overseers' accounts, stating that the appellant objected to certain specified payments, alleged in the accounts to have been made to persons specified by name in the notice, is bad, because it does not state the cause and ground of appeal.

The attornies, some days before the appeal was tried, agreed to admit that the sums objected to were paid to the persons alleged: This is not any waiver of the defect in the notice.

appellant objected to thirty-five items in the accounts, and set out the names of the persons on whose account the payments were made, the sums paid, and in some instances the purposes for which they were made; it also stated that the appellant would insist upon the appeal, that all these items ought to be struck out of the accounts and disallowed. On the day before the appeal came on to be heard, the attorney for the respondents and the attorney for the appellant entered into the following admissions: "We do agree to admit that all the payments charged in the accounts of the respondents, to which the appellant objects, were actually made to or for the use of the several persons to whom the same are charged to have been paid, and that the several sums charged in such accounts to have been paid to three several persons (named in the notice of appeal) respectively, were for debts contracted by the overseers in one or more years previous to the year in which the respondents were overseers, and were not contracted by the respondents for the service of their current year, and the respondents undertake to produce, upon the hearing of the appeal, the original accounts and vouchers regarding the items and sums of money objected to by the appellant." The sessions considered the admissions as a waiver of the objections to it, and entered into the merits of the said appeal, but granted a case. Bayley, J. delivered the judgment: "The 41 Geo. III. c. 23, requires one of two things, either notice in writing stating and specifying the particular causes or grounds of appeal; or secondly, consent by the overseers, to be signified by them or their attorney in open court, that the sessions may proceed, though there has been no proper notice. The notice in writing is to be signed by the party giving it, or his attorney, and to be left at the place of abode of the officers; and the sessions are not to examine into any other cause or ground of appeal than those which the notice specifies. Two questions therefore arise—Has there been such a notice as the statute requires? Has there been such a waiver? In this case the original notice, which was served eleven days before the commencement of the sessions, merely stated that the appellant would object to thirty-five items or charges of payment, which he specified. On what grounds he would object he did not state. The day after the sessions commenced, being the day before their adjournment day, the attornies for the appellant and respondents agreed to admit that all the payments objected to were in fact made, but that three of them were for debts contracted in prior years, not for debts contracted for the service of the year to which the accounts referred, and the respondents agreed to produce the original accounts and vouchers regarding the items objected to. The sessions expressed no opinion as to the notice, but thought these admissions a waiver of all objections to it. As to the waiver, the statute expressly provides that the sessions shall not examine or inquire into any ground of appeal not specified in the notice, with this single exception only, of consent by the overseers, signified by them or their attorney in open court: and we think that the statute has excluded, and intended to exclude, all questions of waiver in any other way, and that, as there was no such consent as the statute requires, we cannot enter into the question of any other species of waiver. Then can it be said that this notice states and specifies the particular causes and grounds of appeal? It states only that the appellant will object to thirty-five items or charges of payment; but why? It may be because they are false items that they have not been paid; it may be, because they ought not to have been paid; it may be, though paid, and rightly paid, they ought not to be brought in charge against the parish, but ought to be borne personally by the overseers. And where a notice is general, and leaves it uncertain upon which of several possible grounds of objection an item is questioned, can we say that it states and specifies a particular ground? We think not. Then will the admissions supply the defect in this notice, not as a waiver, but as making it a good notice in itself? The statute prescribes no form of notice; it specifies no time within which it shall be delivered; and its only object being that the respondents may know distinctly what objections they are prepared to meet; and so long as that knowledge is fairly communicated to them in writing, it may be thought that the mode in which it is communicated is immaterial. But it can never be supposed that the respondents' attorney meant, by entering into these admissions, to waive any other objections which would other wise have been open to him; his authority would be to uphold the rights of the respondents, not to give them up; and where the statute requires notice in writing to be left at the place of abode of the persons on whom it is to be served, we think we ought not, except upon very clear grounds, to allow it to be dispensed with." Order of sessions quashed.

It is not necessary to state in the notice that the appellant is a party aggrieved, or a parishioner

A notice of appeal against overseers' accounts, merely stating that the party intended to try his appeal against the accounts, on the grounds and for the reasons thereinafter set forth, and then specifying the items against which he intended to appeal, and the objection he intended to make against each item, was held to be sufficient, although it was not stated that the party intending to appeal was a rated inhabitant of the parish, or a party aggrieved. The right of appeal given by 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, against overseers' accounts, is not within the principle of the decisions upon the 55 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, relating to highways; for although the same language to a certain extent is found in both, yet the former statute, in addition to giving an appeal to the "party aggrieved," extends the right to "any person who shall have any material objection to the accounts." Lord Tenterden added, "If it should turn out that he is a mere stranger, the court of quarter sessions may refuse to hear him." (Rex v. Justices of Somersetshire, 7 B. & C. 681.)

What is a reasonable notice.

A clear week's notice is usually considered "reasonable," and will satisfy the statute, unless by the practice of the particular sessions a longer notice is required, or there are peculiar circumstances in the case which may induce the justices to adjourn the appeal to the following sessions. (2 Not. P. L. 525.)

Accounts and disbursements of overseers allowed.

Rex v. Justices of Norfolk, 2 B. & Ad. 944. An appeal was entered in the following form:—W. Rodgers, appellant, and The Churchwardens and Overseers of Brancaster, respondents. The appeal was respited, and notice was given, addressed to "J. A. and T. S. now or lately overseers," but not to the churchwardens, and no notice was given to them. The sessions refused to hear the appeal, because the notice varied from the entry, and because the churchwardens had had no notice. Upon a rule for a mandamus it appeared that J. A. and T. S. were the only parish officers who received and disbursed money during the year of the accounts, and that the accounts were passed by them only, and were entered in their names only, as overseers, no mention being made of the churchwardens. It was held, that though the appeal was formerly entered as an appeal against the accounts of the churchwardens and overseers, yet it was evident to any one looking at the subject-matter of the appeal, that it was substantially an appeal against the accounts of the overseers, and to them notice was given: and it was also held, that as the accounts of several parish officers may be treated as several, where the money transactions have been separate, (and in the present case the churchwardens had in fact nothing to do with the account,) it would have been useless to serve the notice upon them; and that therefore there was no valid objection to the mode in which the notice was addressed and served. Mandamus issued.

In an appeal from the borough sessions, the appellant is confined to his grounds there.

If, however, it is an appeal from the borough sessions, the notice of appeal cannot be enlarged; the appellant can enter at the county sessions into those grounds only which he took at the borough sessions. 50 Geo. III. c. 49, s. 4, gives this appeal.

CHAPTER IV.

PARISH PROPERTY VESTED IN PARISH OFFICERS, AND THE MODE OF RECOVERING POSSESSION.

Churchwardens and overseers may take and sue as bodies corporate.

THE 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 17, enacts, "that all buildings, lands, and hereditaments, which shall be purchased, hired, or taken on lease, by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, by the authority and for any of the purposes of this act, shall be conveyed, demised, and assured to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every such parish respectively, and their successors, in trust for the parish; and such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and their successors, shall and may, and they are hereby empowered, to accept, take, and hold, in the nature of a body corporate, for and on behalf of the parish, all such buildings, lands, and hereditaments, and also all other buildings, lands, and hereditaments belonging to such parish; and in all actions, suits, indictments, and other proceedings, for or in relation to any such buildings, lands, or hereditaments, or the rent thereof, or for or in relation to any other buildings, lands, or hereditaments belonging to such parish, or the rent thereof; and in all actions and proceedings upon, or in relation to, any bond to be given for the faithful execution of the office of an assistant overseer, it shall be sufficient to name the churchwardens and overseers of the poor for the time being, describing them as the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish for which they shall act, and naming such parish; and no action or suit, indictment or other proceeding, shall cease, abate, or be discontinued, quashed, defeated, or impeded, by the death of the churchwardens and overseers named in such proceeding, or the deaths or death of any of them, or by their removal or the removal of any of them from, or the expiration of, their respective offices."

To constitute a body corporate there must be two overseers and a churchwarden.

Woodcock v. Gibson, 4 B. & C. 462; 6 D. & R. 524; 3 D. & R. M. Ca. 277. In order to constitute the body corporate intended by this act, there must be two overseers and a churchwarden or churchwardens; and that where there were two overseers appointed, one of whom was afterwards appointed (by custom) sole churchwarden, the act did not vest parish property in them, so as to support a plea stating that the freehold was in them.

Churchwardens alone have no title.

Phillips v. Pearce, 5 B. & C. 433; 8 D. & R. 43, S.C. Land belonging to a parish was occupied by A., and he paid rent to the churchwardens. They executed a lease of the same land for a term of years to B., and gave A. notice of the lease. In an action for use and occupation by B. against A.: held, that A. was not estopped by having paid rent to the churchwardens from disputing B.'s title, and that the latter could not derive a valid title from the churchwardens.—Abbott, C. J. "The legislature has provided for the inconveniences experienced in consequence of lands belonging to parishioners, who are not by law a corporation, in certain cases, by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 17, which enacts, that the churchwardens and overseers shall take and hold, in the nature of a body corporate, for and on behalf of the parish, all buildings, lands, and tenements belonging to the parish. That statute does not extend to this case.

I think, therefore, that the churchwardens alone had no title to the land, or the rent which issues from it." And see Rogers v. Pitcher, 6 Taunt. 202; 1 Marsh. 541, S. P.

Parish Property vested &c.

Smith v. Adkins, 8 M. & W. 362. The churchwardens and overseers are not by this statute made a complete body corporate, and but only empowered to hold "in the nature of a body corporate." It is not, therefore, necessary to aver the acceptance of a lease to them by an instrument under a common seal. Nor is it necessary to specify the names of the parish officers, as a grant to them, by the name of office, is good. See the report for a plea justifying a trespass under these statutes.

Overseers need not accept a lease under a common seal. Grant to them, by the name of office, is good.

Doe d. Higgs v. Cockell, 4 A. & E. 478; 6 N. & M. 179. Leases by churchwardens, in which the demised tenement is described as parcel of the lands of the parish church, and payment of rent to them, are primâ facie evidence that the tenement is parish property. See also Doe v. Terry, 5 N. & M. 566.

Furnival v. Coombs, 7 Jurist, 399. A., B., C., D., E., & F., churchwardens and overseers, contracted with the plaintiff for themselves and their successors, churchwardens and overseers. Proviso, that nothing &c. should be construed to extend to any personal covenant, or in anywise to affect them in their private capacity:—Held, that although the churchwardens and overseers might be a corporation, yet, having no common seal of office, they could not bind their successors; that the contract, therefore, constituted a personal covenant, and the proviso, being repugnant to it, is void.

Covenant by overseers, not binding on successors, is personal.

The 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 17, is not confined to lands held merely for the benefit of the poor. In Doe v. Hiley, 10 B. & C. 885, Lord Tenterden observed, "There were demises in the name of the parish officers, and the tenements were certainly held for parish purposes. The lessors of the plaintiffs contended, that the premises were vested in the parish officers by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12. The other side contended, that the statute was inapplicable for two reasons:—1. Because the persons in whom the legal estate was vested were trustees only; 2. Because the profits of the premises were applicable, not to the relief of the poor, but solely to those purposes for which a church-rate was levied. As to the first of these objections, we are of opinion that there is nothing in the act to limit the right of persons under that act to those who fill the situation of parish officers, and it would be highly inconvenient to give the act so limited a construction. It is often difficult for persons who claim under an ancient trust, (where the trustees are numerous,) to show who was the survivor of those trustees; and even if they should succeed in ascertaining that fact, it will not be less difficult to show who is the heir-at-law of that survivor. Upon the second point, whether this act extends to tenements the profits of which are applicable to the purposes for which church-rate is levied, or is confined to those which are applicable merely for the benefit of the poor, it is undoubtedly correct, as that the primary object of the act was directed to tenements of the latter description. But s. 17 goes in its terms much further. It uses the words, 'and also all others.' To these there is no limitation. We think, therefore, that the safest course will be to give full effect to that generality of expression, as nothing appears to show that that which is held for the benefit of the church does not, under these circumstances, require the assistance of this act, as well as that which is held for the benefit of the poor. In both cases, the difficulty is the same; and we see no reason to doubt that the operation of the act was intended to be co-extensive with the mischief."

Lands purchased by churchwardens and overseers to vest in them as a corporation.

Alderman v. Neate, 4 M. & W. 704. By a written instrument, with a lease stamp, dated 25th Feb. 1782, E. S. let a house and premises to a committee for the parish of Hungerford, and the committee agreed to take them for the purpose of converting them into a poor-house, to hold for 99 years, at the yearly rent of 27*l.*: the committee to keep the premises in good repair. It was agreed that a lease should be executed, and a power was given to the committee to purchase the fee. No lease was executed, but the premises had been always used as a poor house by the parish, and the overseers for the time being paid the rent An action of assumpsit will lie against the overseers for non-repair, as the agreement operated as a demise, and lease vested in the overseers by force of 59 Geo III c 12

The legal estate of charity lands does not vest in the parish officers, where there are known feoffees in existence and where the funds are applicable only to certain specific objects partially in aid of the parish funds

Allasan v Stack, 9 A & E 255 Where lands were vested in trustees, and the rents to be applied towards the relief of the poor people of good life and conversation in the parish, and for apprenticing poor boys of the parish. These do not vest in the parish officers, although by a local act a portion of the rents was applied to the erection of a parish workhouse, and the case was distinguished from Doe v Hiley, on the ground that in the latter case no feoffee appeared.

The Guardians of the Banbury Union v Robinson, 7 Jurist, 599. Power to overseers and guardians of the poor to sell purchase, and dispose of workhouses, &c

By 5 & 6 Will IV c 69, s 3, (a) in order to insure the due application of the property of parishes and unions, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the guardians of any parish or union, and for the overseers of any parish not under the management of a board of guardians, and for the guardians or trustees, guardian or trustee of any dissolved union, or the person or persons who were the guardians or trustees, guardian or trustee, of any dissolved union at the time of its dissolution, or a majority of such guardians or trustees, or persons, if more than one, with the approbation, and subject to the rules, orders, and regulations of the poor law commissioners, to sell, exchange, let, or otherwise to dispose of any workhouses, tenements, buildings, land, effects, or other property belonging to any such parish or union, or vested in trustees or feoffees in trust for such parish or union, or for the parishioners, rate-payers, or inhabitants thereof, or which belong or did belong to any dissolved union, and every and any part of such property, and to convey, assign, or transfer the same accordingly to the purchasers or parties exchanging, as they shall direct, and, in case of a sale, to apply the produce arising therefrom (after deducting the reasonable expenses thereof) towards the purchase or building of any workhouse, or as or in part of the proportion of such parish or union towards the expense of any workhouse erected, purchased, or provided on behalf of such parish or union, or as a loan to the board of guardians of such union, upon the security of the rates, for the purpose of erecting a workhouse, or

Justices empowered, in certain cases, to deliver possession of parish houses to overseers

By 59 Geo. III. c 12, s 24, (a) reciting "That difficulties have frequently arisen, and considerable expenses have sometimes been incurred, by reason of the refusal of persons who have been permitted to occupy, or who have intruded themselves into parish or town houses, or other tenements or dwellings built or provided for the habitation of the poor, or otherwise belonging to such parishes, to deliver up the possession of such houses, tenements, or dwellings, when thereto required, and it is expedient to provide a remedy for the same," it is enacted, "that if any person who shall have been permitted to occupy any parish or town house, or any other tenement or dwelling belonging to or provided by or at the charge of any parish, for the habitation of the poor thereof, or who shall have unlawfully intruded himself or herself into any such house, tenement, or dwelling, or into any house, tenement, or hereditament belonging to such parish, shall refuse or neglect to quit the same, and deliver up the possession thereof to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any such parish, within one month after notice and demand in writing for that purpose, signed by such churchwardens and overseers, or the major part of them, shall have been delivered to the person in possession, or in his or her absence affixed on some notorious part of the premises, it shall be lawful for any two (b) of his Majesty's justices of the peace, upon complaint to them made by one or more of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish in which any such house, tenement, or dwelling shall be situated, to issue their summons to the person against whom such complaint shall be made, to appear before such justices at a time and place to be appointed by them, and to cause such summons to be delivered to the party against whom the complaint shall be made, or in his or her absence to be affixed on the premises, seven days at the least before the time appointed for hearing such complaint; and such justices are hereby empowered and required, upon the appearance of the defendant, or upon proof on oath that such summons hath been delivered or affixed as is hereby directed, to proceed to hear and determine the matter of such complaint; and if they shall find and adjudge the same to be true, then by warrant under their hands and seals to cause possession of the premises in question to be delivered to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, or to some of them."

Parish Property vested &c.

by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 69, s. 5. But the legal estate in parish property is not by that statute transferred from the overseers to the guardians of the union. Worge v. Relf, 12 L. J. 125, M. C.

The Poor Law Act has not transferred parish property to the guardians of the union.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83 (Gilbert's Act), s. 2, the visitor and guardians are incorporated and empowered to sue and be sued, and to hold lands, &c.; and there is this further provision, "and the said corporation is also authorised and enabled to accept, take, and hold all voluntary grants and donations of lands, tenements, or hereditaments of inheritance, or for lives or years, or for years determinable on lives, or of personal property which shall be made to them for the use and benefit of the poor within such respective parishes, townships, or places."

Visitors and guardians may hold lands and personalty voluntarily granted for the poor.

The statute was not intended to take away a right, which the owner of property had at common law, to enter and take possession, if it could be done peaceably, but to provide an expeditious mode whereby parish officers might obtain possession where it was obstinately withheld; and that they might not do that which had before been sometimes done, viz. might not turn occupiers out vi et armis, which led to further expense and litigation. Where, therefore, a pauper had been permitted to occupy a parish house, but having gone from home, leaving three children there, for whose support she received an allowance from the parish, the overseers on the second day afterwards entered, took the children to the workhouse, and put locks upon the doors. She having returned in about ten days, and, by breaking the locks, resumed possession of the house, the overseers went there, and, upon her refusal to open the door, broke it open, and carried away the furniture, which belonged to the parish. In an action of trespass by her, it was held, that the overseers might lawfully enter and resume possession, without giving any notice to quit, and were not bound to pursue the mode pointed out by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 24. (Wildbore v. Rainforth, 2 Man. & R. 185; 8 B. & C. 4; and see Turner v. Meymott, 7 Moore, 574; 1 Bing. 158; Taunton & Costar, 7 Term Rep.; 1 Price Rep. 4) (a).

Possession may still at common law be taken peaceably.

A poor man who pays rent is not within the Statute.

A poor man in possession of parish property under a rent is not within the statute, as he does not occupy a house "provided for the habitation of the poor," nor does he "intrude himself." (Rex v. J. Middlesex, 7 Dowl. 767.)

Reg. v. Bolton, 4 P. & D. 679; 12 Q. B. 66. Where magistrates make an order, under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 24, directing possession of a parish house to be given up to parish officers, upon an information stating that a pauper who had been permitted to occupy a parish house had refused to give it up on proper demand, the court would not admit affidavits in contradiction of any of the statements in the information, for the purpose of showing that the magistrates had acted without jurisdiction.

CHAPTER V.

OF THE POWERS, DUTIES, LIABILITIES AND PRIVILEGES OF OVERSEERS (a).

Privileges.

In the discharge of their various duties, churchwardens and overseers may occasionally be subjected to vexatious actions. To afford them protection, under such circumstances, the legislature has given them various advantages.

May plead the general issue, &c

By 7 Jac. I. c. 5, if any action shall be brought against any justice of the peace or constable, (and by 21 Jac. I. c. 12, against any churchwarden or overseer of the poor, or other person who in their aid, or by their commandment, should do anything concerning their offices,) he may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence: and if a verdict shall pass for him, or the plaintiff shall be nonsuit or suffer discontinuance, he shall have double costs (b). And such action shall be laid in the county where the act was committed, and not elsewhere.

Venue local.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 19, persons sued for anything done on that act may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if a verdict be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, the defendant shall have treble damages with costs, to be assessed by the jury in case of the issue tried, or by a writ to inquire of the damages in case the plaintiff is nonsuit.

Treble damages with costs.

No action to be brought until copy of warrant demanded and refused.

And by 24 Geo. II. c. 44, "No action shall be brought against any constable, headborough, or other officer, or against any person or persons acting by his order and in his aid, for anything done in obedience to any warrant under the hand or seal of any justice of the peace, until demand hath been made or left at the usual place of his abode, by the party or parties intending to bring such action, or by his, her, or their attorney or agent, in writing, signed by the party demanding the same, of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and the same hath been refused or neglected for the space of six days after such demand; and in case after such demand and compliance therewith, by showing the said warrant to, and permitting a copy to be taken thereof by the party demanding the same, any action shall be brought against such constable, headborough, or other officer, or against such person or persons acting in his aid, for any such cause as aforesaid, without making the justice or justices who signed or sealed the said warrant defendant or defendants, that on producing or proving such warrant at the trial of such action, the jury shall give their verdict for the defendant or defendants, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in such justice or justices, and if such action be brought jointly against such justice or justices, and also against such constable, headborough, or other officer, or person or persons acting in his or their aid as aforesaid, then, on proof of such warrant, the jury shall find for such constable, headborough, (b) This relates only to torts and acts done, and does not extend to a nonsuit in an action against overseers for the price of goods supplied for the use of the poor. Blanchard v. Bramble, 3 M. & Sel. 131; Atkins v. Bunwell, 3 East, 92. or other officer, and for such person and persons so acting as aforesaid, notwithstanding such defect of jurisdiction as aforesaid; and if the verdict shall be given against the justice or justices, that in such case the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover his, her, or their costs against him or them, to be taxed in such manner by the proper officer, as to include such costs as such plaintiff or plaintiffs are liable to pay to such defendant or defendants for whom such verdict shall be found as aforesaid."

Overseers of the poor, and all officers acting under a justice's warrant, are within the protection of the 24 Geo. II. c. 44.

Jackson's case, Lofft, 249; Bull. N. P. 24. Trespass against overseers for taking the plaintiff's gelding. They alleged, that by virtue of their office and in pursuance of a justice's order, they levied satisfaction for a poor-rate. It was objected, that demand should have been made under this statute, and that churchwardens and overseers were within the remedy, and comprehended under "other officers." By the court: "They are clearly within the act of 24 Geo. II. The justice's warrant is the authority under which they act. To extend the benefit of the statute of 21 James was the intent of the statute of 24 Geo. II., and all officers acting under a justice's warrant are included in it." Plaintiff was nonsuited.

Demand of surplus after distress.

A demand is necessary before an action can be maintained against overseers for the surplus arising from a distress for poor-rates. The 27 Geo. II. c. 20, s. 2, states, that the officer making the distress shall deduct the reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling such distress, out of the money arising by the sale; and the overplus (if any), after such charges and also the said penalty or sum of money shall be fully satisfied and paid, shall be returned on demand to the owner of the goods and chattels so distrained. And in this case, where a demand is necessary to give a right of action, the commencement of the action is not of itself a sufficient demand, nor does a tender of a sum, which the plaintiff at the time refused to accept, saying it was too late, but not claiming a larger sum, supply the place of a demand; there must be an express demand, or that which is equivalent to it. (Simpson v. Routh, 4 D. & R. 181; 2 B. & C. 682.)

Abuse of Office.

Remedies against abuse of office.

Punishable for neglect of duty.

The law very properly will not sanction overseers in refusing to receive and provide for a pauper sent to them by an order of justices, however satisfied they may be that such order cannot, upon being appealed against, be supported. For if this were permitted, the pauper might perish while his settlement was being disputed. It has therefore been held that overseers are indictable for not receiving a pauper sent to them by an order of justices. Rex v. Davies, 1 Bott, 378; S. C. cited and approved, 2 Burr. 803. And it appears that formerly, for very gross abuses in office, a criminal information might be obtained; but the court came to the resolution, some time ago, to leave their official delinquencies, however flagrant, to the ordinary punishment by indictment. Rex v. Slaughter, Cald. 247, (a). An overseer is not liable to any proceeding for neglecting to inoculate paupers so as to guard against the consequences. (Anon., 5 Nev. & Man. 12.)

In many instances penalties are inflicted, to be recovered by action, or levied on conviction by magistrates. See the enactments of 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2; 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 10; 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 1; 19 Geo. III. c. 37; 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 6; and more particularly 33 Geo. III. c. 55, s. 1, post, 263.

The 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, provides, that overseers absenting themselves without lawful cause from the monthly meeting therein enjoined, or being negligent in their office, shall forfeit for every default 20*s.* to the poor, to be levied by one of the churchwardens or overseers by warrant of two justices (one being of the quorum) by distress; or in default thereof, any two such justices may commit the offender to the common gaol, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, till the said forfeiture shall be paid.

But this penalty for not meeting in the church shall not be inflicted on overseers of extra-parochial places, because they have no church to meet in. (8 Mod. 40.) Nor can an overseer be adjudged guilty of absenting himself from the meeting until he has had personal notice of his appointment. (Rex v. Harman, 1 Bott, 376; ante, p. 234, note.)

Abuse of Office.

Overseers indictable for not relieving poor.

Omission by an overseer to sign the burgess list, 5 & 6 Will. IV. subjects each to the penalty. Signature by one overseer of a list for his own ward only, is not sufficient.

King v. Share, 2 G. & D. 457. Debt against an overseer for not making out a list of burgesses entitled to be on the burgess roll. Cur. adv. vult. Lord Denman: "This was an action against the defendant, as an overseer, to recover a penalty of 50*l.* under the 48th section of the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, for having neglected to make out and sign a list of persons entitled to be enrolled in the burgess roll. It is by the 15th sect. of the act required in terms that a list of all persons who shall be entitled to be enrolled in the burgess roll of the year, in respect of property within the parish, shall be made out and signed by the overseers of the parish. In the present case no such list has been made out. Separate lists have indeed been made out for each ward, eight of which have been signed respectively by the overseer acting for each ward, and one has not been signed at all. Neither the defendant, therefore, nor any other of the overseers, has signed any list, as required by the statute, of the persons entitled to be on the burgess roll in respect of property within the parish of St. Margaret. The present case has in effect been already decided in that of King v. Burrell (a), and in principle and almost in circumstances is the same. Here the defendant did sign a list of the persons within his ward who were entitled, and there the defendant did not, although he delivered one; but in neither case did the defendant sign any lists of the persons entitled within the parish, as required by the statute. The individual case may be one of hardship; but it arises from pursuing a mode of making out and signing the lists not warranted by the terms of the act. It is said that only one penalty can be incurred by all the overseers; but we are of opinion that by the express words of the statute, as well as the nature of the offence, separate penalties are incurred by each. The words of the 48th sect. of the statute are, that "if any overseer of any parish shall neglect to make out, sign and deliver such lists as aforesaid, every such overseer for every such offence shall forfeit and pay 50*l.* We are therefore of opinion that the verdict ought to be entered for the plaintiff for the penalty of 50*l.*

Gross sum received for a bastard, improper.

An overseer is not entitled to take a gross sum as a compensation for the maintenance of a bastard child. If such child, therefore, should die, the overseer must repay the money not expended, and he cannot protect himself by a payment over to his successors in office. Chappell v. Poles, 2 M. & W. 867.

Overseers are not liable for the overplus of a rate reduced on appeal, the money having been paid to the guardians.

Where an overseer distrains for a rate, not knowing there is an appeal against it, and immediately pays over the money so levied to a guardian under 22 Geo. 2, c. 83, and the rate is afterwards lowered on the appeal being heard, the overseer not being a wrong-doer will not be liable in money had and received. (Priestley v. Watson, 2 C. & M. 691.)

Penalty of 20*s.* and not exceeding 5*l.*

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 14, it is enacted, "That if any churchwarden, overseer of the poor, or officer of any parish, township, or place, shall neglect or refuse to obey and perform the several orders and directions of this act or any of them, where no penalty is before provided by this act, or shall act contrary thereto, every such churchwarden, overseer of the poor, or other officer so offending in the premises, shall for every such offence, on oath thereof made, within two calendar months after the offence committed, before any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, forfeit for the use of the poor of such parish, township, or place, a sum not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.*, to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods, by warrant from such justices; which sum shall be paid to some churchwarden or overseer of the poor of such parish, township, or place, for the purpose aforesaid."

Punishment for neglect of duty, or disobedience of order of justices.

By 33 Geo. III. c. 55, s. 1, it is enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, assembled at any special or petty sessions of the peace, upon complaint being made upon oath before them of any neglect of duty, or of any disobedience of any law-

Sect. 2 provides that no person acting under any such warrant of distress shall be deemed a trespasser ab initio, by reason of any irregularity in such warrant or proceedings thereupon.

Appeal.

Any person who thinks himself aggrieved may appeal to the next sessions, upon giving ten days' notice thereof.

Wilful* misapplication of money.

By the 97th sect. of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, overseers and others are liable to a penalty for wilfully wasting or misapplying any money or goods of the parish. A conviction which omits to allege that the misapplication was wilful is bad. (Carpenter v. Mason, 12 A. & E. 629.)

And by 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 12, in all actions to be brought in the courts at Westminster, or at the assizes, for the recovery of any sum mis-spent or taken to their own use by the churchwardens or overseers, the evidence of the parishioners, other than such as receive alms, shall be admitted.

Contracts of overseers.

The overseers are liable, like all other persons, upon their contracts, express or implied, for necessaries furnished to the use of the poor or otherwise, in the common action of assumpsit; and they are liable in damages for acts done by them without authority or in abuse of their office. (See Simmons v. Wilmot, 3 Esp. Rep. 92; Lamb v. Bunce, 4 M. & S. 275. An overseer proceeding through all the stages of an expensive suit, without the concurrence of the vestry, is personally liable. (Rex v. Micklefield. See also Furnival v. Coombs, p. 389.)

No person employed in administration of poor laws to furnish, for his own profit, goods or provisions given in parochial relief.

Several actions have been brought to recover penalties under 55 Geo. III. c. 137.

Procter v. Mainwaring, 3 B. & Adol. 145. The defendant, an overseer, kept a chandler's shop, and paid the pauper her allowance on several occasions, partly with goods from his shop and partly with money. The jury found, that the pauper voluntarily took part in goods. Abbott, C. J. after remarking that this penal clause must not be extended to cases which may be suggested as falling within the mishief, added: "That this case was not within the statute. It would have been easy for the legislature, had they so intended it, to have said that it should not be lawful for an overseer to deliver to any pauper articles in lieu of money ordered for relief, but they have not so expressed themselves." Bayley, J. said: "The object of the act was to prevent imposition upon the parish by the overseers. If, therefore, goods are required for the parish workhouse, or if any other general supply for the poor is wanted, the overseer is not to furnish that supply: but it seems to me these are the only cases contemplated by the act. Where a pauper carries an order for relief to the overseer, he has a right to demand it in money; and, in case of refusal, has a speedy remedy, by complaint to the justice who made the order. If the conduct of the overseer, in selling the articles, be oppressive, the justice may punish him for it; but if the overseer be absolutely prohibited from selling, it might be a hardship upon the pauper. For there being no words distinguishing the case of money laid out by the pauper, after full payment by the overseer, from that of a payment partly in goods and partly in money, a pauper might be compelled, in case the overseer kept the only shop in the village where the articles were supplied, to go to a very inconvenient distance for the purpose of purchasing them from some one else." Holroyd, J. "However desirable it may perhaps be to prevent the mischief attending such cases as the present, yet we cannot extend a penal statute so as to bring this case within it. The words of this statute appear to me applicable only to a general supply of the poor by the parish officers."

defendant was an assistant overseer, and an order having been made by the vestry that a coat should be given to pauper, the defendant supplied him with an old coat of his own, and charged it in his accounts. Lord Abinger: "I think there is sufficient doubt in the words of 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, to have made me say, that I should have been better satisfied if the Court had granted a rule in Procter v. Mainwaring: yet I am very far from being prepared to say that the decision was wrong. The principle adopted by Lord Tenterden, that a penal law ought to be construed strictly, is not only a sound one, but the only one consistent with our free institutions. The interpretation of statutes has always been, in modern times, favourable to the personal liberty of the subject, and I hope always will be so. But I think there is another ground for not disturbing this nonsuit. If section 77 of the new poor-law act embraces this case, I do not agree that it does not amount to a repeal of the former enactment. If a crime be created by statute with a given penalty, and be afterwards repealed by another statute with a less penalty, I cannot say that the party ought to be held liable to both. There may be, no doubt, two remedies for the same act, but they must be of a different nature. The new act then would be a repeal of the former penalty. It appears to me, therefore, reasonable to suppose, that in enacting this clause of the poor-law act, the legislature had in contemplation the decision in Procter v. Mainwaring, and accordingly provided for this particular case, and annexed to it a specific penalty. Under these circumstances, although I might originally have entertained some doubt, I think it right to adhere to the decision in Procter v. Mainwaring." Parke, B. "I also think we are bound by Procter v. Mainwaring, although, if I had to form an opinion on the facts of the case for the first time, I am not prepared to say that I should quite have assented to the reasons assigned by the Court for their judgment. But after that decision, I think we are bound by it; and certainly a considerable argument arises in support of it from the 77th section of the poor-law act, that appears very much like a legislative recognition of the decease of the former statute." Rule for a nonsuit discharged.

An overseer, a glazier, repairing a window of a workhouse, and supplying glass, is not liable to the penalty.

Barber v. Waite, 3 Nev. & M. 611; 1 Ad. & E. 514. This was an action for penalties against the defendant, a plumber, painter, and glazier, who was also overseer of Boston, and, while holding that office, had repaired the windows of the workhouse. In so doing he supplied glass, lead pipe and paint, and was paid for it and his labour by the parish; and it was held that this was not within the statute. That the words "for the use of the workhouse," mean for the use of the persons in the workhouse. It was also observed, that the thing did come properly under the description of work and labour, and not of goods supplied; and that work and labour was not within the meaning of the act. In West v. Andrews (infra), sheep were supplied, which came within the act, as they were provisions, though something remained to be done to make them fit for consumption. Coals also are within the act; and so is anything in respect of which an action for goods sold would lie. In this case, it is true, glass, paint, and other things were supplied, but the contract was substantially for work and labour, and materials used in the course of it. If the defendant had declared in assumpsit for the repairs done by him, a count for goods sold would not have been applicable. Verdict for defendant.

West v. Andrews, 5 B. & Ald. 328. The defendant was one of the guardians of the poor; the poor-house was under their control, being managed by one Griffiths, who was the master of the poor-house appointed by the guardians, and receiving his orders from them. Griffiths, having a contract at so much per head, found all the meat, and he bought of the defendant, then being a guardian, four live sheep for the use of the poor, and paid him for them. Abbott, C. J. "Here the defendant has made a bargain for the supply of provisions with a third person, who has the contract for providing for the poor, and whom the defendant, in conjunction with others, appoints to his situation, and whose conduct it is his duty to superintend. Under these circumstances, it seems to me, that all the mischief which was contemplated by the legislature would arise, if we were to hold that it was lawful. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion, that the defendant's case falls both within the words and spirit of the act of parliament."

Pope v. Backhouse, 2 B. Moore, 186; 8 Taunt. 239, S. C. The defendant was a farmer, and had supplied corn and flour to some of the poor of the parish for which he was churchwarden, and the jury found that he sold it only at a fair market price; and it was contended, that, to bring the case within the statute, it was necessary for the jury to find that the defendant sold at a profit. Gibbs, C. J. "It is to be presumed that a farmer does make a profit by selling the produce of his land at a fair market price. If a churchwarden or overseer purchase provisions at a certain price, and afterwards, in the event of a scarcity which presses on the poor, let them have them at that price, he would not come within the act; but if he should sell them to the poor as he would to other individuals, at the market price, and make a profit on them, he would be within the act. The defendant is certainly liable, and the verdict properly entered for the plaintiff." The rest of the court concurred.

It is no defence that the articles were furnished at a fair market price.

West v. Andrews, 1 B. & C. 77; 2 D. & R. 184; 1 D. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 213, S. C. There were several counts in this action, but the third stated that the defendant was a person in whose hands the providing for, ordering, management, control, and direction of the poor of the parish of Westhamprett was placed, by virtue of certain acts of parliament, and that the goods were supplied for the use of the poor of the said parish. The defendant was guardian of the poor of the parish of Westhamprett. The poor of that parish, together with the poor of four parishes, were jointly maintained in a workhouse, but Westhamprett was regularly united according to the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 43, with only one of those parishes. The provisions were supplied to the master of the workhouse, who bought of the defendant four sheep for the use of the poor, and paid him for them. The master of the workhouse had a contract for providing for the poor at so much a head, and found all the meat, &c. Abbott, C. J. "If the evidence given be sufficient to sustain any one count, there ought not to be a nonsuit entered. The first objection is, that this was provided for, and must fall under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 42. But if 53 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, does not extend to a case like the present, a great many words in it would be altogether insensible. For that clause speaks of persons having the providing for, ordering, management, control, or direction of the poor of any parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places. It therefore clearly extends to persons having the control of the poor in more parishes than one, and applies, as it seems to me, to the present case. The next objection is, that the character of the defendant is not properly described. He is described in the third count as a person in whose hands the providing for, ordering, management, control, and direction of the poor of the parish of Westhamprett was placed. How is that allegation sustained? It appears that under Gilbert's Act, (22 Geo. III. c. 83,) where more parishes than one are united, every guardian of the poor appointed under that act has, and is invested with, all the powers and authorities given to overseers of the poor by any act of parliament, and is, to all intents and purposes, except with regard to the making and collecting rates, an overseer of the poor for the parish for which he is appointed guardian. If then this defendant was lawfully appointed guardian of the poor of Westhamprett, he is a person in whose hands was placed the control of the poor of that parish for which he was so appointed guardian. The objection, therefore, that his character is improperly described, cannot prevail. The last objection is, that in the third count the supply is stated to have been for the support and maintenance of the poor of the said parish; whereas, by the proof, it appears to have been for their support and maintenance in the workhouse, and it is urged that as the 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, describes these as two distinct classes, the allegation should have strictly conformed to the proof. I am by no means satisfied that this objection, even if taken at nisi prius, could have prevailed. But I am clearly of opinion, that a mere formal objection of this sort, if not so taken, cannot be available afterwards. I think, therefore, that all the objections are insufficient." Bayley, J. "The 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, seems to have been intended as a general provision, and the legislature could not have meant that there should be one rule for parishes united under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and another in cases of parishes not so united. It may be true, that this case would have fallen under Gilbert's Act, previously to 55 Geo. III.; but the latter statute, when passed, contained a general provision, within which this case, if not excepted, would fall. I can see no reason for any such exception being made, and in the absence of any express exception, it seems to me that no exception can be implied from Gilbert's Act. I am also of opinion that a guardian appointed under 22 Geo. III. is clearly a person having the ordering, management, control and direction of the poor of the parish for which he is appointed, and that he falls under the provisions of the 55 Geo. III. The guardians have the power of recommending the master of the workhouse, and may make agreements with respect to the diet of the poor over which they are to exercise a strict control. It is the duty, therefore, of each of them to take care that wholesome food is supplied. Now all these objects will be defeated if the guardian, who is to inspect the conduct of the governor, supplies the workhouse with provisions. The case, therefore, is clearly within the mischief to be remedied. As to the objection that the declaration does not sufficiently describe the persons for whose care and support the goods were supplied, it seems to me that the allegation is substantially proved, for if a person supplies the poor of any parish, it is immaterial whether he supplies them in or out of the workhouse; and if he supplies a workhouse which contains the poor of the parishes A., B., C., and D., he does in fact supply the poor of each of these parishes." Holroyd, J. "I am of the same opinion. The 55 Geo. III. c. 137, is not confined to cases not falling under Gilbert's Act. The words seem intended to include cases like the present, and we ought to give them a liberal construction, so as to remedy the mischief contemplated. It is contended that inasmuch as this defendant was only guardian of the poor, he was not charged with the maintenance of the poor of this particular parish, and that the allegation to that effect in the declaration is not proved. It appears, in fact, that he had a control over the maintenance of the poor of the parish. And as to the description of his character in the declaration, it is sufficiently proved by the evidence; for in pleading it is not necessary that the allegation should be as extensive as the proof. Where a prescription is pleaded for a right of common for sheep, and the proof is of a right for all commonable cattle, it is sufficient; (a) and so here the allegation is, that he had the ordering and direction of the poor of one parish, and the proof is, that he had the ordering and direction of the poor of that parish and others. As to the third objection, I agree with my lord chief justice, that it not being taken at the trial, it cannot prevail now." Best, J., concurred.

A guardian of the poor appointed under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, is within the 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, notwithstanding the former act, s. 42, imposes a penalty for the supply of the provisions for the poor by such guardian.

any parish or place for which he shall be appointed such overseer, during the time which he shall retain such appointment; nor shall be concerned, directly or indirectly, in furnishing or supplying the same, or in any contract or contracts relating thereto, under the penalty of 100*l.*' Now if the overseer himself in this case had supplied all the provisions required for the support of the poor at prime cost, and not with a view to his own profit, it is quite clear that he would not have committed any offence within the words of this part of that act of parliament: that was laid down by Gibbs, C.J., in Pope v. Backhouse (ante, 401). Inasmuch, therefore, as an overseer, providing in his own name the poor of his parish with all the provisions and goods required for their support, would not be liable to any penalty, provided he made no profit, it cannot be supposed that the legislature intended that the same overseer who is concerned directly or indirectly in any contract for supplying any part of the provisions, however small, should be liable to a penalty, although he derived no profit from it; that would involve a manifest contradiction. I think, therefore, that the words, 'for his own profit,' must be taken to override the whole clause; and that the legislature intended that no overseer, for his own profit, either in his own name, or in that of any other person, should supply the poor with provisions, nor be concerned, directly or indirectly, in any contract relating to it." And the court refused to disturb the verdict found for the defendant.

1. Of Settlements in General. (a).

1. Settlements in general.

The Poor Law Amendment Act has made some alteration in the law of settlement: s. 6, prevents the acquisition of a settlement by hiring and service, or by office, after the passing of that act; and s. 65 prevents any

(a) As the Poor Laws, or at least those parts which relate to settlements, are administered chiefly by the magistracy of the kingdom, it may be convenient to repeat in this place the 16 Geo. II. c. 18, which enacts, s. 1, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for all and every justice or justices of the peace for any county, riding, city, liberty, franchise, borough, or town corporate within their respective jurisdictions, to make, do, and execute all and every act or acts, matter or matters, thing or things appertaining to their office as justice or justices of the peace, so far as the same relates to the laws for the relief, maintenance, and settlement of poor persons; for passing and punishing vagrants; for repair of the highways; or to any other laws concerning parochial taxes, levies, or rates; notwithstanding any such justice or justices of the peace is or are rated to or chargeable with the taxes, levies, or rates within any such parish, township, or place affected by any such act or acts of such justice or justices as aforesaid."

Sect. 2 enacts, "That no act or acts, matter or matters, thing or things, which hath or have been before the making this act done, made, or executed by any such justice or justices of the peace, shall hereafter be quashed or declared void, because the same hath or have been so made, done, or executed by any such justice or justices so rated or chargeable as aforesaid; any law, usage, or custom whatsoever to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sect. 3 provides, "That this act, or any thing therein contained, shall not authorise or empower any justice or justices of the peace for any county or riding settlement by hiring and service not completed at the passing of the act; s. 67 prevents all settlement by apprenticeship in the sea-service.

1. Settlements in general.

Definition of a settlement.

"By the term settlement is to be understood a permanent indestructible right to take the benefit of the poor laws in a particular parish or place which maintains its own poor."—Gambier on Par. Sett. 1.

"A settlement is the right acquired in any one of the modes pointed out by the poor laws to become a recipient of the benefit of those laws, in that parish or place, which provides for its own poor, where the right has been last acquired. It is not forfeitable, and may be communicated from person to person, notwithstanding an attainder, which works a forfeiture of most civil rights." (Rex v. St. Mary, Cardigan, post, 408 (a)). It may cease, or be destroyed for ever in the parish or place where it once existed, upon the acquisition of the same right, or any other new right, in any other such parish or place. It will be observed that, from the language of the Acts 13 & 14 Car. II, c. 12, and the other statute relating to the removal of paupers, a pauper is always to be removed to the parish where his last settlement was acquired; so that where a person may have successively acquired several different settlements he has no option, but must seek relief in the parish where he acquired his last settlement.

By the earliest statute on this subject (12 Rich. II. c. 7,) in which punishment was awarded against beggars able to serve, and provision made for impotent beggars, the poor were to repair, in order to be maintained, to the places where they were born. By 11 Hen. VII. c. 2, beggars not able to work were to resort to the hundred where they last dwelled, or were best known or were born; and by 19 Hen. VII. c. 12, to where born, or to where they had made their last abode by the space of three years. By 1 Ed. VI. c. 3, this was explained to be, where they had been most conversant by the space of three years. By 1 Jac. I. c. 7, they were to be sent to the place of their dwelling, if they had any; if not, to the place where they last dwelt by the space of one year; if that could not be known, then to the place of their birth. So that beggars not able to work were to be maintained where they were born, or where they had inhabited,—first, for any indeterminate time, next for three years, and lastly for one year. In Rex v. St. George, Exeter, 5 Nev. & Man. 66, 3 A. & E. 373, Denman, C.J., said, "At the time of passing 43 Eliz. c. 2, there was no law of settlement, nor could the children of paupers, if at a distance from their parents, be sent home by the parish officers."

Poor people going from one parish to another.

This last regulation as to the place where paupers were to be supported continued to the time of 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, by which, after reciting that "Whereas the number of poor within England and Wales is very great and burthensome; and whereas, by reason of some defects in the law, poor people are not restrained from going from one parish to another, and therefore do endeavour to settle themselves in those parishes where there is the best stock, the largest commons or wastes to build cottages, and the most wood for them to burn and destroy, and when they have consumed it, then to another parish, and at last become rogues and vagabonds, to the great discouragement of parishes to provide stocks where it is liable to be devoured by strangers:" it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful, upon complaint made by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish, to any justice of peace, within forty days after any such person or persons coming so to settle as aforesaid, in any tenement under the yearly value of ten pounds, for any two justices of the peace, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the division where any person or persons that are likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to at large, to act in the determination of any appeal to the quarter sessions for any such county or riding, from any order, matter, or thing relating to any such parish, township, or place, where such justice or justices of the peace is or are so charged, taxed, or chargeable as aforesaid; any thing herein contained to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding."

1. Settlements in general.

remove and convey such person or persons to such parish where he or they were last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice, or servant, for the space of forty days at the least, unless he or they give sufficient security for the discharge of the said parish, to be allowed by the said justices."

The forty days' residence.

By the above act any person might gain a settlement by residence of forty days in the parish. But by 1 Jac. II. c. 17, the forty days were to be reckoned from the delivery to the parish officers by the new comers of a notice of the place of abode and the number of the family; and by 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11, from the publication of such notice in the church. The object of this regulation was notoriety, in order that persons likely to be chargeable might be removed. But the latter act contemplated four cases in which no notice was to be given. First, when the person had served an annual office. Secondly, when he had paid parish rates. Thirdly, when he had been hired (and by 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, s. 4, served) for a year, being unmarried and having no children. And fourthly, persons bound apprentice by indenture. Notice however was never necessary when the tenement on which the person came to settle was of more than 10*l.* value by the year. The power of gaining a settlement by delivery and publication of such notice was altogether taken away by 35 Geo. III. c. 101.

Notice.

2. The Place in which a Settlement may be acquired.

In what place a settlement may be gained.

Wherever a district of known limits contributes to one common fund raised within it, and which is disbursed within it, for the relief of its own poor, this right may be acquired, whether such district be a parish, a township, or hamlet, even though the township or hamlet be extra-parochial, for overseers may be appointed to an extra-parochial township or village. (Rex v. Rafford, 1 Stra. 512.)

The above rule has at different times been modified in favour of parishes in which prisons, hospitals, and other public charitable institutions are situated. The provisions to this effect in local acts have given way to the following general enactment.

All enactments and provisions in respect of gaining settlements contained in local acts repealed.

By 54 Geo. III. c. 170, it is enacted, "That all enactments and provisions contained in any act or acts of parliament since the commencement of the reign of his late majesty, Geo. I., whereby an alteration is made in respect of gaining or not gaining a settlement within any particular district, parish, township, or hamlet, shall be, and the same are hereby repealed; and that all and every person shall be deemed and taken to have acquired and to acquire a settlement in every such district, parish, township, or hamlet, by any ways and means he, she, or they would or might have done, or would or might do, in case such act or acts, or any of them, had not been made and passed; and notwithstanding the same or any of them are or was in force and operation."

Persons born in prisons, or houses licensed for the reception of pregnant women, not to gain a settlement thereby.

Sect. 2 provides, "That no person shall be deemed or taken to acquire any settlement in any district, parish, township, or hamlet, by reason of such person being born of the body of any mother actually confined as a prisoner within the walls of any prison; or any house licensed for the reception of pregnant women, in pursuance of an act made and passed in the thirteenth year of his present Majesty's reign, for the better regulation of lying-in-hospitals, and other places appropriated for the charitable reception of pregnant women, in which any such prison or house shall be situated."

Provisions respecting settlements by reason of birth in any poorhouse or house of industry belonging to united parishes.

Sect. 3 provides, "That whensoever any person shall be born of the body of any poor person in any house of industry, or house for the reception and care of the poor of any district, parish, township, or hamlet which shall be locally situated in any district, parish, township, or hamlet, contributing to the expenses of maintaining the poor in such house, or in any other district, parish, township, or hamlet, not contributing to such expense, such person shall, so far as regards the settlement of such person, be deemed and taken to be born in the district, parish, township, or hamlet, by whom the mother of such person was sent to, and on whose account the mother of such person was received and maintained in, such house."

Sect. 4 provides and enacts, "That no person shall be deemed or taken to gain any settlement by reason of any residence within any district, parish, township, or hamlet, while he, she, or they shall be detained or confined as a prisoner within any such district, parish, township, or hamlet, on any civil process, or for any contempt whatsoever."

2. The Place in which a Settlement may be acquired.

Prisoners for debt or contempt not to gain settlements while in custody.

Sect. 5 provides and enacts, "That no gate-keeper or toll-keeper of any turnpike-road or navigation, or person renting the tolls and residing in any toll-house of any turnpike-road or navigation, shall thereby gain any settlement in any district, parish, township, or hamlet." (The general turnpike act, 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 51, is to the like effect.)

No gate-keeper or person residing in any toll-house to gain a settlement thereby.

Sect. 6 provides and enacts, "That no person or persons shall gain any settlement in any district, parish, township, or hamlet, by reason of any residence in any house or other dwelling-place provided for the residence of such person or persons by any charitable institution, while such person or persons shall be supported and maintained at the expense of such charitable institution as an object or objects of such charity."

No person maintained in any charitable institution to gain any settlement by residence therein.

And by 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 11, it is enacted, that every house and building which shall be purchased or hired under the authority of that act, shall, in all questions relative to the settlement of persons born or lodged therein, be deemed and taken to be part of the parish, on behalf of which the same shall be purchased or hired, and by which the same shall be used as a poorhouse or workhouse.

Building hired under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, taken to be in the parish, &c., hiring, in questions of settlement.

By 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 42, which enables the parish officers to provide land for the employment of the poor, and inclose waste lands for cultivation, it is provided by the fifth section, that no poor inhabitant of the parish, to whom land shall be let which shall have been hired or inclosed under that act, shall gain a settlement by renting, or occupying or paying parochial taxes for such land, either alone or with any other land or tenement.

Similar power is given by the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 59, for inclosing land belonging to the Crown; and that act contains the same restriction as to gaining settlements.

By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 48, the Forest of Dean is divided into two townships, each to maintain its own poor.

Forest of Dean divided into two townships.

Reg. v. Hunnington, 13 L. J. 24. Previous to 1834, the parish of Halesowen consisted of the township of Halesowen, and the township of Oldbury, and other townships. Only one set of overseers was appointed for the whole parish, who made a joint poor-rate for such parish, which rate formed a common fund for parochial purposes. In 1834, under the authority of a mandamus, (see Reg. v. Salop, ante, p. 18), separate overseers were appointed for the township of Halesowen, which from that time maintained its own poor separately. No settlement can be gained in Halesowen as a distinct township prior to 1834, and a pauper, whose husband's father was hired and served for a year in that township in 1790, is not removable to such township.

Halesowen not a township for the purpose of settlement till 1834.

By the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 33, (see Appendix), the guardians of the parishes forming any union are empowered to agree that, for the purpose of settlement, such parishes shall be considered as one parish.

Union of parishes for purpose of settlement.

As to the place in which a settlement may be acquired, see further title "Place to which an order of removal may be made."

3. Of the Persons who may acquire a Settlement.

A settlement attaches to those persons only, concerning whom those circumstances may be affirmed, which acts of parliament say shall give a settlement. It is not universally true that every person in this country must have a settlement to which he may be removed, for bastard children born in an extra-parochial place which is not a vill have no settlement, nor foreigners who come into this country. (Rex v. St. Nicholas, Leicester, p. 411.) Such persons are denominated casual poor, and must be provided for in the parish where they happen to be. See Casual Poor, ante, 111.

It is not every person who has a settlement.

Although a foreigner has not necessarily a settlement in this country, he may acquire one in some of the modes by which natural-born subjects obtain Foreigners.

this privilege; thus, the wife of a foreigner was removed to Eastbourne (the place of her maiden settlement) from Seaford, where he had for two years before, and at the time of the removal, resided, and rented a house of above the value of 10*l.*, exercising the trade of a baker. The husband acquiesced in the removal, and accompanied them to Eastbourne. The sessions confirmed the order of removal, and the question was, whether a foreigner can gain a settlement in this country? St. Giles's v. St. Margaret's was cited, and it was urged that the 13 & 14 Car. II. referred only to the poor of this kingdom, i. e. England and Wales. Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This man was not an alien enemy, but a German by birth, an alien amy. And as such, though he may not take a lease (a) of a dwelling-house or shop, by reason of the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 16, yet he may occupy a tenement of 10*l.* a-year, and carry on his trade there like any other person. Then if he may do so, he has that interest which enables him to gain a settlement by the provision of the legislature: the law of humanity obliges us to afford relief to poor foreigners, to save them from starving." Lawrence, J., in answer to the observation, that the statute of Car. II. did not extend to any but the poor of England and Wales, said, that, "without dispute, Scotchmen and Irishmen may gain settlements here." Both orders quashed. (Rex v. Eastbourne, 4 East, 103.)

A foreigner may gain a settlement by occupying a tenement of 10*l.* for a year.

A foreigner does not gain a settlement by mere residence of 40 days in a parish.

St. Giles v. St. Margaret's, 1 Sess. Ca. 97. An Englishwoman was married to a foreigner who had no settlement in England: the husband continued for the space of forty days in a parish irremovable, for that there was no place to which he could be removed; and it was urged that the wife continuing with him as part of his family for forty days, in a place whence he hath not a right to be removed, gains a settlement. But Lord Holt, C. J., thought "That where a person stays forty days in a place whence he hath a right not to be removed, that gains a settlement; otherwise, where he only stays in a place because they do not know whither to remove him."

Same point.

Ellinor Conred's Case, Comb. 287; 2 Bott, 17. She and her two children landed at Harwich from Holland, and removing to another place, were sent back to Harwich by order of two justices. Darnel, Serj. "Landing makes no settlement." Sir Barth. Shower. "'Tis within the equity of the act." Eyres, J. (absente Holt), "You must keep them where you have them for aught I know; it seems to me to be casus omissus." The order was quashed.

Married women (b) can acquire no settlement.

Married women, during their coverture, cannot by any act of their own acquire a settlement. What is their proper settlement will be considered in another place.

There never was an instance where a wife was held to acquire a settlement during the life of her husband." Lord Hardwicke, in Berkhampstead v. St. Mary, North Church, 2 Bott, 51. "Nor can she, by residence of her husband on an estate devised to her, acquire a settlement either for her husband or her children. If she only be irremovable (R. v. Oakley, post), and if her husband resides with her, he will acquire a settlement; and thereby, indirectly, she will acquire one.

Infants.

Infants cannot be removed from the parish in which they have a freehold (Rex v. Hasfield, Burr. S. C. 147; 2 Bott, 613); but no case has decided, though it has been intimated in some, that a settlement could not be gained under such circumstances. (Ib.) A child under seven years of age, removed with a parent for nurture, will gain no settlement. Rex v. Cummew, 2 Bott, 36.)

Attainted persons.

Persons attainted may communicate their settlement to children born after the attainder (Rex v. St. Mary, Cardigan, 6 T. R. 116, post); and in Rex v. Haddenham (15 East, 463, post), an attainted felon, who had been discharged upon the sign-manual, but never received a formal pardon, acquired a settlement by the purchase of an estate.

(a) This section applies only to leases of dwelling-houses or shops granted to stranger artificers or handicraftsmen. A vintner is not within the statute, 3 Mod. 94; 1 Saunders, 3.

(b) A feme coverte, who is the guardian in socage of the children by a former husband, may be irremovable from their estate. See, post, Rex v. Oakley.

In some former editions of this work it has been said that a deserter can gain no settlement, and Rex v. Norton (9 East, 206) is cited as an authority. But that case determined only that he could not gain a settlement by hiring and service, on account of the superior claim to his service by the country. But suppose a deserter and before the recent Act executed an annual office, or rented a tenement openly, and boná fide, he could have acquired a settlement.

2. The Place in which a Settlement may be acquired.

Deserters.

In Rex v. Ashton-under-Lyne, 4 M. & Sel. 357, the wife took the premises, and the husband never entered into the contract. (Rex v. Brightelmstone, 1 B. & A. 270; Rex v. Beaulieu, post.) A soldier may, during his service in the army, gain a settlement by renting a tenement, although he could not by hiring and service; and, on that ground chiefly, it was decided that he gained no settlement. It is no objection that his estate was defeasible. (Rex v. Haddenham, 15 East, 460.)

II. Of Settlement by Birth.

II. Of Settlement by Birth.

1. Of a Legitimate Child.
2. Of a Bastard.
   1. In general.
   2. How Settlement of Bastard affected by a Certificate.
   3. When Removable from Mother.
3. Evidence of a Settlement by Birth.

1. Of a Legitimate Child.

1. Of a legitimate Child.

The settlement of a legitimate child is that of the father, or of the mother; but until one of these is ascertained, the place of birth is, primâ facie, the place of settlement.

Legitimate children take the settlement of their father; if the father has no settlement, they are entitled to the settlement of their mother; and it is only when both these sources fail, that their right accrues to a settlement in the place in which they were born. But until the settlement of the father or of the mother has been ascertained, the settlement of a legitimate child, like that of a bastard, is primâ facie in the parish where the birth took place; and if that cannot be ascertained, then the child is not removable from the place where it was found, and must be relieved there as a casual pauper.

A child was removed to the place of its birth, neither father nor mother having a settlement; and on appeal the sessions were of opinion that birth gains no settlement, but only in case of bastardy. Per Curiam (absente Holt, C. J.) "Birth makes a good settlement, and the labour lies on them where it was born to find another." The order made on appeal was quashed. (Spitalfields and St. Andrew's, Holborn, Fort. 307; Rex v. St. Mary, Leicestershire, 5 Nev. & Mann. 215.)

Cripplegate v. St. Saviour's, 2 Bott, 27. A child of three years of age was removed from one of these parishes to the other; and it appeared in the order that they removed him there because he was born there, not having any other settlement. By the Court: "The father's settlement is the settlement of the children, when it can be found out; otherwise, the birth of the child primâ facie is the settlement of the child, until there is another settlement found out."

Place of birth.

The place of birth is primâ facie the place of settlement (Rex v. Heaton, 6 T. R. 653); even if the pauper is a widow or a married woman. (See Rex v. Ryton, post.) But per Bayley, J. "I cannot concur in the argument, that the mere fact of a pauper being first found in a particular parish is presumptive evidence of his having been born there; and if the cases that have been referred to go that length, I, for one, must be allowed to doubt their authority." (Rex v. Trowbridge 1 M. & R. 12; 7 B. & C. 252.) And in many cases, proof of the place of birth will afford but slight evidence of settlement, though of course it may be acted upon if no proof tending to fix the settlement elsewhere be offered. (See Rex v. Wakefield, 5 East, 335.)

Proof thereof.

1. Of a Legitimate Child.

In Clavely v. Burton, 2 Bulst. 351, it was holden by the judges, that if the mother of a child born in one parish die in another parish, while passing to a third, such child shall be settled where it was born, and not in the parish where it was left destitute by the death of the mother.

Whitechapel v. Stepney, Carth. 433 ; 2 Bott, 24. It was holden that a legitimate child, where its parent is a vagabond, gains a settlement by birth ; but where the settlement of the parent of a legitimate child is known, such child must follow the settlement of the parent.

The place of birth of a legitimate child, as a vagrant, is its settlement, until another be found.

A travelling woman, having a nurse child, was apprehended for felony, and sent to gaol, and was hanged ; this child is to be sent to the place of its birth, if it can be known, otherwise it must be sent to the town where the mother was apprehended, because that town ought not to have sent the child to gaol, being the malefactor. (Dalt. c. 73, p. 168.)

First known place of abode.

And where a child is first known to be, that parish must provide for it till they find another. (Comb. 364, 372.)

Children born in England, but of Irish or Scotch parents, may be sent to Ireland and Scotland. (See Rex v. Great Clacton, p. 126 ; Rex v. Whitehaven. p. 126.

Foundlings maintained in hospitals.

By 13 Geo. II. c. 29, for confirming and enlarging the powers conferred by charter upon the governors and guardians of the hospital for the maintenance and education of exposed and deserted young children, it is provided by s. 7, that no child, nurse, or servant, received or employed in such hospital shall, by virtue thereof, gain any settlement in the parish where such hospital shall be situate. The settlement of foundlings, therefore, is left to be determined by the same rule as prevails in all other cases wherein those particulars as to their birth and parentage can be ascertained, which determine the settlement of the child in such other cases. According, however, to the popular notion of a foundling, these facts are not made known, nor are they easy to be discovered. But it is to be inferred that the institution to which the above statute relates, is not limited to the reception of children whose destitution is of that aggravated description. It involves no absurdity, therefore, to say that foundlings, if they are legitimate children, follow their father's settlement, if it is known ; if not, they take their mother's ; and if neither of these be known, or they are bastards, their settlement will be in the place of their birth. But if that also cannot be discovered, they must be provided for in the place in which they may happen to be, as casual poor. The effect of an admission upon this charitable establishment, is only to take those children from the parish where they must otherwise have been supported, and to give them the benefit of the provisions of the hospital. See 54 Geo. III. c. 170, ss. 2 and 3, ante, 406, as to children born in workhouses. According to the case of R. v. St. Peter and St. Paul, ante, p. 56, n, persons born in gaols and workhouses before that statute acquired no settlement in such places.

Persons in workhouses, &c.

2. Of a Bastard.

2. Of a Bastard.

1. By Birth of a Bastard in general.

An illegitimate child could not derive a settlement from either of its parents, and generally speaking was settled in the place where it was born. But by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 71, it was enacted, "That every child born a bastard after the passing of that act, shall have and follow the settlement of the mother of such child until such child shall attain the age of sixteen, or shall acquire a settlement in its own right ; and such mother, so long as she shall be unmarried or a widow, shall be bound to maintain such child as a part of her family until such child shall attain the age of sixteen ; and all relief granted to such child while under the age of sixteen shall be considered as granted to such mother : provided always, that such liability of such mother as aforesaid shall cease on the marriage of such child, if a female." See Reg. v. St. Mary Newington, post, 433.

Illegitimate child follows the mother's settlement till the age of sixteen.

Liability of second husband.

If the mother of the bastard afterwards marry, then, under the 57th section, her husband is bound to maintain such child till the age of sixteen or the death of the mother; and the liability of the putative father is suspended whilst the husband is of ability to maintain the child. Lang v. Spicer, 1 Tyr. & Gr. 58; 3 Crom., M. & Ros. 129.

1. By Birth of a Bastard in general.

The place of birth in general.

A settlement by birth seems to be founded on the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, by which justices are directed to remove any poor person come to inhabit and likely to become chargeable to the parish where he or she was last legally settled, either as a native, householder, &c., for the space of forty days at the least, and therefore it would seem that a residence of forty days is essential to the acquisition of a birth settlement. But there is no decision to this effect, and the tacit convention of parishes not to insist upon it would most probably induce the Court of King's Bench to overrule such an objection, if it were now attempted to be set up. (See 1 Nol. P. L. 288, n. (1).)

And this is so, whether the parent be a housekeeper or a lodger merely. (Rex v. Spitalfields, 1 Lord Raym. 567.) In Whitechapel v. Stepney (Carth. 433), it is said that a bastard gains a settlement in its place of birth ex necessitate, for being nullius filius, it cannot otherwise be provided for, except a reputed father can be found. But this proposition is laid down rather too largely, because if the birth happen in an extra-parochial place, which does not maintain its poor, no settlement is gained, and such child can only be relieved as casual poor till it acquires a settlement in some other way, as appears by

A bastard child, born in an extra-parochial place, which is not a vill, has no settlement.

Rex v. St. Nicholas, Leicester, 2 B. & C. 889; 4 D. & R. 462. Caroline Littlewood was removed from All Saints, in Derby, to Saint Nicholas, in Leicester. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was the illegitimate child of Elizabeth Littlewood, deceased, and was born in May, 1822, in an extra-parochial place, called the Black Friars, in Leicester, which is not a vill, and for which no overseers have ever been appointed. She was shortly afterwards taken by her mother to All Saints, Derby, where she remained until the death of her mother, and up to the time of this order of removal. The mother was settled in St. Nicholas, Leicester, at the time of the pauper's birth and of her own death. Bayley, J. "The argument in support of the order of sessions is founded upon the assumption that every person is by law entitled to a settlement in some place; but that is by no means the case, for foreigners have not any settlement in this country. A settlement attaches to those persons only concerning whom those circumstances may be affirmed, which acts of parliament say shall give a settlement. Generally speaking, an illegitimate child is settled in the parish where it is born. There are some exceptions to this general rule, noticed in the treatises on the poor laws. In most of the excepted cases, the mother, at the time of the birth, is in law supposed to be in the place of her settlement, where she ought to be: as where a woman with child is removed out of one parish into another, through the fraud or collusion of its officers, or where the child is born pending an order of removal. In one of these cases the child, when born, is settled in the parish from which the mother has been fraudulently removed; in the other, in the parish to which she is ordered to be removed. In this case, the child was born in an extra-parochial place. It therefore has not any settlement by birth, and, being a bastard, it can derive none from its parent. In such cases, however, it is entitled to remain with its mother as long as the purposes of nurture require it, and it will afterwards be entitled to relief as casual poor, although it has not any settlement. We are all of opinion that the order of sessions must be quashed."

Bastard born in a place by collusion.

If a woman come into a place by privity and collusion of the officers where she belongs, and be there delivered of a bastard, such bastard gains no settlement there, notwithstanding its birth. (Sett. & Rem. 66.)

The collusion must be by the parish officers. Where the occupier of land and putative father caused a pregnant woman to remove out of the parish during her confinement to an extra-parochial place, the child will not be settled in the parish from whence she removed.

Case:—Elizabeth Otter, the mother of the pauper, lived with William Green, in Mattersey, for eight years, during which time she was delivered of two illegitimate children, of whom William Green was the putative father.
